Dear Sirs—I now am able to say, after having purchased one of your No. 4 Electric Belts, with Spinal Appliance, about one year ago, that I thank God I have found relief from my terrible suffering through the wonderful healing influence of your wonderful Body Belt. August 29, 1891, at which time I was a great sufferer, and had been for more than four years, from extreme nervous prostration, so much so that, on the least excitement, my whole nervous system would be all of a tremble from head to foot, and unable to control myself in the least, and would affect me to tears like a little child. I am a farmer by profession; in the fields, or at work on the farm, or at any excitement, it had the same effect. I could not lift the weight of five pounds. It so continued with increased suffering until I was unable to help myself, and for eight long months my suffering was intense. My stomach was so weak that I could not take any food but crackers and warm water for the above time. My kidneys were so weak that I could not retain my urine; it would pass from me continually, and I was under the necessity of leaving my couch from six to eight times of a night to void my urine, which was very painful. I was also troubled with severe constipation and piles, so that I was obliged to use injections to produce evacuations of the bowels. It was very distressing, so much so that I had to be lifted in and out of my bed for several months. The doctors could do me no good whatever, and I had made up my mind that there was no help for me this side of the grave. My limbs would become numb and cold, seemingly as ice, and I would try with hot bricks, rubbing and all other methods to restore the circulation and natural feeling, but all to no effect, and then it would come off. Then again another attack would occur which would leave me helpless, and so continued periodically, and I could get no relief. The doctors told me that I must not do any work, and that it would be three years at least before I would be able to work. I agreed with them, for I could not, nor did I ever expect to again. The whole world seemed to me a blank, and my vital forces all had left me, and my life was fast ebbing away from me through the loss of my life fluids, which doctors were unable even to check. I had given up all hope of ever getting help, and death in all its terrible forms stared me in the face, from which there seemed to be no avenue of escape from this living horror, of which no living person is able to know or feel, except his sufferings be as mine have been. In this state of suffering and agony I continued until about one year ago now. I met a friend who, on seeing my helpless condition, advised me to try one of the Owen Electric Belts. For several weeks I doubted his statements about what he told me of the wonderful healing properties of it, but he was so earnest and persistent that I finally consented to send for one. He advised me to send for a No. 4, with spinal appliance, which I did, at a cost of $30.00, which is your price for No. 4 and spinal appliance. I will say here that it is the best $30.00 investment that I ever made in my life in the way of doctor's remedies or anything else, as I had spent dollars, up into the hundreds, but could get no relief whatever. As soon as I received the Belt and Appliance, I had it charged and adjusted and put it on, and in a short time after putting it on I began to feel wonderful soothing and gentle currents of its healing power passing all through me, clear to the end of my toes and fingers, a prickling sensation like thousands of needles. Many were the sleepless nights I had passed, unable to sleep but from one to two hours through the whole night for months. On the third night after wearing the Belt I slept until morning and awoke greatly refreshed. I was not disturbed, nor had I to void my urine once through the night, and I have not been bothered in that way since. All the drains upon the system have ceased, and constipation and piles all have left me as if by magic. My nerves have regained their former strength, my eyesight and mind have become clear, and I have gained in weight about 15 pounds, and I feel like a new man. My stomach has got back its power of digestion, and I can eat almost any kind of food that my appetite craves without pain or distress. I am gaining daily and I feel better and weigh more than I have for the past ten years, and it seems I have a new lease of life. I cannot say enough in favor of your wonderful Electric Body Belt. It is far superior to all medicines compounded for the relief and cure of chronic and complicated diseases and broken down constitutions. I would not take $2,000 for my Belt if I could not get another like it. There is nothing like it for relief and cure where all other remedies fail. I can not praise your Belt enough, for what it has done for me words can not express. I will say here that I recommend the Owen Electric Belt to all suffering humanity who fail to find relief from other remedies. It is the messenger of quick relief and certain cure of all nervous debility and other nerve troubles. I know it will cure all diseases which you advertise it to cure.

This you may publish to let suffering humanity know there is relief and cure to be found in your wonderful Belt and Appliances.

Notice of Hearing of Ditch Petition.

In the matter of the petition of William Knight and others of Concord township notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed with the Auditor of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and viewers have been appointed who have viewed and reported said view which is on file in my office. The hearing of said petition upon its merits will be on Tuesday the 5th day of June, 1894, the same being the 2d day of the June term, 1894, of the Commissioners court of said county.

The prayer of said petition is that a ditch be constructed on the following route to-wit:

Beginning 1,390 feet north and 100 feet west of the southeast corner of the west half of the southeast quarter of section 8, Concord Township, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and from thence in a general easterly and southeasterly course along and in the natural channel of Bear Creek, deepening, widening, straightening and otherwise improving said natural channel through said section 8 and sections 9, 16 and 15 to the south west corner of the east-half of the northeast quarter of said section 15, thence in a southerly and southwesterly course along and in the said natural channel of Bear Creek through said sections 15 and 22 to the St. Joe River and there to end; said ending being 900 feet west and 200 feet south of the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of said section 15, all in Concord Township, DeKalb County, State of Indiana.

And also the following lateral commencing at the junction of the Saylor and Koch ditches, in section 9 of said Concord Township, said point being 40 rods north and 30 rods east of the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of said section 9 aforesaid, thence in a general southwesterly and southerly direction through and in said sections 9 and 8 to the main ditch at a point 25 feet below stake 8, of said main ditch, and thereto end.

This proposed work will affect the lands of the following persons:

Union Township Caucus.

The democrats of Union township met at 2 p. m. on Saturday May 19, 1894 at the court room. There was a good attendance. The house was called to order by F. R. Dills one of the committeemen, Hon. D. D. Moody was made chairman, and made a very effective speech, counseling harmony and fairness. On motion of M. Boland, seconded by J. A. Barns, D. Y. Husselman was made secretary. On motion of C. C. Walter, delegates to the state convention were selected first. Boland named C. M. Merica and R Sawvel. Phil. Myers and C. C Walter were also announced. Merica and Walters declined, and Boland asked to have Myers and Sawvel nominated by acclamation. This was done. Husselman, offered a motion seconded by L. J. Miller that in selecting county delegates, each of two new candidates from Union township, Borst and Lanning, be allowed to select one delegate from each of the four precincts, and that these eight men go together and select the 46 delegates for the township. After some discussion, this was agreed to. Later on Borst selected for his side, Ed. Freygang, F. R. Dills, M. Boland, C. C. Walfer.

And Lanning chose. A. Blodgett, C. A. Picker, Jacob Wagner, Joseph Link.

Nusbaum made a motion that we select congressional delegates before these men retire to make up Union township's delegation. Dr. Nusbaum was nominated for congressional delegate, by John Picker; S. D, Hanna was named by John Robbins; James L. Ferguson, was named by Boland; John Robbins was named by T. P. Scott, T. G. Matheny was named by Ira Brandon. Boland made a motion that the chair appoint two tellers, and that when the vote was taken, those receiving the highest vote be the delegates, Boland here stated that one should be from the country and one from the town, and John Picker moved that as only one name from the country had been put in nomination, that Ferguson be declared the country delegate. This motion was sprung two or three times, and was finally carried, no one else from the country being put in nomination against him. Boland then made a motion seconded by Postmaster Brandon, that in voting for the one delegate in town, the one of the four who received the highest number of votes should be declared the town delegate. This trick was discovered at once, and Matheny was withdrawn and soon after, Mr. Hanna declined to run. The vote resulted John Robbins 54 and Dr. Nusbaum 87. The committee to select the 46 delegates, soon after reported. Many voters having complained that this was not a democratic way to select delegates, the protest took a definite form, and when the names were read, John Robbins moved that the report be rejected. The chair put this motion, and there seemed to be a strong sentiment for it. But believing the matter was not understood it was informally discussed and explained, and a rising vote taken, but the result not being very plain, another rising vote was had, Robbins and Boland were appointed to count. In favor of the motion Robbins made it 34; Boland 22. The chair decided they must get nearer together than that. It came out that Boland, had not counted those standing around the sides of the room, so, as these said they were voting, they were counted. The negative was taken, and the vote stood 34 for and 50 against, a large number not voting. So the motion by Boland to accept the 46 names as delegates to the county convention was carried, Boland also asked that these delegates be instructed to vote for Ralston for sheriff and VanAuken for surveyor unanimously. Of course this prevailed, as there would be no other candidates. Caucus adjourned.

Caucus Notes.

It is to be regretted that the half dozen or less who assume to run the democracy of this county, could not permit the caucus to go by without lugging the congressional quarrel into it. If they are excited over the fact that McNagny has alienated the affections of a large number of democrats all over the district, they need not therefore feel obliged to bring dissensions into the councils of the party. But so it was. They had been actively drumming up a following strong enough to elect delegates to the congressional convention, while the other faction paid no attention to it, and had no idea of allowing it to come up. So it was an easy thing for Dr. Nusbaum to secure the coveted place. For our own part, we had carefully avoided a discussion of the matter of congressional delegates, believing we had enough to do on other lines, and preferring to give sole attention to the county nominations. Had it not been for these reasons a fair struggle would have been had, both in print and otherwise. But we left that out and are willing to leave it to take care of itself. That 54 voters supported Robbins without an effort to drum them up and without knowing there would be a contest of this kind till Robbins was announced, shows something of the condition of sentiment here. It might also be noted that of the 464 democratic voters in this township, 87 is a very small percentage. As for the unanimous vote for Ferguson, that proves nothing, as no one was opposing him. We do not believe he will lend himself to these schemes when he stops to consider the duty he owes to an untrammeled democracy. From another view this unseemly struggle should have been avoided. No one is running against him and there will probably be no one else to vote for in the convention, though we honestly believe the sentiment over the district is such that he can never be elected.

Knows a Good Thing.

There is nothing I have ever used for muscular rheumatism that gives me as much relief as Chamberlain's Pain Balm does. I have been using it for about two years—four bottles in all—as occasion required, and always keep a bottle of it in my home. I believe I know a good thing when I get hold of it, and Pain Balm is the best liniment I have ever met with. W. B. Denny dairyman New Lexington, Ohio. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Highly Recommended.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

For Lame Back.

The most painful cases of rheumatism may be relieved by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; its continued use will cure any case, no matter of how long standing. It is equally beneficial for lame back, pain in the side, pain in the chest, lameness, and in all painful affections requiring an external remedy. A piece of flannel saturated with Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain is superior to any plaster. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark, a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of a severe cough. After using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors. Yours, Amos Clark. Sold by all druggists.

Every Lady and Gent

ONE GIRL'S FUNERAL.

It Was In the Early Days of Montana and Was Different From Most Funerals.

During the construction days of the Northern Pacific railroad many small towns were born that flourished until the road was completed and then died. The little story following actually occurred and made an impression on me that I shall never forget. To me there was a tinge of sadness that went straight to the heart. I occupied the exalted position of justice of the peace. Now, a justice of the peace in Montana in early days was a bigger man than the chief justice of the United States is today and had a perpetual variety entertainment. He married people, buried the dead, put out fires, took a drink with everybody, refereed dog fights, settled family rows, preached, made speeches and had to be ready for any kind of work. For this aggregation of duties he was called judge, but if he rendered a wrong decision his name was Dennis.

One cold morning I was waited upon by a delegation of gamblers and informed that one of the girls was dead. They said she had passed in her checks during the night, and as she was the slickest girl in the camp she was to have a 24 carat sendoff and no mistake. I went around to see the body to find out, if possible, the cause of her death. I was satisfied that the girl had taken morphine and died from the effects, and so I rendered my decision, which satisfied all. I set the hour for the funeral and returned to the cabin to prepare my remarks. There was not a Bible in the camp, and so I had to play it alone. It was a cold, stormy Montana winter day, and that added much to the sadness of the occasion. The grave was dug out among the pines, and a more God forsaken place it would have been hard to find, but it was the best we had or could get.

The hour arrived; the procession formed, myself in front of the pallbearers, consisting of gamblers, with the body in a rough pine box. Next came the girls of the town and the business men in the rear. We wended our way slowly to the last resting place, where, alone and unknown, amid the rocks and pines, with the awful stillness of the mountains, all that was earthly of that unfortunate girl would stay until the last day.

No one could pray; no one could sing. I poured out my soul to my God in my poor, stumbling way—told him all about it. We were unanimous in the belief that she was more sinned against than sinning, and would he in his infinite goodness and loving kindness forgive her, wipe out all the black spots on her soul, forget her past and save her for her soul's sake? Would he suspend all rules, throw open wide the portals of heaven, have sweetest music played on a thousand golden harps and bid that poor, tired, sin stained soul enter the realms of happiness, purity and rest?

It was our funeral, because everybody did all they could. There were but few of all kinds, to be sure, but humans with souls to save. There are many of the old boys scattered through the northwest who will recollect that stormy Montana day, and how we knocked at eternity's door for admittance for that girl's soul, and all will agree that our knocking was not in vain—that the gates were thrown open and forgiveness and rest came to her.—Orting Oracle.

A Lost Fisherman's Story.

"I had been fishing for trout one day in a North Carolina mountain stream," said a sportsman, "and was entirely unsuccessful. Upon trying to reach camp I became lost and took refuge for the night in a small cave near Grandfather mountain. The cave was dry and comfortable, and making a pillow of my coat I soon fell asleep. The next morning I was awakened by something pulling at the coat, and opening my eyes saw that it was a cub bear.

"A few feet distant was a large bear sitting on its haunches and another cub playing around her. I had no weapon of any kind and was completely at the mercy of the animal, but she was not in the humor to dispose of me just then. She sat watching the cub as it pulled at my coat, and I was careful to make no motions that might be considered as hostile. For two or three hours we looked at each other, and then the mother bear ambled off with her two cubs, and I beat a hasty retreat."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Pleasant Man to Interview.

Professor Felix Adler, the founder of the Ethical Culture society, is a most pleasant gentleman to interview. He says that he has found the newspaper man to be honorable in the highest degree, and that he has never found it necessary to indicate what part of his conversation is intended for publication and what part is to be considered as purely personal. This of course means that Professor Adler does not limit himself in an interview to the matter directly in hand. He is not unwilling to speak of things that are entirely too personal for publication and will give an elaborate discourse on metaphysics to his interviewer and not express the least shade of doubt as to its being correctly put down.—Chicago Post.

Blindness Not Necessary.

Simkins was speaking about his visit to the blind asylum, and he wound up by saying what fun it would be to have some of the blind men as fellow boarders. "It would be rich," he said, "to put a cup of hot water before them and to see them gravely drink it, supposing it tea or coffee." "Awfully funny," said Mrs. Simkins. Then she thought and abruptly concluded by remarking, "Mr. Simkins, you're a fool."—Pick Me Up.

The Earth's Girdle.

The most widely separated points between which a telegram can be sent are British Columbia and New Zealand. The telegram would cross North America, Newfoundland, the Atlantic, England, Germany, Russia (European and Asiatic), China, Japan, Java and Australia. It would make nearly a circuit of the globe and would traverse over 20,000 miles in doing so.—Boston Globe.

An Ingenious Clock.

A clock of ingenious mechanism has been completed by C. E. Shearer of Schuylerville, N. Y., after two years' work. The case represents an arsenal. It is 3 feet 6 inches high, has several balconies and piazzas and a tower in which is a bell. On either side of the entrance door is a miniature brass cannon mounted on trucks. The works are automatically musical, playing a different tune every half hour. Each time the music plays a trumpeter on horseback rides out of the lower front door and remains until it ceases. Then he re-enters, and the bell in the tower ring.

WATERLOO.

Phil Plum is in the grocery business now and we are told is doing well.

Our attorneys, Leas, Shuman, Blair and Phillips are all over at court now days and seem to be busy.

Uncle John Leas is in poor health though able to be about. We hope to see him improve with better weather

The school contest Monday evening was very interesting, as were also the commencement exercises of Tuesday evening.

Solomon Fisher has been in poor health since his last wrestle with the grip, but is out around now in pretty good shape.

Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson has an abundance of fine young begonia and similar flower plants for sale. Call on them at the green house.

The U. B. meeting of Foreign Missions was held here yesterday with a large attendance and much interest. Mr. Speer was pretty busy Tuesday afternoon receiving and providing places for the delegates.

Marshal Fisher has collared his little tax book and is calling on those who owe corporation taxes. He has made the town a splendid officer and we are pleased to see that he had an increased majority at the recent election.

Mrs Winslow is in charge of her store, the original drug store on the corner, having been conducting the business for some time. The COURIER reporter called on her this week and found the store and all its appointments in the neatest possible order.

The iron for the new bridge has arrived, but is not unloaded yet. The abutments are completed and ready to receive the bridge. People are now fording the stream at that point. It is easy enough when the water is low, but just now it is pretty deep wading. Some of our people were at work Tuesday afternoon in the rain making a foot bridge by floating some of the longer timbers of the old bridge. The new abutments are the finest in the county and the bridge is expected to be done in about two weeks.

BUTLER.

M F. Campbell was up from Ft. Wayne over last Sabbath.

Our town board has fixed the salary of the marshal at $600 per annum.

Frank Conkle, living on the Moody farm, had a cow killed by lightning recently.

Rev. John B. Hawkins, of Grand Rapids, O., assisted Rev. Cain during his recent communion service.

The commencement exercises of the different classes of our schools have been very entertaining and have been attended by large numbers.

Much fear was felt last Friday and Saturday lest the cold wave, which reached 30°, would result in a hard frost, but the dense cloudy weather allayed the danger.

An effort was made on last Sabbath to charter a train on the Wabash to visit the scene of the Kunkle cyclone, but the bad rainy weather of the day prevented its being accomplished.

Hopkins' tile works narrowly escaped being wiped out by fire last week. Considerable damage was done before the flames were subdued. One of the kilns is said to have collapsed.

A very severe wind storm passed over the country a few miles north of Butler last Thursday night, uprooting fruit and forest trees, levelling fences and doing some damage to buildings.

Mrs. M. V. Hootman had a narrow escape from living cremation last Saturday. She was cleaning some gloves with gasolene, when it ignited, giving her and Mr. Ed. Smurr, who happened to be present, a lively time extinguishing the flames.

Rev. Hudson, presiding elder of the Goshen district M. E. church, preached to a large and appreciative audience at the M. E. church last Saturday night Rev. Cain of the same church, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of '94 of the Butler schools at his church last Sunday.

It May Do as Much for You.

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill., writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. He tried many so called kidney cures but without any good result About a year ago he began the use of Electric Bitters and found relief at once. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Price only 50 cents for large bottles at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 6

Luxury in Travel.

The North-Western Line, embracing nearly 8,000 miles of standard railway, has long been known as one of the most progressive railways in the west, and it certainy merits this distinction, as we can testify from an extended trip recently made over a major portion of its lines. One of the handsomest trains we have ever traveled in (and nobody could wish for finer service) is the "North-Western Limited," leaving Chicago at 6:30 P. M. daily for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. It is vestibuled throughout and lighted with gas, and has justly described as the most complete and elegant train in the west, the Hon. T. B. Bryan, vice-president of the World's Fair Commission referring to it as "the finest on wheels." One has but to glance at the rich upholstering, tapestry, ornaments and carvings to confirm the fact that the highest degree of the carbuilder's art has been employed in the construction of the handsome equipment of this North Western flyer. The coaches, library cars, the 16-section palace sleeping cars, and the compartment sleeping cars, each compartment being supplied with hot and cold water and lavatory, certainly seem to preclude the possibility of further improvement in making travel a luxury. Supper is served in the elegant dining car, and the buffet library car is well stocked with reading material, metropolitan dailies, magazines and leading pictorial publications for the the evening's entertainment. The management of the Chicago & North-Western R'y believes that perfect service is the strongest possible advertisement for securing passenger traffic, and we are told by one of its officials that its train service and accommodations are always carefully planned with this end in view. The results are so satisfactory that a person who once goes over the line generally selects it whenever and wherever he goes. 19 0-21

A Quarter Century Test.

For a quarter of a century Dr. King's New Discovery has been tested, and the millions who have received benefit from its use, testify to its wonderful curative powers in all diseases of the throat chest and lungs A remedy that has stood the test so long and that has given so universal satisfaction, is no experiment. Each bottle is positively guaranteed to give relief or the money will be refunded. It is admitted to be the most reliable for coughs and colds. Trail bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. The Obelisk of Orsotasen.

The Obelisk of Orsotasen, one of the earliest and finest of the Egyptian obelisks, is still standing at Heliopolis. It is inscribed with the name of Orsotasen, one of the greatest rulers of the twelfth dynasty. It is sixty-seven feet four inches in height, without the pyramidion which crowns it; and is a splendid block of granite, weighing two hundred and seventeen tons. It must have required immense skill to quarry it, to transport it from Syene, and finally, after finishing it to erect it where it now stands and has stood for forty-five hundred years.

SCHAAB & BRO.

IT WAS DUTY.

From peace to war, from ease to hardship, from security to peril, giving up occupation, emolument and preferment, to stand in the ranks, by the guns, or ride with Pleasonton or Farnsworth to death, was a great, grand test of latent manhood whose triumph was the soldier's vindication, the state's honor, the nation's preservation and overwhelming confirmation of the vitality of principle and the virility of forces upon which the integrity and permanence of republics, more than of monarchies, must depend.

The motives which created, disciplined and armed the millions of Europe, were aggressive, defensive, dominating and revengeful. There were no calls for volunteers, since arbitrary conscription regarded no personal sentiments but mercilessly filled the ranks as the hated press gangs manned the fleet of England.

For spontaneous, self-sacrificing and general enrollment in the military service during the war for the Union, the volunteer armies presented an example without precedent, a unanimity without parallel and a devotion so sublime, that from that time, the downtrodden of all peoples have awakened to new hopes, aspirations for liberty, desires and demands for popular rule and the downfall of thralldom and tyranny.

The impulse which controlled the Union volunteer was instinctively strong in its natural and moral aspects and general education added weight in legal claims and patriotic feeling.

As the brave and incorruptible regulars abandoned by leaders in distant Texas, resolutely refused the proffers of treason; as Thomas and many another trained West Pointer firmly and sorrowfully declined state honors, as thousands of peaceful citizens turned their backs on all that looked to comfort, that they might resist and turn back the foes of nationality, preserve our flag unsullied, and enforce submission to its kindly rule, the grandeur of their action suggests and emphasizes a hidden cause whose effect could not have failed of victory.

And when the oath was taken and batteries, battalions and regiments had been mustered in, pristine virtues shone conspicuous in all the widely varied experiences of the newly formed armies.

Hands all unaccustomed, performed dull, menial services and social superiors unhesitatingly obeyed, as privates, commands of known inferiors.

Whether carrying water for the cooks, policing the camp, walking a beat as guard, or actively engaged in drill, the potent presence of a magic word smoothed the rugged way and softened the resentments instinctively engendered.

This one thought was the clue to endurance of long and wearying marches, the key to patient suffering from wounds and disease, the solace in captivity and the inspiration of the battle-cry which rang along the lines in action.

It banished fear, inspired respect, sustained life, and brightened the gloomiest seasons and situations in the light of other hoped for days. Where manhood was wanting, when powerful home appeals weakened and reverses were suffered, desertions increased and the remnant, veterans all, closed up the ranks firmly and undaunted.

Unable to discern the true incentive to military service and attributing to the volunteer the sordid motives most familiar to themselves, some say enrolment was for money; circumstances conluting this, the cause was laid to love of novelty, and this in time gave way before the fact of veteran re-enlistments in the face of probable death, disease or imprisonment, each with its horrors,

Repeated drafts struck off three-quarters of a million conscripts, but less than fifty thousand saw service in the field. To this great multitude, on whom the claims of country were as strong in principle as on the volunteer, bounty, novelty, promotion and honor had no retentive power and trade for substitutes gave rise to yet a meaner class, the bounty jumper.

There can be nowhere greater contrast than the volunteer self-exiled from home stoically responding to the calls of his in ward monitor in the faithful obedience to his oath of service and the conscienceless character pictured by southern pens and copied by Northern sympathizers.

Resigned to the chances of war, what recompense upheld his sometimes failing hopes?

The satisfaction of having given years of life to aid the government and of living to see that government double its population, quadruple its wealth and increase the number of sovereign states.

Though the heights of Fredericksburg and the slopes of Kenesaw, the thickets of the Wilderness and the jungles of Dallas forest, the lines before Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and many another historic ground were strewn thick with the blue-clad forms of thousands of the dying and dead; though organizations of thousands were cut down to hundreds; though generals erred and statesmen disagreed; though the enemy in front were cheered by allies in their rear, they never faltered and never failed to obey command.

There was pathos and there was instruction in the marvelous unanimity with which the veterans re-enlisted to do and dare and only they can realize their depth of feeling when Richmond was evacuated and Lee surrendered.

Long lines in gay uniforms, bearing beautiful colors, went away. Squads of weather-worn, serious men, carrying poles with colors shot rent and tattered fragments fluttering, came back.

The mighty four years' task was completed, and peace reigned from the Potomac to the Rio Grande.

Thus was illustrated on a tremendous scale in a war of momentous interest to all peoples, the unifying and potential force of a pristine virtue.

As for centuries, martyrs had died for religion, so the Union volunteers by thousands cheerfully offered and gave their lives a sacrifice to a Divine injunction, the call of duty.

In the great crisis of the war, they gave themselves to their country. They served her as they loved her. Her call for aid was the response of loyal sons. For her, they dared all things. No matter who led, they nobly followed. They stood by her as sons stand by their mother, and she has gratefully recognized their fealty and affection, and in these later days, bestows unstinted of her wealth to make comfortable their declining years.

Will Drain the Kankakee,

(Laporte Argus.)

A meeting of parties interested in draining the Kankakee marshes was held at Momence last Thursday and was well attended by representative land owners along the river. The work of removing the rock from the bed of the river at Momence is completed and the visitors made a careful inspection of the results. It is claimed that the land for many miles up the river shows an improvement as a result of this work, and preliminary steps were taken to organize for making a ditch 30 feet wide and six feet deep from Momence to the neighborhood of South Bend, or for a distance of about 75 miles. It is expected if this work it done it will be carried on under the present state ditch law, and it is roughly estimated that it can be done at an assessment of less than 40 cents per acre on the affected land. To start the movement a committee of two from each of the counties interested was appointed to investigate the law, and its application to such an enterprise, and to ascertain the feeling of the people who are directly interested. The committe for this county is County Commissioner Geo. S. Dennison and J. S. Long. The present idea is to run the ditch as straight as possible without regard to the river, but the more difficult points for the excavation will be avoided, and the work will be done with dredges, The river from Momence to the state line is now in its tortuous course 242 miles long, but on the straight line it is only 71 miles. A number of large capitalists and land holders seem disposed to push the matter ahead as rapidly as possible.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—125,000 to 140,000 a day.

Prof. J. T. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

Sold by newsdealers everywhere, and subscriptions received by all postmasters. Address THE CHICAGO RECORD, 181 Madison-st. (2)

Great Sales.

The promptness and certainty of its cures have made Chamberlain's Cough Remedy famous. It is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping coughs, and is the most effectual remedy known for these diseases. Mr. C. B. Main, of Union City, Pa., says: "I have a great sale on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I warrant every bottle and have never heard of one failing to give entire satisfaction." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly For June. 1894.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for June is notably rich in matter of personal contemporaneous human interest, having a gossipy article upon "Characteristics of Congressmen," illustrated with no less than forty portrait sketches from life, by Gribayedoff and Clinedinst; and some delightfully intimate reminiscences of Gladstone, by Howard Paul, accompanied with eight progressive portraits of the "grand old" Commoner at marked periods of his life between 1852 and 1892. The second of that graphic and entertaining series of memoirs of a war artist, by Joseph Becker, "Special for Leslie's," is devoted to the siege of Petersburg, and embraces some thrilling pictures, including the explosion of the famous mine. Alvan S. Southworth contributes a paper of extensive interest and value upon "Horses in Trade, Traffic and Transportation," for which Pruett Share has drawn some spirited pictures. "A study in Agriculture," by M. V. Moore, late agricultural editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is an account of the largest diversified farm in the world, that of the Hon. Jame M. Smith, of Georgia. Other seasonable illustrated features in this number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly are: "Grasse," by Helen R. Rockwell; "Our Inland Seas," by Bessie B. Croffut; "An Inland Fisherman," by Martha McCulloch Williams; and contributions by J. Carter Beard, Tudor Jenks and J William Fosdick.

Republican Judicial Convention.

This convention was called to order by J. D. Leighty last Saturday at 1 p. m., after a half day spent in talk. Sol. A. Wood, of Angola, was made chairman and J. O. Rose of the Magnet was made secretary. Nominations were declared in order, but no one seemed willing to get up and announce a candidate. So they began ballotting. Steuben had two candidates, Emmett Bratton and Frank Roby, and they divided their 21 votes between them, as shown below. DeKalb divided her 25 votes between W. L. Penfield and E. D. Hartman, as seen in the same table of ballots, which we here give in full, as it is an unusual thing here to take 32 ballots.

This vote should be carefully studied, so one can see how nobly the republican delegates, some of them ex-soldiers, stand by their comrades. We have heard them boast of this a good deal. Here was a chance to show it. But out of a total of 46 votes, they gave Capt. Hartman, the only ex soldier in the field, from 7 to 9½ only.

Ordering Postage Stamps.

The postmaster who finds his office getting short of stamps, makes out an order on a printed blank and sends it to the postoffice department at Washington. Here the postmaster's accounts are examined and if his credit is good the order is approved, charged to his account and forwarded to the government agent at the factory where postage stamps are made. The government agent has the stamps counted, carefully packed and sent by registered mail to the postmaster, who sends a receipt for them to Washington.

Cheap Excursions to the West.

An exceptionally favorable opportunity for visiting the richest and most productive sections of the west and northwest will be afforded by the Home-Seekers' low-rate excursions which have been arranged by the North-Western Line. Tickets for these excursions will be sold on May 8th and 29th, to points in Northwestern Iowa, western Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Manitoba, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Montana and Idaho, and will be good for return passage within thirty days from date of sale. Stop-over privileges will be allowed on going trip in territory to which the tickets are sold. For further information, call on or address Ticket Agents of connecting lines. Circulars giving rates and detailed information, will be mailed, free upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western Railway, Chicago. 18-21

The Auburn Swing washer, made and sold by Mr. Meese, is the only washing machine made in the county. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been in use here nearly four years. Clothes washed with it last longer, because they are not injured by rubbing, and being closed in, have the benefit of cleansing by steam. There is an advantage in buying this washer, as any repairs needed can be had right here, at all times of Mr. Meese.

The committe on music of the M. E. church and the Auburn Musical Club have arranged for a fine concert to be given in the M. E. church on the evening of Decoration Day, Wednesday, May 30. The exercises will consist of choruses, quartets, trios, instrumental and vocal duets, instrumental and vocal solos, recitations, etc.

New Undertaking Establishment.

Wm Ettinger, of Waterloo, has established a new undertaking business in the room on North Main street formerly occupied by J. S. Bowers. He has purchased a good hearse, full line of caskets, robes and other undertaking goods and will be ready for business about May 24. His long experience in this line of work, will insure his giving satisfaction. He has made a special study in the art of embalming and can promise good work. In that being a practical cabinet maker, he will do all kinds of repairing in that line. Give him a call. He'll deal fairly by you. 20-22

Notice of Annual Meeting

SAILED THE SEAS 38 YEARS.

One of His Experiences.

For thirty-eight years Capt. Loud followed the sea, most of that time as master of a vessel, and upon retiring from the water was appointed by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to superintend the seal fisheries in Alaska, which position he held five years. He relates one experience as follows:

"For several years I had been troubled with general nervousness and pain in the region of my heart. My greatest affliction was sleeplessness; it was almost impossible at any time to obtain rest and sleep. Having seen Dr. Miles' remedies advertised I began using Nervine. After taking a small quantity the benefit received was so great that I was positively alarmed, thinking the remedy contained opiates which would finally be injurious to me; but on being assured by the druggist that it was perfectly harmless, I continued it together with the Heart Cure. Today I can conscientiously say that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure did more for me than anything I had ever taken. I had been treated by eminent physicians in New York and San Francisco without benefit. I owe my present good health to the judicious use of these most valuable remedies, and heartily recommend them to all afflicted as I was."—Capt. A. P. Loud, Hampden, Me.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Cure are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, express prepaid. They are free from all opiates and dangerous drugs.

is injurious, but nothing gives strength, and tones up the stomach like a pure old port wine. "Royal Ruby Port," so called for its royal taste and ruby color, is on account of its purity, age and strength, particularly adapted for invalids, convalescents and the aged. Sold only in bottles (never in bulk) while cheap wine is sold by the gallon and gives a larger profit to the seller but less to the user. This wine is absolutely pure, and has the age without which no wine is fit to use. Be sure you get "Royal Ruby"; quart bottles $1, pints 60 cts. Sold by

SCHAAB & BRO.

IT WAS DUTY.

From peace to war, from ease to hardship, from security to peril, giving up occupation, emolument and preferment, to stand in the ranks, by the guns, or ride with Pleasonton or Farnsworth to death, was a great, grand test of latent manhood whose triumph was the soldier's vindication, the state's honor, the nation's preservation and overwhelming confirmation of the vitality of principle and the virility of forces upon which the integrity and permanence of republics, more than of monarchies, must depend.

The motives which created, disciplined and armed the millions of Europe, were aggressive, defensive, dominating and revengeful. There were no calls for volunteers, since arbitrary conscription regarded no personal sentiments but mercilessly filled the ranks as the hated press gangs manned the fleet of England.

For spontaneous, self-sacrificing and general enrollment in the military service during the war for the Union, the volunteer armies presented an example without precedent, a unanimity without parallel and a devotion so sublime, that from that time, the downtrodden of all peoples have awakened to new hopes, aspirations for liberty, desires and demands for popular rule and the downfall of thralldom and tyranny.

The impulse which controlled the Union volunteer was instinctively strong in its natural and moral aspects and general education added weight in legal claims and patriotic feeling.

As the brave and incorruptible regulars abandoned by leaders in distant Texas, resolutely refused the proffers of treason; as Thomas and many another trained West Pointer firmly and sorrowfully declined state honors, as thousands of peaceful citizens turned their backs on all that looked to comfort, that they might resist and turn back the foes of nationality, preserve our flag unsullied, and enforce submission to its kindly rule, the grandeur of their action suggests and emphasizes a hidden cause whose effect could not have failed of victory.

And when the oath was taken and batteries, battalions and regiments had been mustered in, pristine virtues shone conspicuous in all the widely varied experiences of the newly formed armies.

Hands all unaccustomed, performed dull, menial services and social superiors unhesitatingly obeyed, as privates, commands of known inferiors.

Whether carrying water for the cooks, policing the camp, walking a beat as guard, or actively engaged in drill, the potent presence of a magic word smoothed the rugged way and softened the resentments instinctively engendered.

This one thought was the clue to endurance of long and wearying marches, the key to patient suffering from wounds and disease, the solace in captivity and the inspiration of the battle-cry which rang along the lines in action.

It banished fear, inspired respect, sustained life, and brightened the gloomiest seasons and situations in the light of other hoped for days. Where manhood was wanting, when powerful home appeals weakened and reverses were suffered, desertions increased and the remnant, veterans all, closed up the ranks firmly and undaunted.

Unable to discern the true incentive to military service and attributing to the volunteer the sordid motives most familiar to themselves, some say enrolment was for money; circumstances conluting this, the cause was laid to love of novelty, and this in time gave way before the fact of veteran re-enlistments in the face of probable death, disease or imprisonment, each with its horrors,

Repeated drafts struck off three-quarters of a million conscripts, but less than fifty thousand saw service in the field. To this great multitude, on whom the claims of country were as strong in principle as on the volunteer, bounty, novelty, promotion and honor had no retentive power and trade for substitutes gave rise to yet a meaner class, the bounty jumper.

There can be nowhere greater contrast than the volunteer self-exiled from home stoically responding to the calls of his in ward monitor in the faithful obedience to his oath of service and the conscienceless character pictured by southern pens and copied by Northern sympathizers.

Resigned to the chances of war, what recompense upheld his sometimes failing hopes?

The satisfaction of haying given years of life to aid the government and of living to see that government double its population, quadruple its wealth and increase the number of sovereign states.

Though the heights of Fredericksburg and the slopes of Kenesaw, the thickets of the Wilderness and the jungles of Dallas forest, the lines before Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and many another historic ground were strewn thick with the blue-clad forms of thousands of the dying and dead; though organizations of thousands were cut down to hundreds; though generals erred and statesmen disagreed; though the enemy in front were cheered by allies in their rear, they never faltered and never failed to obey command.

There was pathos and there was instruction in the marvelous unanimity with which the veterans re-enlisted to do and dare and only they can realize their depth of feeling when Richmond was evacuated and Lee surrendered.

Long lines in gay uniforms, bearing beautiful colors, went away. Squads of weather-worn, serious men, carrying poles with colors shot rent and tattered fragments fluttering, came back.

The mighty four years' task was completed, and peace reigned from the Potomac to the Rio Grande.

Thus was illustrated on a tremendous scale in a war of momentous interest to all peoples, the unifying and potential force of a pristine virtue.

As for centuries, martyrs had died for religion, so the Union volunteers by thousands cheerfully offered and gave their lives a sacrifice to a Divine injunction, the call of duty.

In the great crisis of the war, they gave themselves to their country. They served her as they loved her. Her call for aid was the response of loyal sons. For her, they dared all things. No matter who led, they nobly followed. They stood by her as sons stand by their mother, and she has gratefully recognized their fealty and affection, and in these later days, bestows unstinted of her wealth to make comfortable their declining years.

Will Drain the Kankakee,

(Laporte Argus.)

A meeting of parties interested in draining the Kankakee marshes was held at Momence last Thursday and was well attended by representative land owners along the river. The work of removing the rock from the bed of the river at Momence is completed and the visitors made a careful inspection of the results. It is claimed that the land for many miles up the river shows an improvement as a result of this work, and preliminary steps were taken to organize for making a ditch 30 feet wide and six feet deep from Momence to the neighborhood of South Bend, or for a distance of about 75 miles. It is expected if this work it done it will be carried on under the present state ditch law, and it is roughly estimated that it can be done at an assessment of less than 40 cents per acre on the affected land. To start the movement a committee of two from each of the counties interested was appointed to investigate the law, and its application to such an enterprise, and to ascertain the feeling of the people who are directly interested. The committe for this county is County Commissioner Geo. S. Dennison and J. S. Long. The present idea is to run the ditch as straight as possible without regard to the river, but the more difficult points for the excavation will be avoided, and the work will be done with dredges, The river from Momence to the state line is now in its tortuous course 242 miles long, but on the straight line it is only 71 miles. A number of large capitalists and land holders seem disposed to push the matter ahead as rapidly as possible.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—125,000 to 140,000 a day.

Prof. J. T. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

Fatal Wreck on the Baltimore and Ohio in Pennsylvania—Indianapolis Bank Wreckers Found Guilty—Help for the Unemployed at Minneapolis—Woman Killed by Lightning.

WRECK ON THE B. & O.

Two Men Killed and Three Coaches Burned.

Pittsburgh special: As the Baltimore and Ohio Express No. 9, west bound, reached the sharp curve at Pine Grove Station, nine miles this side of Meyersdale, a wreck occurred in which three men were killed and another so severely injured that he will probably die. A huge rock weighing about fifty tons had rolled on the tracks, and the engine crashed into it with great force, completely demolishing engine and tender and wrecking three baggage cars.

Engineer William Nicholson, aged 41, of Glenwood, Pa., was so badly crushed and burned that all of his remains to be found were gathered up and placed in a bucket.

William H. Reinhart, fireman, aged 25, of Glenwood, Pa., was burned and scalded to death.

O. E. Stahl, express messenger of the Baltimore, was badly scalded, sustained severe internal injuries and will probably die. No passengers were seriously injured, although many were bruised and all received a thorough shaking up. The three express cars caught fire and were entirely consumed within fifteen minutes. Three hundred and fifty feet of track was torn up and traffic was delayed for seven hours. The loss to the railroad and express companies is not yet known.

COURTS INTERFERE.

The Indiana Strikers Will Be Compelled to Face Uncle Sam.

Terre Haute (Ind.) special: W. H. Lyford of Chicago, general solicitor of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad Company, has arrived in the city with a restraining order, secured at Indianapolis, enjoining the striking coal miners and all others from interfering with the progress of a coal train of twenty-four cars which the strikers side-tracked at Clinton, and now have in their possession. United States Marshal Hawkins has arrived, and, armed with the writ and a force he will make an effort to move the coal train. The train is in the heart of the Indiana mining district and trouble is feared. The federal government being behind the writ, all force necessary to move the train will be used. A posse of Terre Haute police in trying to move the train was driven off, barely escaping with their lives. The miners have sworn the coal shall not be moved and most of them are armed.

The Two Coffins Found Guilty.

Indianapolis special: The verdict in the Coffin case find the two Coffins guilty on all forty-seven counts in the indictment, charging them with aiding and abetting President Haughey in misappropriating the funds of the bank to the extent of $375,000, or making deposits of worthless paper, against which enormous sums of money were drawn, and of making a deposit of $44,000 of ficticious paper in May 1893, just prior to the bank failure, in order to cover up an overdraft and deceive the Government bank examiner. A. S. Reed is convicted on counts thirty-seven to forty-six, which charge that he aided in having false entries on the books of the bank.

For the Unemployed.

The problem of the unemployed has been taken up in Minneapolis, Minn., in earnest. The ways and means committee of the Council has decided to issue bonds to the amount of $100,000, at 2 per cent., to furnish the money for an extensive scheme of public improvements. The business men of the city have agreed to take the whole issue at par, so that the bonds will not have to be floated in the money market. A large water reservoir will be erected and other extensive improvements are to be undertaken in a similar manner.

Rescued Four Women.

The Secretary of the Treasury has awarded to Albert Graeber of Belleville, Ill., a silver life saving medal of honor, in recognition of his heroic conduct in rescuing four women from drowning in the Okaw River, in Illinois, in August, 1893.

Killed by Lightning.

During a severe rain-storm at Muncie, Ind., Miss Anna Howard was struck by lightning and instantly killed. She was at her home, near the Indiana Iron Works, in the south part of the city, feeding chickens at the time.

Mr. Gladstone.

The following bulletin has been issued by the physicians in attendance upon ex-Premier Gladstone: "Mr. Gladstone's progress toward complete recovery continues uninterrupted."

Four Killed.

At Berlin, four workmen were killed and six injured by the collapse of a house which was in process of construction.

Killed by a Train.

Frank Palser, a prominent farmer, shot and killed Pat Lyons in a saloon quarrel at Lima, Ohio. Palser escaped.

Julia Marlowe Married.

Miss Julia Marlowe, the actress, was married at Philadelphia, to Robert Tabor, formerly her leading man. The marriage was an exceedingly quiet one, only seven friends of Miss Marlowe being present.

Found in the Penitentiary.

Members of a prominent New York family found a supposed dead son serving a sentence in the Ohio penitentiary under an assumed name.

Indiana Miners Armed.

A special from Oakland, Ind., dated the 25th inst., says: Two hundred and fifty striking miners marched from Washington, Ind., to Littles, seven miles north of here this morning, armed with 100 Winchesters and one wagon load of ammunition, and provisions sufficient to last them thirty days, and camped at the mines. This afternoon in a battle between the striking miners and those at work in Littles' mines, a number were wounded, two fatally. Six deputy sheriffs were disarmed and put to flight. Serious trouble is feared. A company of State militia is in readiness at Evansville to start at call to the mining regions. Five men came to this city, presumably to watch the movements of the militia, but they refuse to say anything.

ILLINOIS STRIKE.

The Situation Continues to Appear Threatning.

LaSelle, Ill., special: General Orendorff, received a telegram Sunday night stating that a mob of 300 striking miners captured a passenger train on the Illinois Valley and Northern branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad at Ladda, Bureau County, and at the point of revolvers had compelled the conductor to carry them to LaSelle. By ruse the train crew made the men believe they had arrived at LaSelle when Pana was reached and they got off there, a mile east of this city. It was decided to head the members off in Pana, and five companies of militia encountered the mob. The order was given for the miners to throw up their hands, but being strangers to the English language, they did not understand and started to run. Only one shot was fired and that by a crazed Belgian named Ferron. A Corporal arrested the man. Ferron kneit down in the dust, threw off his hat and began to pray, thinking he was to be shot.

Some of the rioters had hidden in sheds, and barns and outhouses, and pickets were sent out to make thorough search. When all who could be found were captured, the order to march was given again. The prisoners were compelled to march (hands up) in single file until after all of them had been searched. Revolvers and knives were found and on three men were found dynamite bombs, any one of which would annihilate a regiment. Over a hundred rioters were marched over the county line and warned to keep out of the county. The men with dynamite are under arrest.

BOLD BANDITS.

Five Robbers Make an Attack on a Texas Bank and Secure $2,500.

Five robbers entered the First National Bank at Long View, Texas. The President and cashier were ordered to hold up their hands and the robbers secured $2,500. Several officers and citizens met the robbers and constant firing was kept up, during which George Buckingham and J. W. McQueen were killed and City Marshal Muckelroy was badly wounded. One of the robbers, a small, dark complected man was killed. Over 400 shots were fired. The remaining robbers escaped with the dead man's horse and gun. A large posse is in pursuit.

George Buckingham, who was shooting at the robbers, was shot and killed. While he was down the robbers shot at him several times.

City Marshal Muckelroy, who was shooting at another robber, received a Winchester ball in the bowels. The ball glanced from the silver dollars he had in his pocket, which may save his life, but it passed through the cavity.

J. W. McQueen, a saloon keeper, thinking the shots were for fire, ran out, and it is thought is mortally wounded.

Charles S. Leonard was walking through the Court House yard, and was shot through the leg, necessitating amputation.

Theodore Summers was shot in the left hand.

Deputy Will Stevens was not hurt though he stood in short range and killed one of the robbers.

The bankers all escaped unhurt, except T. E. Clemmons, who in the scuffle with the robber got his hand in the hammer of a robber's pistol which came down and cut a hole in his hand.

DARK CLOUDS

Hang Over the Business Situation.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "Storms and floods, prolonged strikes, and large exports of gold, have done their utmost to give business a vacation. But the wants unsatisfied during the past year, belated and much lessened, and yet greater than those of any other nation, have caused a volume of trade quite large for the season. The strikes do not appear near an end, and while violence and bloodshed have occurred at a few points, many of the operators are making no effort to work their mines. The lack of fuel has stopped practically the whole of the Edgar Thompson and parts of other Carnegie works, many establishments of great variety between the Hudson and the Mississippi, and even the water works of a few Western cities. Railroad traffic is as yet affected comparatively little, but weeks of idleness for so many others participating in or affected by the strikes must lessen purchasing power and demand for goods, and so cloud an outlook which had begun to seem brighter."

Hoosier Populists.

The Indiana Populists held their State Convention at Indianapolis and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Dr. C. A. Robinson of Shelby County; Auditor, Edgar A. Perkins of Marion County; Treasurer, A. B. Keeport of Cass County; Attorney General, Silas M. Holcomb of Tipton County; Clerk of Supreme Court, J. M. Montgomery of Lawrence County; Superintendent of Public Instruction, A. J. Allen of Vigo County; State Statistician, W. P. Smith of Marion County; State Geologist, Edward Kindle of Monroe County; Judge of Supreme Court, D. W. Chambers of Henry County.

Hidden Cities.

Mapimi (Mex.) special: The American archæologists who went to the recently newly discovered city in the Sierra Madre Mountains have returned and tell of another hidden city five Spanish leagues north of the first city. The leader of the party, C. W. Pantion of Philadelphia, states that these cities were evidently twin capitals of a wealthy district long before the Aztecs. The two cities are connected by underground passages hewn out of solid rock, and it was while exploring one of these passages the second city was discovered. It lies in a deep basin of the mountains, and no exit except the underground passage could be found.

A Rigid Investigation.

United States Consul Willis at St. Thomas, a Canadian town on the north side of Lake Erie, has reported to the State Department by telegraph, through United States Consul General Riley, at Ottawa, that the United States flag flying over his Consulate was hauled down by Canadians. He asked for instructions. The Consul General added that the matter had been brought to the attention of the Dominion Government, and that it had imediately ordered a rigid police investigation to learn all of the facts, and to locate the responsiblity of the guilty individuals.

The Engineers Elect Officers.

St. Paul (Minn.) special: The delegates to the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers proceeded to the election of officers. Grand Chief Arthur holds over, so the first officer to be chosen was Grand Chief Engineer. A. B. Youngson of Meadville, Pa., was re-elected Assistant Grand Chief; T. S. Ingraham was chosen First Grand Engineer or Recorder by a vote of 401 to 452. C. H. Salmons of Aurora, Ill., was chosen Second Grand Engineer. By virtue of his office Salmons becomes editor of the Brotherhood Journal.

Terrible Fall.

While George Charist was attempting to walk a steel cable stretched across the public square at Shelbyville, Tenn., and carry his wife, Lizzie Charist, the cable snapped and both fell to the stony macadamized ground thirty-five feet below. Charist's hip is broken and he is terribly bruised, but will recover. His wife is seriously injured and will die. He was a professional wire walker and had given many previous performances in various parts of the country without injury.

Guilty of Attempted Bribery.

The special committee appointed to investigate the attempted senatorial bribery on the part of Charles W. Buttz, has submitted its report to the Senate. Buttz is found by the committee to have made the attempt at bribery, despite his denial, and Senators Hunton and Kyle are exonorated from all blame. The report of the committee consists of two pages, and the testimony given before the committee 700 pages.

Destructive Flames.

Fire destroyed the most important portion of West End, New Orleans' most popular summer resort. The flames originated in the cupola of the West End hotel, which immediately overlooks Lake Ponchartrain, and spread in every direction until the famous building crumbled. The wharves, music stand, refreshment booths, and other concerns around the hotel were also lost. The total loss is about $200,000.

Surveys of Public Lands.

Surveyors of public lands are hereafter to be paid for by the Government during the year in which work is actually done, according to a decision by First Comptroller Bowler of the Treasury Department. The opinion is of considerable importance to the general land office, and will affect contracts made for work prior to the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Wall Give Way.

Latimer's dry goods and furniture store on Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., collapsed, the wreck afterwards taking fire. The building occupied by Latimer was a three-story brick. Four injured persons have been taken from the ruins. It is thought that there are still ten more in the wrecked building.

Burglars Disagree.

Great excitement was created in the Ohio Penitentiary dining hall recently by David Clark, a Cincinnati burglar, and Mike Patterson, of Ross County, doing time for the same crime. They fought with the ferocity of tigers over a trival matter, but were separated before serious injury was done to either.

Utah will Become a State.

In all probability the bill admitting Utah to statehood will be passed by the senate in the course of a few days. The opposition that has come from one of the Eastern Republicans has been withdrawn and he is said now to admit the equity of the claims of the territory to statehood.

The Bridge Fell.

In Carter County, Kentucky, near Iron Hill Furnace, a wooden bridge, which Joseph Rife and wife attempted to cross on horseback, fell. Both horses were killed outright, and their riders fatally injured.

A Volcano Active.

Rome special: The volcano on Stromboli, one of the Lipari Islands, lying to the north of Sicily, is showing great activity. The eruption is increasing in violence, with frequent earthquakes.

Alleged Jury Briber Disappears.

Indianapolis special: It is reported that Frank O. Stannard of Lawrence County, indicted and under bonds for offering to sell the jury, in the bank case, has disappeared and will forfeit his bond.

Fought a Pistol Duel.

Duke Alford and Snider fought a pistol duel at Spring Hill Distillery, Frankfort, Ky. Snider received a flesh wound in the arm. Alford was shot in the stomach. Neither is fatally shot.

Midland Steel Strike Settled.

The trouble at the Midland Steel Works, Muncie, Ind., between the company and the men employed in the blooming mill department has been adjusted, and the strikers have returned to work. A compromise was effected.

Hanged for Murder.

Austin Brown, colored, was hanged at San Antonio, Texas, for the murder of Anderson Harris, colored. His last words were: "Good-by, everybody." His neck was broken by the fall.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. Sarah Amsbaugh, aged 68, of West Unity, Ohio, was burned to death by her clothes igniting from a match. She was lighting her pipe.

WORSE THAN NOTHING

AN EMINENT TARIFF REFORMER ON THE GORMAN BILL.

Its Pretended Reductions of Duties in Some Schedules Are as Prohibitory as McKinleyism Itself—Wages and the Tariff—An Honest Democrat.

The Tariff Jugglery.

The new Gorman bill is worse than nothing, except possibly in the woolen schedule. Its pretended reductions of duties in the metal, cotton, flax, and silk schedules leave most of them as prohibitory as the McKinley tariff itself. Some duties are actually increased, and always in favor of some manufacturing combination. Sometimes this increase of taxation for private gain is open, as in the case of the Lithographic Trust, which is given specific rates, equal to about three times the McKinley rates, and such as it never was able to obtain from Reed and McKinley. But in most cases it is done by means of a trick, in the way of new classification, such as none but the initiated can understand. Some of these tricks have already been exposed, but there are many more. The metal schedule is full of them, especially in cutlery, files, and saws. The monopoly secured to the steel-rail and steel-beam combinations is so glaring that it cannot be called a trick. It is open and almost avowed robbery.

The demands of the minority have grown with every submission of the honest majority. We have made a mistake in urging the passage of any bill, without reference to what that bill might be. Of course, it was always implied that the bill should be one affording some substantial relief; but our submission has encouraged the minority to insist upon a bill which gives no relief.

If this is all that a Democratic Senate can do, let the Republican tariff stand. We can then reorganize the Democratic party, renew the struggle for genuine tariff reform, go into a minority for a short time and emerge with victory and honor. If we pass this bill we shall not only be defeated, but disgraced. The Republican party passed a bill which was written by the agents of men who had paid millions for the privilege; but that money was paid into the party treasury and impartially distributed among the workers and electors. An immense price has been paid for the privilege of writing this bill; but it has not been and will not be distributed outside of Washington. We did not enter into the long and successful campaign for tariff reform with the expectation of making vast fortunes for the Washington lobby.

The cause of tariff reform will take care of itself. A few more years of McKinleyism will give it new strength. The longer the final victory is delayed the more sweeping it will be. The Mills bill was more radical than the Morrison bill; the Wilson bill was more radical than the Mills bill; and when we have, as we soon shall have, a really Democratic Congress, it will pass a tariff bill by the side of which the Wilson bill will seem tame indeed. Let us wait until 1901, if necessary; but let us not accept any such abomination as this.

If any doubt whether this result will come about, let them observe that the McKinley tariff has already broken down, of its own weight, and must inevitably break down still more. It cannot produce the necessary revenue, especially with the rapidly increasing sugar bounties to provide for. Let honest Democrats refuse to permit any addition to the revenue from the tariff without genuine tariff reform, and their demands will simply have to be granted. But if they tamely submit to any dictation from protectionists, within or without their ranks, they will never accomplish anything.

It is perhaps useless to indulge in reminiscences; but all that is now happenning was substantially foretold in the Evening Post in November, 1892, when you called upon President Cleveland to summon Congress at once, and to settle the tariff question before distributing the offices. He preferred the advice of those who insisted that offices must be attended to before tariffs. The statesmen of the Senate, having got all the offices which they expect from him, are now doing their best to destroy him, his tariff, and his party. THOMAS G. SHEARMAN.

An Honest Democrat.

Representative Clifton R. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, being unwilling to leave Washington to look after his political fences at home, has written an open letter to his constituents, explaining why he voted for the repeal of the Sherman silver purchase act, and also his position on the tariff. He makes the following frank statements on the tariff question:

"You know that I am a free trader, and do not believe in any protection. I further believe that absolute and immediate free trade would be a prompt and unspeakable blessing to our country. I know, however, that the country is not ready to go this far, and I do not refuse to win a great battle and conquer a province simply because the battle does not promise immediately to end the war and give me the whole earth. That there will be a liberal spirit of agreement in conference between the Senate and the House is not to be doubted. I regret every proposed increase in the Senate, just as I regret that the bill could not go much further than it did as presented to the House and as passed by that body.

"Unpalatable as the promised Senate amendments are, the bill, even with those amendments, will carry a larger measure of tariff reform than all the bills which have been passed by the House or have been proposed by the Ways and Means Committee since we took up this question ten years ago down to the present Congress. This fact is indisputable, and it is equally clear that unless we can come to some common ground which we are willing to defend, front and rear, we are in danger of being sadly impracticable.

"I regret every increase from the Wilson bill, and I will yield to none that I do not have to, just as I regret every protective duty that we had still to carry in that bill; but when we agreed to the best we could get, I fought for the bill, front and rear, and I think this is the way all our friends must do, especially in the Senate, where our majority is small and our dangers are great, or else unwillingness on the one hand will hardly be distinguishable from unwillingness upon the other, when both equally lead to the defeat of all reform. Afterward, with the aid of this bill and when the people send up some better Democrats in the place of our invalids, or enough really good ones to enable us to get along without their votes, we can go further than they will permit us to go at this time."

Democrats in Name Only.

The manner in which the tariff bill has been mauled and bedeviled in the Senate is in one sense a shame to the Democrats, but it is no credit to the Republicans, and the protection organs which are affecting to reprobate the inaction of the so-called majority are really firing into their own camp. The Democrats of the Senate would have long ago passed the bill as it came from the House had they not been hampered by a handful of assistant Republican spies and traitors within their ranks. These men call themselves Democrats, but they are no such thing. They are Republicans in everything but name. They train with the true Democrats of the Senate only to betray them, and their demands for "swag" in the form of larcenous duties are even more impudent and brazen those of the avowed Republicans. The McKinley organs have no business charging the Democracy with the responsibility for this predatory gang. They belong on the Republican side, and the sooner they betake themselves thither—body, boots and breeches—the better the Democratic party will be pleased.—Chicago Herald.

Wages and Tariff.

J. Schoenhof, the well-known tariff writer, has been following up a line of inquiry upon which he entered some two years ago, with results which should be instructive to victims of the protectionist delusion.

Taking the census returns of manufactures, he shows that the average of wages and the average increase in wages from 1880 to 1890 is much greater in the unprotected and exporting industries than in the highly protected industries. In neither class does he include any industries except such as are classed as manufacturing by the Census Bureau. Wages in seventeen unprotected and exporting industries in 1890 ranged from $407 to $676 per head, while in eight highly protected industries the range was from $314 to $367. The increase in wages over 1880 in the unprotected industries ranged from from $22 to $128 per head, the average being $78, while in the protected industries the increase ranged from $40 to $77, averaging $61.

From further examination of the returns it appears that wages paid in the manufacture of articles made from raw materials carrying the highest rate of protection averaged in 1890 $414 for males and $275 for females. In the manufacture of articles advanced from first stage to articles finished for use the average for males was $570 and for females $316. Mr. Schoenhof presents tables taken from the census showing the number employed and the wages paid in occupations under these and other heads, all of which go to show very clearly that the tariff has nothing at all to do with making high wages in this country.

Mr. Schoenhof directs attention to the fact that sugar refining, which enjoys a protection equal to four times the entire labor cost of refining, pays an average of only $353 per head in wages, while meat packing, which is not protected at all and which exports largely and competes directly with foreign "pauper labor," pays an average of $556, and wholesale slaughtering pays an average of $609. In the unprotected building trades the range is from $525 to $652, against an average of only $414 for males in the manufactures which are most favored by the tariff laws.—Chicago Herald.

McKinley Bill Did It All.

Misery loves company, and it is a mean consolation to know that the prevailing hard times seem to extend pretty nearly over all the world. This fact, of course, interferes with the theory of the McKinleyites that all our woes are due to the Wilson bill—which hasn't been passed yet—but the McKinleyites have as little regard for facts as they have for logic. However, if they would take the trouble to look at England, where the unemployed are as numerous as they are here; or at Germany, where a beneficient protective tariff has failed to protect, just as it did in this country—they might tune down their howls an octave or two. Even in Spain the distress among the working people is the most acute ever known, and appropriately enough the town of Tarifa, from which we get the word "tariff," has been the scene of bloody and desperate bread riots. It is not likely that the protectionists would see any significance in these facts, but they didn't see the significance of the election of 1892. The logic of events has to be made plain to them, as a joke is communicated to the Scotch understanding—by means of a surgical operation.—Chicago Herald.

The Vengeance to Come.

To the Editor:

The income tax is about all that is left of the Wilson bill. If Senator Hill and his satellites, voting with the Republicans in the Senate, could have that feature dropped the remainder would be just what we have—McKinleyism. The humiliation of the Democratic party would be complete, and Congress could adjourn before the heated term sets in. If Democrats do not remember those two or three Democratic (?) Senators who are standing obstinately in the way of the fulfillment of Democratic pledges and at the proper time consign them to the oblivion of private life, I have no just conception of the temper of Democrats.

J. C. WATKINS.

Suspense Is Killing.

Counseling the Republican Senators to confine their opposition to the tariff bill to reasonable discussion, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Rep.) says: "Business can eventually adjust itself to whatever sort of a change is made in the tariff by the Wilson bill. It is the suspense which kills. If delay would defeat the bill, there would be some excuse for it, but as the most sagacious Republicans and protectionist Democrats concede that the measure will probably be passed some time in this session, it were better that it be passed a month or two hence than four or five months later."

Traitors in the Party.

Of the much-amended tariff bill the St. Louis Post-Dispatch (Dem.) says: "The result is just what was predicted would flow from the plan of dickering with Democratic traitors in committee. These men have been enabled to accomplish their un-Democratic ends without assuming responsibility for the work. They have shouldered the responsibility on the party. They have been able to reap the profits of a treacherous game which was played under cover."

Surrender, Not Compromise.

Compromise is not the word that properly describes what the Democratic majority in the Senate is now invited to do with the tariff bill. Surrender is the only word that fits the situation. And no such abject surrender of a great party, backed by a popular majority of 1,300,000 in the nation, has ever been proposed or contemplated in any previous American Congress.—Baltimore Sun.

Pointed Paragraphs.

IF the Democrats of the country had as much influence at Washington as the trusts which have contributed to campaign funds there would be no trouble about getting real reform and honest government.

AS HAS been remarked before, the Senate Tariff bill is reform with whisky and sugar gout in both feet. It is worse than anything but delay in disposing of it. Vote!

SENATOR BRICE says he is not afraid of the Sugar Trust. Nor is the Sugar Trust afraid of the copper-flipping statesman.

MINERS SHOT DOWN.

FATAL ENCOUNTER BETWEEN STRIKERS AND DEPUTIES.

Five Killed Outright and Others Mortally Wounded—Officers Give the Order to Fire Seemingly Without Provocation—Operators Arm for the Conflict.

Scene of Slaughter.

At daybreak Thursday morning the battle which had been threatening at the Stickle Hollow, Pa., mines of the Washington Coal and Coke Company for the past few days occurred, and as a result at least seven strikers are lying dead and many are seriously wounded.

Shortly before midnight 2,000 strikers assembled at the Stickle Hollow plants, coming from Lucyville, Fayette City, Treport, Allenport and many other points on the Monongahela River. Some of them were armed, but the majority were not. They went into camp near the plant, where they remained until 3 o'clock in the morning, when they adjourned to the public road leading to the works, over which the workmen would have to pass to the pit. Here they formed a line to intercept the workmen and attempt to get them to return home.

According to program they stopped the first delegation of miners and after a little persuasion induced them to join the strike. The men turned back, and about the time they were starting homeward with their dinner buckets the deputies, who were on guard and witnesses to the affair, were ordered to shoot. They fired into the mob at close range, and fired to kill. It was the bloodiest conflict of the present strike, and the awful work of destroying human lives was accomplished in three rapidly fired volleys. The promiscuous revolvers and small arms of the strikers were no match for the Winchesters of the deputies, and the strikers quickly retreated, leaving their dead and dying on the battleground. Many arrests followed the conflict, and the jail is filled to overflowing with the disheartened strikers, who offered comparatively no resistance to the officers of the law. There were eighty deputies, and all continued to shoot as long as the men kept in range. This informant saw four dead in the road and three in the wheat field. The labor leaders, according to reports, are paralyzed at the turn affairs have taken. They refuse to talk about it. It is thought no more attempts will be made to bring out those workmen unless a small army is raised.

A Uniontown dispatch says that efforts are being made by the strikers to prove that the attack of the deputies upon the strikers was unwarrantable, and that they were slaughtered without warning under a galling fire delivered at a distance of fifty feet. But later reports indicate clearly that the encounter was a two-sided battle—the first engagement in which both officers and strikers were shooting to kill. All the dead are strikers. Officers of the coal company say that the strikers served notice upon them that they expected to assault the works. The deputies considered the interference with the workmen as they proceeded to the works the beginning of the assault, and opened fire.

MOBBED BY STRIKERS.

Desperate Illinois Miners Fill Up the Shaft of a Centralia Mine.

A mob of 500 yelling, shouting and desperate Illinois strikers from Duquoin and St. John's mines captured an Illinois Central train early Thursday morning and compelled Engineer Stewart to haul them to Centralia. Arriving there they rushed to the Big Four mine in the northern part of the city, operated by Pottenger & Davis, and wrecked thousands of dollars' worth of property. Thirty non-union men found working in the mine were driven like frightened sheep from the leads, while the strikers made several attempts to do bodily injury. The rage of the leaders of the mob knew no bounds when the workmen escaped, and in a few moments the scarcely less infuriated strikers spread destruction about the mine. Dumpcarts, props, timbers, old machinery and all available loose material were hurled into the shaft, completely filling it. The glass and sash of the buildings were smashed and the mining machinery were specifically rendered useless.

According to a press dispatch, scenes of wanton destruction and intimidation continued until 9 o'clock, when the pillagers formed under leaders and marched to the Odin mines, eight miles away, there to repeat the work of destruction. The local committee made an ineffectual attempt Wednesday to induce the men working in the Pottenger mine to stop work, hence the attack of the strikers. When it was learned in Centralia that the mob was en route in a captured freight train, a special train was made up for Sheriff Helms and his posse at Salem, but the official arrived only to see the marauders marching toward Odin. Quickly recruiting fifty deputies, Sheriff Helms armed his party with Winchesters and 100 rounds of ammunition each at the local armory and left for Odin in a special train. Gov. Altgeld was asked to send the State militia to the scene, but refused to do so until the local authorities had used the means within their power to preserve peace and protect property.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

"Isn't he? Too much of the watch-dog about him, I suppose. As for fast friends, there's not much friendship between Wyatt and me. He's a useful fellow to have about one, that's all. He has served me faithfully, and has got well paid for his services. It's a matter of pounds, shillings, and pence on his side, and a matter of convenience on mine. No doubt Wyatt knows that as well as I do."

"Don't you think friendship on such a basis may be rather an insecure bond?" said Constance, gravely; "and that a man who can consent to profess friendship on such degrading terms is likely to be half an enemy?"

"Oh, I don't go in for such high-flown ethics. Jim Wyatt knows that it's his interest to serve me well, and that it's as much as his life is worth to play me false. Jim and I understand one another perfectly, Constance, you may be sure."

"I am sure that he understands you," answered Constance.

But Gilbert had gone before she had finished her sentence.

Baby, christened Christabel, after the late Lady Clanyarde, was nearly a twelvemonth old, and had arrived, in the opinion of mother and nurse, at the most interesting epoch of babyhood. Her tender cooings, her joyous chucklings, her pretty cuckoo-clucking noises, as of anxious maternal hens calling their offspring, her inarticulate language of broken syllables, which only maternal love could interpret, were an inexhaustible fountain of delight. She was the blithest and happiest of babies, and every object in creation with which she became newly acquainted was a source of rapture to her. The flowers, the birds, the insect life of that balmy pine forest, filled her with delight. The soft blue eyes sparkled with pleasure, the rose-bud lips babbled her wordless wonder, the little feet danced with ecstasy.

"Oh," cried the delighted mother, "if she would always be just like this, my plaything, my darling! Of course, I shall love her just as dearly when she is older—a long-armed, lanky girl in a brown holland pinafore, always inking her fingers and getting into trouble about her lessons—like my sisters and me when we were in the school-room; but she can never be so pretty or so sweet again, can she, Martha?"

"Lor', mum, she'll always be a love," replied the devoted nurse; "and as for her arms being long and her fingers inky, you won't love her a bit less—and I'm sure, I hope she won't be worried with too many lessons, for I do think great folks' children are to be pitied, half their time cooped up in school rooms or stretched out on blackboards, or strumming on the piano, while poor children are running wild in the fields."

"Oh, Martha, how shocking," cried Mrs. Sinclair, pretending to be horrified, "to think that one of my favorite pupils should underrate the value of education."

"Oh, no, indeed, ma'am, I have no such thought. I have often felt what a blessing it is to be able to read a good book and write a decent letter. But I never can think that life was meant to be all education."

"Life is all education, Martha," answered her mistress, with a sigh, "but not the education of grammars and dictionaries. The world is our school and time our schoolmaster. No, Martha, my Christabel shall not be harassed with too much learning. We won't try to make her a paragon. Her life shall be all happiness and freedom, and she shall grow up without the knowledge of care or evil, except the sorrows of others, and these she shall heal; and she shall marry a man she loves, whether he is rich or poor, for I am sure my sweet one would never love a bad man."

"I don't say that, ma'am," reiterated Martha; "looks are so deceiving. I'm sure there was my own cousin, on the father's side, Susan Tadgers, married the handsomest young man in Marchbrook village, and before they'd been two years married he took to drinking, and was so neglectful of himself you wouldn't have known him; and his whiskers, that he used to take such pride in, are all brown and shaggy, like a straw Scotch terrier."

The day after that somewhat unpleasant tete-a-tete between husband and wife, Gilbert Sinclair announced his intention of going back to England for the Leger.

"I have never missed a Leger," he said, as if attendance at that race were a pious duty, like the Commination service on Ash-Wednesday, "and I shouldn't like to miss this race."

"Hadn't we better go home at once, then, Gilbert? I am quite ready to return."

"Nonsense. I've taken this place till the 20th of October, and shall have to pay pretty stiffly for it. I shall come back directly after the Doncaster."

"But it will be a fatiguing journey for you."

"I'd just as soon be sitting in a railway train as anywhere else."

"Does Mr. Wyatt go back with you?"

"No; Wyatt stays at Baden for the next week or so. He pretends to be here for the sake of the water, goes very little to the Kursaal, and lives quietly like a careful old bachelor who wished to mend a damaged constitution, but I should rather think he had some deeper game than water-drinking."

Gilbert departed: and Constance was alone with her child. The weather was delightful—cloudless skies, balmy days, blissful weather for the grape gatherers on the vine-clad slopes that sheltered one side of this quaint old village of Schoenesthal. A river wound through the valley, a deep and rapid stream narrowing in this cleft of the hills, and utilized by some saw-mills in the outskirts of the village, whence at certain seasons rafts of timber were floated down the Rhine.

A romantic road following the course of this river was one of Mrs. Sinclair's favorite drives. There were picturesque old villages and romantic ruins to be explored, and many lovely spots to be shown to baby, who, although inarticulate, was supposed to be appreciative.

Upon the first day of Gilbert's absence Martha Briggs came home from her afternoon promenade with baby, looking flushed and tired, and complaining of sore throat. Constance was quick to take alarm. The poor girl was going to have a fever, perhaps, and must instantly be separated from baby. There was no medical man nearer than Baden, so Mrs. Sinclair sent the groom off at once to that town. She told him to inquire for the best English doctor in the place, or if there was no English practitioner at Baden, for the best German doctor. The moment she had given these instructions, however, it struck her that the man who was not remarkable for intelligence out of his stable, was likely to lose time in making his inquiries, and perhaps get misdirected at last.

"Mr. Wyatt is at Baden," she thought; "I dare say he would act kindly in such an extremity as this, though I have no opinion of his sincerity in a general way. Stop, Dawson," she said to the groom, "I'll give you a note for Mr. Wyatt, who is staying at the Badenscher Hof. He will direct you to the doctor. You will drive to Baden in the pony-carriage, and, if possible, brink the doctor back with you."

Baby was transferred to the care of Melanie Duport, who seemed full of sympathy and kindliness for her fellow-servants, a sympathy which Martha Briggs' surly British temper disdained. Mrs. Sinclair had Martha's bed moved from the nursery into her own dressing-room, where she would be able herself to take care of the invalid. Melanie was ordered to keep strictly to her nursery, and on no account to enter Martha's room.

"But if Martha has a fever, and madame nurses her, this little angel may catch the fever from madame," suggested Melaine.

"If Martha's illness is contagious I shall not nurse her," answered Constance. "I can get a nursing sister from one of the convents. But I like to have the poor girl near me, that, at the worst, she may know that she is not deserted."

"Ah, madame is too good! What happiness to serve so kind a mistress!"

Mr. Wyatt showed himself most benevolently anxious to be useful on receipt of Mrs. Sinclair's note. He made all necessary inquiries at the office of the hotel, and having found out the name of the best doctor in Baden, took the trouble to accompany the groom to the medical man's house, and waited until Mr. Paulton, the English surgeon, was seated in the pony-carriage.

"I shall be anxious to know if Mrs. Sinclair's nurse is seriously ill," said Mr. Wyatt, while the groom was taking his seat "I shall take the liberty to call and inquire in the course of the evening."

"Delighted to give you any information," replied Mr. Paulton, graciously: "I'll send you a line if you like. Where are you staying?"

"At the Badenscher."

"You shall know how the young woman is directly I get back."

"A thousand thanks."

CHAPTER X.

THE CRUEL RIVER.

Mrs. Sinclair's precaution had been in no wise futile. Mr. Paulton pronounced that Martha's symptoms pointed only too plainly to some kind of fever—possibly scarlet fever—possibly typhoid. In any case there could not be too much care taken to guard against contagion. The villa was airy and spacious, and Mrs. Sinclair's dressing-room at some distance from the nursery. There would be no necessity, therefore, Mr. Paulton said, for the removal of the child to another house. He would send a nursing sister from Baden—an experienced woman—to whose care the sick-room might be safely confided.

The sister came—a middle-aged woman—in the somber garb of her order, but with a pleasant, cheerful face, that well became her snow-white head-gear. She showed herself kind and dexterous in nursing the sick girl, but before she had been three days in the house, Martha, who was now in a raging fever, took a dislike to the nurse, and raved wildly about this black-robed figure at her bedside. In vain did the sister endeavor to reassure her. To the girl's wandering wits that foreign tongue seemed like the gibberish of some unholy goblin. She shrieked for help, and Mrs. Sinclair ran in from an adjoining room to see what was amiss. Martha was calmed and comforted immediately by the sight of her mistress; and from that time Constance devoted herself to the sick-room and shared the nurse's watch.

This meant separation from Christabel, and that was a hard trial for the mother, who had never yet lived a day apart from her child; but Constance bore this bravely for the sake of the faithful girl—too thankful that her darling had escaped the fever which had so strangely stricken the nurse. The weather continued glorious, and baby seemed quite happy with Melanie, who roamed about with her charge all day, or went for long drives in the pony carriage under the care of the faithful Dawson, who was a pattern of sobriety and steadiness, and incapable of flirtation.

Mr. Wyatt rode over from Baden every other day to inquire about the nurse's progress—an inquiry which he might just as easily have made of the doctor in Baden—and this exhibition of good feeling on his part induced Constance to think that she had been mistaken in her estimate of his character.

"The Gospel says 'Judge not,'" she thought, "and yet we are always sitting in judgment upon one another. Perhaps, after all, Mr. Wyatt is as kind-hearted as his admirers think him, and I have done wrong in being prejudiced against him. He was Cyprian's friend too, and always speaks of him with particular affection."

Constance remembered that scene in the morning-room at Davenant. It was one of those unpleasant memories which do not grow fainter with the passage of years. She had been inclined to suspect James Wyatt of a malicious intention in his sudden announcement of Sir Cyprian's death—the wish to let her husband see how strong a hold her first love still had upon her heart. He, who had been Cyprian Davenant's friend and confidante, was likely to have known something of that earlier attachment, or at least to have formed a shrewd guess at the truth.

"Perhaps I have suspected him wrongly in that affair," Constance thought, now that she was disposed to think more kindly of Mr. Wyatt. "His mention of Sir Cyprian might have been purely accidental."

Four or five times in every day Melaine Duport brought the baby Christabel to the grass-plot under the window of Mrs. Sinclair's bedroom, and there were tender greetings, between mother and child, baby struggling in nurse's grasp and holding up her chubby arms as if she would fain have embraced her mother even at that distance. These interviews were a sorry substitute for the long happy hours of closest companionship which mother and child had enjoyed at Schoenesthal, but Constance bore the trial bravely. The patient was going on wonderfully well, Mr. Paulton said; the violence of the fever was considerably abated. It had proved a light attack of the scarlet fever, and not typhoid, as the doctor had feared it might have proved. In a week the patient would most likely be on the high-road to recovery, and then Mrs. Sinclair could leave her entirely to the sister's care, since poor Martha was now restored to her right mind, and was quite reconciled to that trustworthy attendant.

"And then, said Mr. Paulton, "I shall send you to Baden for a few days, before you go back to baby, and you must put aside all clothes that you have worn in the sick-room, and I think we shall escape all risk of infection."

This was a good hearing. Constance languished for the happy hour when she should be able to clasp that rosy babbling child to her breast once more. Madamoiselle Duport had been a marvel of goodness throughout this anxious time.

"I shall never forget how good and thoughtful you have been, Melanie," said Constance, from her window, as the French girl stood in the garden below, holding baby up to be adored before setting out for her morning ramble.

"But it is a pleasure to serve Madame," shrieked Melanie, in her shrill treble.

"Monsieur returns this evening," said Constance, who had just received a hurried scrawl from Gilbert, naming the hour of his arrival; "you must take care that Christabel looks the prettiest."

"Ah, but she is always ravishingly pretty. If she were only a boy, Monsieur would idolize her."

"Where are you going this morning, Melanie?"

"To the ruined castle on the hill."

"Do you think that is a safe place for baby?"

"What could there be safer? What peril can madame forsee?"

"No," said Constance, with a sigh. "I suppose she is as safe there as anywhere else, but I am always uneasy when she is away from me."

"But madame's love for this little one is a passion!"

Melanie departed with her charge, and Constance went back to the sick-room to attend her patient while the sister enjoyed a few hours' comfortable sleep.

One o'clock was Christabel's dinner time, and Christabel's dinner was a business of no small importance in the mother's mind. One o'clock came, and there was no sign of Melanie and her charge, a curious thing, as Melanie was methodical and punctual to a praiseworthy degree, and was provided with a neat little silver watch to keep her acquainted with the time.

Two o'clock struck, and still no Melanie. Constance began to grow uneasy, and sent scouts to look for the nurse and child. But when 3 o'clock came and baby had not yet appeared, Constance became seriously alarmed, and put on her hat hastily, and went out in search of the missing nurse. She would not listen to the servants who had just returned from their fruitless quest, and who begged her to let them go in fresh directions while she waited the result at home.

"No," she said; "I could not rest. I must go myself. Send to the police, any one, the proper authorities. Tell them my child is lost. Let them send in every direction. You have been to the ruins?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And there was no one there? You could hear nothing?"

"No, ma'am," answered Dawson, the groom; "the place was quite lonesome. There was nothing but grasshoppers chirping."

"OLD NANCY."

An Illicit Still that Has Been Operated for Thirty Years.

The capture of an illicit still operated near Sinking Mountain by Deputy Collector Brown recalls a story of long-continued defiance of law, says an Elberton (Ga.) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The still was bought in in 1858, and was put to use on the plantation of the late George Dye. When the war opened it passed into the hands of a Habersham County whisky dealer, who did a rushing business for four years. There was no railroad at the time within 100 miles of this section, and the liquor made by "Old Nancy," as the still was fondly named, was the favorite trade not only throughout northeast Georgia, but crossed the lines into North and South Carolina. Once the still was embargoed by the officers of Habersham in 1863 because of the demoralization it created among the small boys, who with the old men were about all there was left.

With the restoration of United States authority "Old Nancy" became contraband. Revenue prisoners brought before United States commissioners would tell about how "Old Nancy" was prospering, but try as they would the officers never could capture the still. When the distillers of one community found themselves too closely pressed they would run the still over the mountain or down the creeks to where companions in lawlessness would secure possession of it, and they would run it until compelled to do likewise. This was the still in quest of which Lieut. McIntyre of the United States army was killed in Gilmore County in 1875. Subsequently it was run back east, being operated on Warwoman creek in Rabun County for several years.

Of late the officers have heard that this will-o'-the-wisp, which they have been following for thirty years, was in operation in a secluded region near Sinking Mountain. Collector Brown, with an armed posse, successfully located the spot one night recently during a violent rainstorm. The moonshiners fled, giving the officers the opportunity of destroying the whole plant.

A Useful Tree.

The cocoa palm is the most useful tree on earth. Fresh water is procured from the nut before it is ripe, a single sample often containing three or four pounds of clear water, almost pure, save for a little sugar; the nut, when ripe, is very nutritious; the milk from the ripe nut is a good substitute for that of the cow; the young buds make good cabbage and greens; wine is made from the sap and flower stalks, and its fermentation and distillation produces vinegar and brandy; the nutshells furnish utensils; and from the fibers are made all sorts of clothing, textile fabrics, and even the sails, ropes, and other cordage of ships; its juices furnish ink, and its leaves pens and paper.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

DUKE OF WELLINGTON

CAREER OF ENGLAND'S GREATEST GENERAL.

The Victories Won by Him Conferred a Crown of Glory Upon His Country—Honors Without Measure Were Showered Upon Him.

Napoleon's Conqueror.

The time may perhaps come when, war being a thing of the distant past, the successful general, through whose efforts a country is victorious over its enemies, will not receive the applause and praise of men. At present, however, we are far from this state, and no man now receives greater honor than he who has led a winning fight. Of men who in modern times have been thus distinguished one of the greatest was Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington. Certainly he was the greatest soldier England has ever produced and one of her finest men.

Arthur Wellesley was born May 1, 1769, in Ireland. From early life he was destined for the career of a soldier and was given a military education in France at the College of Angers. In 1787 he entered the English army and, a few years later, first saw actual service in the Duke of York's army in Holland. In 1796 he went to India with a company of soldiers under his command, where his brother, the Marquis Wellesley, arrived shortly after as Governor General.

The First Victory.

It was here that the young soldier won his first victory. It was during the Maharatta war, and with only a handful of men he came across a large force of the enemy. He completely overcame them, thus securing the brilliant victory of Assage. The victory of Argaum followed and the fort of Gawulghur, supposed to be almost impregnable, also capitulated to Wellesley. For this he received honors at home, was made Knight Commander of the Bath and Chief Secretary of Ireland. He also won a seat in the House of Commons and was publicly thanked by that body for his services.

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

The next scene of this great soldier's triumphs was Spain and Portugal, whither he went to assist in the expulsion of the French. The battles of Vimiera and Talavera freed Portugal from the French dominion and Wellesley now turned his attention to Spain. During this campaign he won the battle of Salamanca over Soult, one of his most brilliant victories, and finally pursued the French army into France. He received several titles from the English government for these victories, the last being Duke of Wellington, and large grants of money were made him. Again he was formally thanked by Parliament and it may be here noted that twelve times during his career was this special honor paid him. As a crowning glory after his Spanish campaign Wellington was made field marshal of England.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

The Field of Waterloo.

In July, 1814, Wellington was appointed ambassador to France, and in that capacity went to the Congress of Vienna. While this body was sitting Napoleon escaped from Elba, and the sessions were broken up. It seemed probable that Napoleon would go to Belgium, and to this country's defense proceeded an army under Wellington and one from Prussia under Blucher. The battles of Ligny and Quatre Bras were succeeded, June 18, 1815, by the great engagement of Waterloo. It was undoubtedly the greatest battle in modern times. The invincible Frenchman and the undaunted Englishmen met to try conclusions, and on the issue of that contest, it is not too much to say, hung the fate of the world. To recapitulate the events of that memorable day, to show how the French forces were gradually forced to yield until victory was no longer possible, would take too long in this place. There was no question that the victory was in the hands of the English and Prussians, and that the French were no longer to be considered the conquerors of the world.

After the battle Wellington marched on Paris and there, at the request of the allied sovereigns, remained for three years in command of the army of occupation. Honors without measure were showered on Wellington by the English Government; large grants of money, an estate, and various high offices were presented to him, while the allied forces gave him medals, decorations and orders.

Wellington's Political Life.

In 1827 Wellington's political life in England began, and early in the following year George IV. called on him to form a ministry. Though a member of the Tory party, it was to Wellington's credit that he was the first English premier to yield anything to the Liberal side. The test and corporation acts, which bore hardly against non-members of the Established Church, were repealed and the removal of Catholic disabilities, another outrageous measure, was suggested. Wellington, for all his liberalism, would not give his consent to reform Parliament, and this caused a strong feeling against him and he was forced to resign. In 1834 he was again offered the premiership, but declined, though he accepted the foreign portfolio under Sir Robert Peel. He resigned this office in a few months and henceforward took no prominent part in the civil government of the country.

WALMER CASTLE.
[A country house of the Duke of Wellington, where his death occurred.]

The rest of Wellington's life was passed less before the eyes of the people. He held many distinguished posts to be sure and his advocacy of the bill repealing the corn laws in 1843 did much to pass the measure, but still he sought privacy even more and more. September 14, 1852, he was seized by an apoplectic fit, very suddenly, and in a few hours he was dead. All England sought to honor him in his funeral, which was a most imposing pageant. His body was carried through the London streets to St. Paul's Cathedral and it was interred by the side of Lord Nelson, England's great admiral.

A picture of the field of Waterloo in its present state is given in this page. It has several monuments upon it, commemorative of the great battle. In the center is the Belgium Lion, 200 feet high, erected on the spot where the Prince of Orange was wounded during the fight. It is made of metal from captured French cannon. The obelisk is erected to Hanoverian officers of the German legion and opposite to it stands a pillar in memory of Gen. Gordon, who was among the English in the battle. These latter monuments stand on the original level of the ground which has been considerably lowered that the mound of the lion may be built up.

The Negro's Jack.

Few white people know what a "jack" is, as understood by the negroes, and perhaps the custom of carrying a "jack" is not popular with the negroes of this section of the country; but in the South Atlantic States, it is said, you can hardly find a negro without one. A negro was found dead, hanging in the woods near Charlotte, N. C., the other day, and the first question that the coroner asked was "Where is his jack?" At this question the negroes, who had congregated around, fell back as though a bomb were about to explode, and the white men present asked what it meant. "I will show you," said the physician, and feeling in the dead man's pocket he brought out a tin box. When this was opened it was found to contain a snake's head, a scorpion, a bit of iron, a rusty key, a bunch of "witch's yarn," and a package of salt. The doctor said that this was the jack, and that it was used by the negroes to "conjure" their enemies with and throw a spell over them, and that the majority of the negroes held the jack in mortal terror. To show its power, the doctor offered to give any of the negroes present a dollar to put the jack into his pocket, but none of them would touch it. He took it home and tried the negroes in the city with it. He put it in his back yard and says that it will be a better guard for his chickens and woodpile than any dog that he could get.—New Orleans Picayune.

Gets His Own Price.

Though Mr. F. Marion Crawford probably earns more money by his pen than any other living writer he is perhaps not so well paid in proportion to the amount of work that he does as is Mr. T. B. Aldrich. As a matter of fact, Mr. Aldrich always puts his own price on his work, and he is always sure of getting it. One magazine of New York City takes everything that he sends it. He simply writes the price in a corner of the MSS., and it is paid. What a delightful aspect of literary success this presents! A few weeks ago an editor wrote to Mr. Aldrich: "Won't you please drop a poem into our slot and draw out as much money as you want for it?" Mr. Aldrich dropped a dozen lines, as directed, and drew out $30."—New York Recorder.

"I WAS towld to make yez stand 'round," said the Irish foreman to his gang, "an' the next wan I see doin' a shtroke av work, he'll be bounced."—Grip.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 31, 1894.

CANADA has a "flower day" for setting out flowers, etc. It is May 26.

CORN is now the most valuable crop in the country as shown by statistics.

HON. O. L. BALLOU is now being urged by many Lagrange county democrats as a candidate for congress.

REPUBLICANS in second Kansas district had taken 861 ballots last Thursday, without a choice of a new candidate for congress.

COXEY was nominated for congress by the populists of the Massillon destrict last week. He says he will run if they let him make his own platform.

THE series of hailstorms and other disturbances reached as far south as the Ohio river and all the northern part of Ohio was hit in one place or another.

THE FLOODS destroyed several trout ponds in Wisconsin, and valuable young trouts were washed away by the tens of thousands. The loss will be not less than $30,000.

STEUBEN county papers report a candidate for county office on the republican ticket, who bases his claims on the fact that he voted for Lincoln when he was only 18. In other words, on the fact that he committed a serious crime.

KRYDER the Steuben county farmer who was robbed of $130 at his home about a year ago, had a similar experience last week. This time two masked men knocked at his door, and wanted to get in. He saw their masks, and refused to let them in, and ran out the back door to escape. They caught him and made him give up $20 and a lot of notes. He lives alone.

REPUBLICAN papers sneer at the efforts a democratic congress is making, to reduce expenses. They say that in spite of this, there is still not money enough coming in to support the government. The reason there is not money enough is because the McKinley law was made, not to raise revenue, but to protect the wealthy. People are paying the wealthy but not the government.

ARE farmers yet satisfied with the high prices brought them by the McKinley law which "protects" wheat 25 cents a bushel? We have often proved to farmers that a tariff does not raise the price of wheat, for the reason that none is brought into this country. But we send many millions abroad, and would gladly send more. But these very tariff laws have prejudiced other nations against us, so they prefer to buy elsewhere.

THE Butler Review, generally fair and correct, is "quite a good deal off" in its statement that "the anti McNagny democrats at Auburn made an effort to elect delegates." No effort was made, whatever. We have not been able to find a man who spoke of such a thing before the announcements were made in the caucus. On the other hand we ran across men who were drumming up McNagny men and the result shows they got them to come. Robbins had been off on the road several days and did not know his name would be up till it was called. We do not attech any importance to the matter, however, one way or the other, only we wish to set the Review right, as the statement is misleading.

COAL miners in various sections are on a strike and coal is getting so scarce that in many instances factories have had to close for want of fuel. Not only has mining been stopped, but the strikers have prevented the moving of cars loaded with coal, and at many points in Illinois, have sidetracked trains that were hauling cars of coal, taking away the coal cars and letting the others go on. In this, way they hope to make coal scarce, and so compel the mine owners to agree to their terms. In Illinois, the militia have been called out, and many of the rioters have been captured, and some put into jail for stealing trains. The men making the trouble are mostly Italians and Hungarians. When such riff-raff try to run things in this country, it is time to keep them out. They have quit work themselves and are using violence to keep others from working.

AUBURN'S COMMENCEMENT.

The annual commencement of the Auburn High Schools took place in the M. E. church last Friday evening, May 25, as previously announced in the COURIER. There was a large audience in attendance, as there always is, for Auburn has a host of people who take a lively interest in her schools. The large audience room was tastefully decorated with flags and flowers, while overhead, across the front of the platform, hung suspended the class motto, "Thus Ends Our First Lesson." Everybody understood and appreciated this, and we feel like complimenting the class on their good judgment in using our own language. United States English is as good, as concise, and as effective as United States Latin, and so many more understand it.

The graduates were only three in number, George C. Boland, his sister Jessie B. Boland, and Clara E. Stafford.

The first on the program was the overture by Borst's Orchestra, and this was followed by prayer by Mr. Wooton, a very appropriate prayer for this occasion Mrs. Garwood sang a solo, nicely given, as is always the case with her music, either vocal or instrumental. Then came the first oration, that of Jessie Boland. "The Problem of Life" was a combined subject for the class, her part being "The Statement." She spoke easily and with much grace, and won applause at the close. Dr. Buchtel came next with a violin solo. All enjoy the Doctor's exquisite music on the violin. George Boland followed, having for his part of the subject "The Solution" He spoke earnestly and in a business-like way, growing out of the embarrassment he seemed to feel at first, and by the time he closed showed a fine command of himself and his subject. M. B. Hastings sang a splendid solo, and was followed by Clara Stafford, whose part was "The Conclusion." She had excellent thoughts and delivered her oration in good style. Like Miss Boland her manner was pleasing and won friends from all the audience. Borst's orchestra here gave another selection which was of unusual interest and brilliancy, even for that accomplished corps of musicians. Then came the presentation of diplomas. Mr. Harrison always speaks feelingly to the young people who have been under his charge so long and from whom he is about to part. He never did better than on this occasion. It was unfortunate that as he drew his eloquent talk to a close, the too frequent thing happened—the lights went out. Many a nervous man would have broken down under such embarrassing circumstances. Not so with Mr. Harrison. His admirable self-control served him well, and everything was held in check till a lamp was brought and he finished his remarks. It was a queer, yet not unpleasant tableau. The great audience in semi-darkness, listening with interest and watching closely the little, statue-like group at the front—three pupils and their dignified, earnest teacher—as the parting words were given, and the priceless diploma bestowed on each. There were no "honors," that is, the colleges have agreed not to bestow any more scholarships in this way, but Mr. Harrison said they would all have been taken by George Boland. There was then a fine song by the quartet, Messrs. Scott, Rafter, Coats and Widney and the Twelfth Annual Commencement of the Auburn Schools was over. We cannot help giving a thought of regret just here, that of the 1096 children of school age now in the town of Auburn, all entitled to free school privileges, only three should be found in the graduating class. One in 365! How can we create a better sentiment in our school patrons and children?

Where Are We At?

(Communicated)

The democrats of Garret supposed that when "Boss" Bicknell got Miner to come here and establish a republican paper that there would be no other position left for the Clipper to pursue except to be a democratic organ, but we have noticed continuously the most favorable mention possible from week to week, of Bicknell and his candidacy in that paper, which leads us to believe that no matter who secures the nomination on our ticket that paper and its friends will aid Bicknell in every way possible, and as a result the Garret Republican will get the wind as it does in the city printing. We do not care how much republican patronage our party papers get so long as it is done in a legitimate manner, and the interests of our party served, but we have it in holy writ that "no man can serve two masters" and we have a vivid demonstration of that axiom in the fact that a few ringsters in the two parties here have been and are monopolizing and manipulating the acts of both to suit their own personal ends.

Will Garrett democracy be in line for a county, state and national campaign if these tricksters are to rule? Will the old method of trading votes here be renewed and the county fight be waged at other points in the county so that the live issues of the campaign will be lost and nothing but a wild scrimmage for office on individual lines be the result? We have a supreme contempt for men in either party that will sacrifice every principle upon which the party rests in such a manner.

A GARRETT DEMOCRAT.

Another DeKalb Boy Heard From.

Campbell & Fetter, the popular merchants at Kendallville, are going to start a bank to take the place of the First Nationol Bank. Mr. Mitchell, of the First National, wishes to go out of business, and will wind up the affairs of the institution he has so many years controlled. He will pay in full, every claim against him. Then, his cashier, an able and experienced man, will take the same job of Campbell & Fetter. This reminds us that Mr. Fetter is a DeKalb boy, a son of Jacob Fetter, of Wilmington township, and brother of J. S. Fetter, now a boot and shoe dealer in Edgerton. DeKalb county has no reason to be ashamed of a large number of her sons.

The County Convention.

As the date for the democratic county convention draws near, the rival candidates very naturally become more interested and sometimes a little nervous and irritable. It may not be possible to prevent this, but it should be kept in check. Several good men ask for the same place, but only one can get it. The successful man wants to have the help and good will of all of his rivals, after the convention is over. To make sure of this, he must treat them all with fairness. There should be no advantage taken during the canvass for the nomination. No combines should be made, and if any candidate is so unfair as to get up such a scheme, the delegates should know it and fix up a slate for themselves. In fact, the delegates should be guided only by a desire to benefit the party and the county. They should not vote for or against any candidate merely because some one has asked them to do so, or because they are a friend or an enemy to the man under consideration. Let the delegates meet in convention, and nominate a ticket to suit themselves, not to suit someone else. Let them prove that they are capable of doing something more than merely to meet and ratify a ticket already put together by interested parties. Possible there may be no such state or combine, made ready for their acceptance. But it will be a good example set for future conventions if the delegates that meet on June 9, drop all other considerations and select for us a ticket composed of the best, and therefore of the strongest men. Such a ticket will be one the people will approve, and their approval means a triumphant election. DeKalb county is democratic by 300. Why should it elect a single republican officer? It will not, unless the delegates at the convention fail to do their duty.

Died.

At the home of his parents, in Butler township, Lester Erie Ballentine. He was born July 28, 1893, and died May 25, 1894, at the age of 9 months and 27 days. The funeral was at the church at Cedar Creek, Sunday, May 27, and the interment at the Emery cemetery. Rev. W. L. Meese conducted the services.

Frank Confession.

Robert Chambers, the large hearted and honest publisher, one night appeared at his club after a short absence, and there delighted at least one member—J. C. Jeaffreson—by a deliciously frank expression of opinion. Jeaffreson began the conversation by asking:

"What have you been doing since I saw you last?"

"I have joost been spending the time in Scotland with my ain people, and for my diversion I have been reading yet again Scott's novels. I went deliberately through the whole lot o' them. What do you think o' a mon o' my years spending the greater part of the long holidays in sic a way?"

"It was in that way that I first made acquaintance with the Waverly novels," was the enthusiastic reply, "in a broiling hot summer and autumn. How you must have enjoyed yourself!"

"Weel, weel, I canna say," returned the Scottish publisher and man of letters. Then he looked warily up and down the room to make sure of not being hard by any brother Scotsman and continued:

"I canna say I enjoyed the buiks so much as I did in my younger time. I would not say it aloud in Adinbro, but weel you believe me when I say that Sir Walter isn't what he used to be to me? To tale you the truth," he added, lowering his voice almost to a whisper—"to tale you the truth, I found him rather prosy! Aye, but dinna be laughing, or the lads there will be asking what I said to you. It is the truth that I tale you. I moost conface I fund him at times a leetle prosy!"—Youth's Companion.

Figuring It Out.

A schoolmaster had been severely correcting one of his boys and finished by saying: "Now sit down and write a letter to your parents telling them how much you are taught here and how little you profit therefrom. I should be ashamed to tell them." The boy cried a good deal and then wrote:

DEAR FATHER—I am very stupid, though there is more to be learnt here than anywhere. Twice two's four—four boys go to one bed—six beds make one attic, and four attics make one well ventilated and appointed sleeping dormitory. One round of bread and butter makes one breakfast, and every tea makes its own supper.

"This time," said the master, "we will—er—overlook your conduct, and you needn't send that note." (He had been overlooking.)—London Tit-Bits.

The Making of Shakespeare.

"An old crippled woman whom I knew in Leamington, England," writes a correspondent, "used often to amuse me by her original ideas and speeches. Speaking of Shakespeare one day, I said I would like much to visit Stratford-upon-Avon. 'Law!' said she, with much scorn, 'who was he? On'y a plowboy, and he was never thought nothin of till them Americans came and took him up.'"—Boston Transcript.

The Flag of the Suffrage Cause.

Mrs. Clara B. Colby, the editor of The Woman's Tribune of Washington, in her address before the suffrage convention, happening to mention the colors of the Woman Suffrage association—the narrow orange ribbon worn on the breast of every delegate—explained the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the emblem.

The women of the state of Washington, on the first election day when their newly acquired franchise was in force, each, without respect to the political party with which she cast her ballot, displayed orange colors somewhere about her throat or bonnet in acknowledgement of the obligation to Judge Orange Jacobs, whose efforts were largely instrumental in securing for women their right to vote in the state. The right had since been rescinded by judicial decision, but throughout the country Judge Jacobs' services are commemorated by the orange ribbon. The flag of the suffrage cause—an orange star on a blue field—was first raised on that election day in Washington, and stars have been added as Colorado and Wyoming have also acknowledged the worth of women's opinion in political affairs.

THE AUBURN JEWELER

Wishes to call your attention to the fact that now is the time to buy

Watches, Clocks and Jewelry.

Factors have been making cut after cut. They certainly have reached the low water mark and you may depend upon it that as soon as times pick up prices will go up, so don't wait longer. Remember he has all kinds of sewing machine needles, oil, etc.

Political Notes.

Jacob Walborn, whose name is announced to-day for commissioner of the southwest district, is too well known to our people to need much introduction. He has filled various positions with the highest degree of ability, and has served several years as justice of the peace, in which difficult office he has won the respect of attorneys and all who have had dealings with him. He is an able and successful business man, and if nominated and elected, he would make a most valuable commissioner.

Won't Take Their Money.

People who have money to invest do not seem afraid of county orders. May 3 Treasurer Sawvel made a call for all orders dated up to June 10, 1892, and interest on these stopped May 5. Several thousand dollars of these orders have not been brought in, the holders preferring to hold them without interest rather than take and hold the cash. Several parties brought their orders to the treasurer, but when they found they could not buy any new orders they put their old orders back into their pocket books, though they knew there would be no interest on them. May 24 Mr. Sawvel made another call, only three weeks after the previous call had been made. This last call was to include all orders dated up to No. 360 of series M, or 127 orders more than called for in the last call. Interest on these stopped May 26, or last Saturday. The money is waiting for these orders, but we presume many of them will not be presented. This does not look as if the county would go into the hands of a receiver. The Waterloo Press should revamp its alleged joke.

Common School Graduation.

The common school graduating exercises, as now arranged, will be held at the usual places on dates as follows:

Town of Butler	May 21
Concord	May 24
Newville	June 14
Troy	" 15
Butler and Keyser (Joint)	" 16
Franklin	" 18
Stafford	" 19
Grant and Union (Joint)	" 20
Ashley and Smithfield (Joint)	" 21
Richland	" 22
Fairfield	" 23
Jackson	" 28

There are 91 common school graduates in the county as follows: Town of Butler, 24; Ashley, 4; Butler tp., 5; Jackson, 3; Concord, 22; Newville, 5; Stafford, 3; Union, 1; Grant, 5; Richland, 4; Fairfield, 6; Smithfield, 1; Franklin, 4; Troy, 3; Keyser, 1.

ABOUT thirty ships laden with coal from England, are expected at New York this week. This import is needed because our own mines are on a strike. It will cost about $4 80 a ton. It would be a good thing now for consumers if this coal could come in free.

THE Press says "the farmers never received anything but kicks and cuffs from the democratic party." Look out there, that ten commandment business bids you stop. In this state where democrats have had a chance to make a law, they have saved the people of each county at least $2,000 a year on school books, a law that all republican politicians and especially the editor of the Press fought bitterly. The democrats made a law to tax railroads and telegraph and telephone companies so as to make them pay up nearly to what farmers have to pay, and so gradually relieve the farmers of some of this burden. But the Press, and all republicans fought against the law and are still fighting it. And so we might go on indefinitely. The facts are the Press is ignorant, for we hate to believe he would tell a whopper wilfully.

Indiana Tax Law Constitutional.

The U. S. supreme court has declared the Indiana assessment and tax law constitutional. It was a case appealed by railroads that did not want to pay their tax. Now they will have to pay it all. This will put a large sum of money into the state treasury, as well as into the treasuries of many of the counties. This law was enacted by the democratic legislature of 1889, and intended to help farmers and the people at large, by compelling corporations to pay their just share of taxes. But the republican members voted against it, and their papers have fought it and are still fighting it. Yet the Press says the democrats never made a law to help the people.

Elected Officers.

The DeKalb County Farmers' Fire Insurance Company met May 26 in Auburn, pursuant to the call of its officers, and elected a new board. This was the regular yearly meeting. The choice made was: R. S. S. Reed, for president; A. B Walsworth, vice-president; S. Kutzner, secretary; James McClellan, treasurer; James Provines, actuary. The list is a good one, as all are experienced business men. It is especially complimentary to Mr. Reed to be again chosen president, as he occupied this responsible position for six years, the first six years of the organization of the company.

The Laporte Herald says: General Randall is an old hand at the hat collection business. He used to be a spiritulistic lecturer, going around the country speaking for what he could collect at the door or at the close of meeting So long as twenty years ago he was heard by some of our citizens at Michigan City, where he spoke one or more times on spiritualism. He is a natural born tramp.

There was a frost Monday morning, May 28, visible to who got up early enough. The weather had been warm in the forenoon of the day before, but in the afternoon there had come up the usual shower, followed by cold. The damage done by the frost is not reported as very bad, though some tender vegetables were hurt, and some low ground corn that was up.

Mrs. T. C. Ford reached home Sunday evening after a three weeks trip in the east. After her visit at Washington she attended the National meeting of Women's Clubs, at Philadelpha, she being the delegate from the L. L. C. in Auburn. Then she went to New York City and from there to Albany, where she has relatives. On her way home she took a trip to Niagara Falls, and altogether had a delightful time.

The Jackson township S. S. Institute will be held at the Junction next Saturday. There will be the usual interesting program, consisting of discussions on important topics, speaking, singing, etc. In the evening there will be a mass meeting of the S. S. children. A lady from Garrett will address them, after which the little ones will give a short program. Everybody invited to attend both day and evening.

Kansas bids fair to be an oil producing country. We received last week from S. H. Snyder. at Neodesha, Kansas a paper of recent date, in which is given a long list of oil wells, with a few gas wells, that have been put down in that vicinity. A few are failures, as often happens in any oil or gas belt, but in the main the supply seems to be abundant. It will prove a great advantage in giving the people there a new fuel, if in no other way. They have to drill about 900 feet, and the quality of oil is claimed to be superior to that in the Ohio oil fields, but not equal to the oil of Pennsylvania.

The Garrett Organ of Rape and Seduction complains that we mis-spelled some names of delegates. Possibly we did. There were 277 names These were all collected by the COURIER and furnished to the rest of the county, But the "Organ" did not publish the names of even the delegates in its own precinct. But following its usual plan, it may still copy them from the COURIER and publish them as news the next week after the convention.

In these panicky times, when money is tight. the people crave and yearn for the sensational. Ralph W. Cobb, manager of the Auburn Cyclery, has announced that he will dispose of all chain wheels at once. He has other projects in view and must have more room. Mr. Cobb is accustomed to doing a lively business, and, as has been remarked by him, "it is hard to squeeze blood from a turnip," he will now proceed to perform that clever little trick. It might be inferred from the above that right now would be a rare opportunity to buy one of those matchless high grade wheels. They are going this week. Every one of them. Many are already sold.

There was an alarm of fire Saturday morning at about 4 o'clock, that called out the fire department. It was caused by a small blaze that started in Askew's hack barn on east Ninth street. It was quickly got under control. About six, the same morning an alarm was sent in on account of a blaze in an alley up at the north end of town. The fire company ran west under a mistake as to directions. But no work was needed, as the fire was in some rubbish the owner of the lot was burning.

Court.

Monday the case came up against young Mays living beyond Waterloo, for stealing. It appears he had brought to Bassett, the jeweler, a watch charm to be mended, and while the article was there, a lady Mrs. E. H. Armstrong claimed to own it, saw it there and recognized it. She afterwards got the young man to meet her there, and he gave up the charm and some other articles. When the case came up in court Monday, it was settled.

The next case was one against Emmet Refner ror violation of the liquor laws. He was fined by the jury. The case that followed this, was Kiplinger and Imhoff, of Waterloo against S R. Rickel. This was to settle an account, Rickel had bought lumber etc, at their planing mill, and claimed he had settled for it, but the firm claimed he owed them $115. Blair and J. E. Rose appeared for defendant and John F. Shuman for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs got judgment for $93.

Florence Frick was divorced from Franklin Frick, and Callie Penick from James Penick. P. D. West gets the Eagle Iron Works real estate for $600 and other parties have paid $239 for the personal property.

R. D. Tefft was given a judgment against Catharine Munger of $51 on an old note. Phillips appeared for Mrs. Munger, but she wished to make her own plea and the court allowed it. She made a good speech, but it was an unusual thing to hear a woman address the jury.

Caught Fire in the Court House.

Monday morning the court house had a narrow escape from destruction. Miss Shilling, the deputy clerk, was at work before court began, and suddenly discovered that smoke was issuing from under the radiator in the attorneys' room, the court room office of the clerk opening out into that room. She called Geo. M. Henderson, the court reporter, and he had the presence of mind to lift up the water tank that stands in that room, and putting it over the heater, opened the faucet and let the water run down under the fire, and soon put it out. No other damage was done, but had it happened while no one was on that floor the chances are it would have got a dangerous start before the officers in the rooms below would have known it, and the building might have been destroyed.

THERE is a noticeable absence from Rudyard Kiplings' new book of animal stories of an autobiographical chapter on the hog.

A YOUTH at Paterson, N. J., sneezed his shoulder out of joint. That boy will try to blow his nose some day and blow his brains out.

GREAT BRITAIN will have to appropriate a few more kingdoms in Africa to make up for that Canada coil that is tumbling into the river.

IN Philadelphia a poker player fell dead upon perceiving that there were four aces in his hand, and a jack-pot on the table. Such is the irony of fate.

IT is reassuring and at the same time somewhat disquieting in these hard times to learn that Henry Irving has a higher opinion of America than ever before.

THE Minister of Defense, of Victoria, Australia, is named Robert Reid. Wonder if he was the little chap who said he would never use tobacco because it was a filthy weed?

"IT does not pay to fight Satin with sin," says the Buffalo Express. It hardly pays to fight satin with anything, especially if there is a handsome, sharp witted woman enveloped in it.

EXPERIENCE for many years in taking man in at church bazaars and like affairs will enable women easily to comply with the suggestion made at the Woman's Federation at Philadelphia to take him in as a member of a woman's club.

ANARCHIST HENRI, in Paris, develops into the most bloodthirsty of his ilk yet caught. The inevitable loss of his head will not constitute much of a punishment. Anybody ought to be glad to lose such a head.

ANY Western bachelor who would like a nice young widow for a wife should communicate with Mrs. Mende, of Baltimore. Mrs. Mende's first husband took poison, and her second husband blew his brains out, but Mrs. Mende is as sweet and winning as ever. It takes lots of trouble to break the spirits of some women.

A KENTUCK umpire, whose decision in a ball game precipitated a row between the rival players, went behind the backstop and blew his brains out with a revolver. He was a wise umpire and a considerate one. He not only saved the crowd the sin and trouble of trampling him to death, but saved himself the indignity and discomfort.

IN all the expressions of sympathy evoked by the burning of Talmage's Tabernacle no one seems to have thought of poor Uncle Russell Sage, who had $125,000 invested in the building, and who will now be obliged to forego his noonday lunch of an apple and a cheese sandwich and satisfy his hunger by looking in Delmonico's window.

A NEW YORK woman left an estate of $1,000,000 and stipulated that all if it should be devoted to the building of a mausoleum to hold her disarded clay. Relatives are going to make a contest, and for once, at least, will have public sympathy. If they can wrest the fortune from the corpse they could do much for science by having the corpse itself turned over to inquisitive surgeons, who might locate the bump of egotism, concerning which there has been more or less dispute.

IT should be remarked, that water may be heated above 212 degrees Fahrenheit without passing into steam, and while it is under ordinary atmospheric pressure, provided it is kept perfectly quiescent; but let the lightest motion be communicated to it—even the tremor produced by a footstep—and behold! the water which was calm and quiet suddenly dashes into steam. This is the mysterious cause of so many steam-boiler explosions, which take place when the valves have been closed for some time, and the boiler is quiescent.

NEARLY all the great naval powers are beginning to question not only the efficiency, but the safety of the big modern type of battle ship. The French Minister of Marine declares that the great structures recently built at Toulon will turn upside down in the first heavy sea. The English admiralty entertain similar opinions. Our own Navy Department is not so confident as it was of the utility of these big fighting machines, and the sinking of Mello's flagship, the Aqudaban, by a torpedo shows that the battleship is vulnerable after all. If these vessels are abandoned there will have been a gread deal of money wasted upon a useless experiment.

THE antipathy between judges and newspaper editors is by no means confined to America. What is now known as the Brausewetter scandal in Germany arose out of the disgraceful rough-sideness of a Berlin Judge presiding in a trial of Prussian editors for alleged contempt of court. Brausewetter, the Judge, with the connivance of the crown prosecutor, disgraced his office by virtually joining with the prosecution. It is an encouraging sign of German progress that not only the press but the bar of Berlin are unanimous in denouncing the outrage. Only a bad judge would thus violate his oath, and in Germany, as in America, it is only the bad judges who hate and fear the press.

IVE, the financier, bank and railroad wrecker, accumulated wealth, and though he subsequently lost much of it when retribution overtook him, as it eventually must overtake all such adventurers, he managed to keep a large fortune, it is said, to the day of his death. Such methods as those employed by Henry S. Ives could result in but one way—the final landing of their employer in the criminal courts. And Ives, after the assignment of his firm with liabilities of $17,000,000, was arrested, and in default of $250,000 bail, was, with his associates and tools, imprisoned for several months in a New York jail. But no case was made against him and he was released, only to begin again in a smaller way as a stock jobber and a juggle with securities a career characterized by all his old-time daring and picturesque audacity. To it his death, at an age when most men are only beginning to lay the foundations of a business and a competency, brought an abrupt close.

MRS. ROREP'S attack on the potato just when the Colorado beetle had let up on that tuber and consented to share it with man is unfortunate. A few years ago, when we had a potato famine and had to import seed from Great Britain, it would have been a real boom to the American people to persuade them that the potato was unwholesome or innutritious or anything else that would have furnished an excuse for doing without it with a decent grace. Just at this time it is not even a kindness. There is no danger, however, that the potato will be discredited as an article of food, even on so high an authority as the lady referred to unquestionably is. She will have a somewhat similar experience to that of the scientist father who undertook to dissuade his boy from eating cheese by calling his attention to its animated condition. "Don't you see them wiggle?" said the father, pointing to the morsel which the son had broken off and was about to put in his mouth. "Let 'em wiggle," was the youngster's reply. "If they can stand it, I can."

HAVING exhausted all the other subjects of complaint against the United States, the Canadian newspapers have discovered, seven months after the World's Fair closed, that the dominion exhibitors were unfairly treated by the Exposition management. The specific charge is that Canadian exhibitors of agricultural implements were deliberately swindled out of awards to which they were entitled by venal and corrupt judges. It is difficult, of course, to disprove a charge of this kind, but it is equally difficult to prove it, and the Canadians have not proved it. Neither will most people familiar with the subject believe that there is any truth in the indictment. Under the management of John Boyd Thacher the bureau of awards was undoubtedly the most stupidly ill-conducted department of the exposition, but there was at no time any ground for believing that its operations were willfully dishonest. It was wrongly conceived, badly organized, and handicapped by a pig-headed director, but when that is said all has been said. It was honest according to its lights, and the Canadians fared no worse than all the other nations did. This is not saying much, it is true, but it should be sufficient to refute the charge of specific malice toward our neighbors across the line.

Faces and Callings.

It appears probable that the tailor's distinctive type of face may have been partially created by his habit of working his jaws concomitantly with his shears. Let any one watch a person cutting a piece of tough material with scissors, and he will see that the lower part of the face wags in rhythmic and spontaneous unison with the blades. Shepherds and farm laborers who join sheep-shearing gangs certainly acquire a different expression while engaged in this kind of work.

The cast of countenance by which one so easily recognizes a groom is partially explicable from the fact that the muscles which close the jaw and compress the lips are always called into play when we are asserting our will over that of the horse. Nearly all jockeys and others horsey men have a peculiar set of the mouth and chin, but I have been unable to distinguish any special characteristic about the eye or upper part of the face.

It is instructive to compare the visage of the ruler of horses with that of the ruler of men. The horseman's face shows command in the mouth, the drill Sergeant's in the mouth and the eye. The last is undoubtedly the most effective instrument in exacting obedience from our own species. Here we get a hint of the cause of that want of dignity, that element of coarseness which is discernible in the countenances of some men and women who have much to do with horses. The higher and nobler method of expressing authority is outweighed by the lower and more animal one.—Blackwood's Magazine.

A DISAPPOINTED playwright makes a first-class New York City dramatic critic.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

GREAT VARIETY IN THE STYLES FOR THIS SEASON.

Heavy White Petticoats No Longer in Vogue—An Outdoor Dress for a Young Matron—Waistcoats Are All the Rage—A Pretty Scarf.

Fashions Foibles.

New York correspondence:

PETTICOATS of the sheer printed lawns are the prettiest things imaginable for summer wear. Choose for them any soft coloring you like, give them plenty of ruffles and make them ankle short. The heavy white skirt with Hamburg embroidery is all gone by. A little lawn skirt made of sheer stuff with a tiny rose-colored stripe through it, has each flounce buttonholed along the edge with rose-colored silk, and there are five flounces set in a little cluster about the edge of the skirt. Skirts of heavier material, such as cambrics and fancy cottons, are also used. An especially pretty one is striped on a white ground with a bright "china" blue, that pretty turquoise shade which washes so well and which in combination with white has a way of looking cleaner than anything else in sight.

Scarlet waistcoats are worn with all sorts of colored gowns. A combination accepted by handsome dowagers of fine figure and presence is a stone gray or lead color smooth cloth for skirt and umbrella coat, with high scarlet cashmere waistcoat. A pique edge shows above the waistcoat on some very correct dames, and the linen is white, worn with a black tie. A black hat is worn with a very low crown and so narrow a lace straw brim that it does not exceed the dimensions of a toque. The brim lifting slightly at the center in front, scooping down either side, rolling back over the ears and fitting down closely in the back, is set with a bright red flower or bunch of flowers, laid closely either side of the uplift in front. At the back of the hat a wide bow spreads sideways. There is no other trimming. This shape of hat is much worn by women of gray hairs and of the somewhat severe dignity that our stylish elderly matron develops. The dignified lady of this type who wears a hat with a stiff brim, or with a brim turned back from the face, becomes grenadier-like at once and really terrifying.

Turn to the initial figure, and there is shown an outdoor dress suitable for a young matron. Made of light novelty cloth, its jacket bodice has a full-draped plastron and collar of old-gold moire, and the skirt is garnished in front with nine rows of lace. The toilet could also be made of plain cloth, serge, dark-blue cheviot, old red or green suiting with surah, bengaline, or fancy silk in place of the moire.

A visiting toilet of gray silk is the artist's next contribution. The shirred yoke is of silver-gray gauze, having three bands of insertion laid against the lining and showing faintly through the gauze. The pleated skirt has a foundation of plain silk, is three yards wide, and is finished around the bottom with a small pleated ruffle. The jacket bodice is of gray cloth, and has long basques that may be separate and sewed on, or cut in one with the rest. The vest-like front is pointed, and the edges of the whole bodice are ornamented with a narrow spangle embroidery. The cloth hooks in front, and the yoke at the left shoulder. The tight sleeves have two caps of plain silk.

A very pretty fashion of making up the dainty striped lawns is a fitted bodice with a yoke outlined by a fall of lawn finished with five rows of narrow black velvet, the yoke itself being covered with hoop rows of the same velvet. The skirt is made prettily full, and a flounce a half-yard wide and edged with rows of the narrow velvet is set as high as the waist line in the back, and dips till its edge is even with the skirt edge in front. The effect is as pretty and not as elaborate to manage as an overdress. Such a dress carried out in a lawn, striped with a clear sapphire blue and trimmed with black velvet, is worn with a yellow sailor hat bound with white ribbon standing in horizontal loops to each side of the front, and with a great knot of blue bachelor buttons just in front of each loop. These flowers stand high on their stems, which are bound close together. It is quite a trick to bind the stems of short stemmed flowers closely together and so mount a bunch of violets, pansies or forget-me-nots on high in a round pompon-like bunch. Black violets with green stems are much used in this way, one remembered little flat toque of black leghorn having practically no other trimming. An odd and picturesque hat is shown in the third sketch. It is made of white straw trimmed with white lace and black feathers and accompanies a tasteful and simple dress of navy blue glace foulard dotted with pea-green.

A pretty scarf to take the place of the shoulder shawl that used to be a necessary part of a summer outfit is of the most delicate white cashmere, the width of the goods, and finished with a deep insertion of guipure, as heading to a very full flounce of the same lace. This scarf is more graceful than the shawl, gives quite as much protection, and goes prettily over the head and around the throat, crossing and being spread out over the chest, the ends hanging in the back. Guipure is assuredly the reigning lace for trimmings of all sorts. On the next pictured toilet it is used for the deeply van-dyked yoke collar, which is worn over a bodice of fancy suiting, which is further ornamented by a small figaro made of silk which perfectly matches the suiting. The draped collar and cravat are of maize-colored crepe de chine. At the left side the skirt opens to show a panel garnished at the bottom with three bands of velvet ribbon of different widths. The bodice hooks at the side, the figaro coming over, and fastening in front beneath the yoke. The hat of mordore straw is trimmed with feathers and primroses.

White China silk fancy waists trimmed with laid-on insertions of lace in black are fresh and pretty, and a really good lace will wash without hurting its color. There is a movement against veils, and now any girl whose complexion can stand it goes with face bare. There are objections to this; do it in the country and at the sea shore if you like, but not in the city, where the face would be much better protected from dust and grit. Shaker flannel makes very useful and sensible summer dresses. It washes as well as cotton, is light, has enough woolliness about it to make it cozy to wear and is inexpensive. The white broadcloth gown is white only for one or two wearings, and then must be cleansed. White flannel is very pretty, but if you attempt to have it washed it shrinks like a bank account in a hard winter, and cleansing takes a long while and is expensive. Shaker flannel has all the air of a white wool gown, and the girl who wears it is, after all, the only one who needs to know that it is cheap. The men won't, that's certain.

In the last picture there is displayed a costume of almond green suiting, with a gored skirt trimmed around the bottom with jet galloon. The short bodice fastens at the side and has a yoke of contrasting shade of crepe banded and edged with jet passementerie and finished by a beaded lace frill. The standing collar and belt are black watered ribbon, and the same ribbon may be substituted for the jet, if desired.

Waistcoats are all the rage, and the proper coat is the one that shows the most of the waistcoat, and, so doing, all sense of proportion is often lost sight of. Thus the large lady, with generous curve below her waist in front, is just the one who gayly wears a coat that fastens with three buttons just below the bust line, and then is cut away to either hip, that the lower part of the waistcoat may be seen; though, to tell the truth, the observer does not so much as think of the waistcoat. Don't do it, any of you, save those distracting and envied creatures who can do anything and look lovely.

Three is a small allowance of duck suits this summer, and with four and a flannel, serge or hop gown you can face the summer if you have a lot of shirt waists and a vest or so. Use the lightweight duck, cut the bodice in modified blazer fashion, a short-skirted jacket, open and loose in front and fitting behind, with little perky umbrella skirt-back. The skirt itself is plain, round, and fairly full, the sleeves very big gigot, and the jacket turns back in front with wide revers. White ground with pin stripes of light blue or light brown makes the freshest suits. Black pinstripes are good, too, and a stylish combination is dots of red on a drab ground. Wear a red waistcoat with the latter. A lisle silk shirt with a folded sash belt is all right under these little blazers, a front will do, or you may be gentlemanly and wear waistcoat, laundried linen, and correct tie. Plain white should not be attempted except in the heavier duck. These skirts may be worn with shirt waists alone; so, you see, with four such dresses you can make changes enough to prevent your best friend from keeping count.

AH SIN PLAYING IRISH MUSIC.

A Chinese Fiddler Who Prefers Celtic Melodies to Melican Tunes.

Extensive as is every San Franciscan's knowledge of the city's Chinatown, says the Call, nowhere can be found a citizen who had any recollection of hearing of a Chinese who played popular airs on a violin with any sort of a touch that is suggestive of early training and an ardent admiration for music. But Lee Fong is just such a heathen prodigy, with a history that is of exceeding interest. They call him "Tom Flanagan," for, strange to relate, the boy has a liking for Irish airs and melodies and plays them in preference to the compositions of German or American composers. Tom came to California about eight years ago. He first listened to the playing of a violin at a theater in Oakland. He liked "Melican music," and often stood for hours at a park or open-air concert listening to a brass band discourse popular airs. Finally the idea struck him that it would be posssible for him to learn to play the fiddle, so straightaway he hied him to a second-hand store, where he purchased a violin for $6.

"Me no like China music," said he with a contemptible sneer. "Too much dum, dum, too muchee squeak."

With the help of a German, who jokingly undertook to give Tom preliminary instruction in the production of harmonious sounds, the Chinese learned to handle the bow with considerable dexterity. His advance was rapid, and in less than two years Tom could do musical justice at any country hoe-down, and inspire even a more elevated social gathering with exhilaration when he drew music out of the violin strings.

"Ilish music heeplively," said Tom, as he drew his finger along his violin bass string. "You like me play for you?"

"By all means."

"I play."

"The Wearing of the Green," "Killarney," and an Irish jig followed. Tom's arm swung with an easy motion and his foot beat time. His eyes dilated a little and his mouth twitched, showing that he felt in his very soul the vibrations of the sweet Celtic melodies.

A TABLE CONSERVATORY.

How One May Be Made to Grace Your Summer Drawing-Room.

Somewhere about the house you may have a small table which is of no special use. Look it up and convert it into a little conservatory fit to grace your summer drawing-room. You don't know how to do it? Well, here is the plan to follow:

The preparatory work is accomplished by a coat of white enamel. After this is thoroughly dry, cut a round hole in the center of the table, just large enough for a deep tin can to be fitted in. Fill this with water and then place your flowers within. They may be changed each morning, and will keep fresh all day. Another pretty idea is to fill the tin pan with earth and have ferns growing there.

A TABLE CONSERVATORY.

Let some flowering vine be in the center, trained to wind itself about the legs of the table.

ANCIENT HISTORY.

The Chicago Evening News Tells of the Rise of St. Louis.

St. Louis now claims a population of 600,000, which, if supported by figures, makes the Missouri metropolis the fifth in size of the large cities of the United States.

St. Louis was founded in the year 3001 B. C. by a protoplasm who was off his feed and didn't care what he did. Having started the place, however, he didn't feel like leaving and did not leave until he discovered that it was no place for a live, go-ahead proto—and he left. As nothing was ever heard of him afterward, it is believed by eminent authorities that he went up into the Ozark hills and kicked himself to death for having boomed such a town.

About the twentieth century, B. C. the late Mr. Chedorlaomer made an expedition to St. Louis and up to the day of his death he regretted it. In his memoirs he says: "Of all the dead, past-due burgs that I ever honored with my presence St. Louis takes the cheese." Mr. Chedorlaomer was a close observer and knew what he was talking about. The next person of note to visit the town was Shalmaneser in the year 701 B. C. He mistook it for a national cemetery and did not stop off, but proceeded on to Keokuk, Iowa.

The town wabbled on with indifferent success until William the Conqueror's time, when some live business man built a morgue and then it began to grow. Abe Slupsky's discovery of the Mississippi in 1421 gave the town a boom and the census of 1425 gives it a population of 105. When it is recalled that only 4,500 years before all that there was of St. Louis was a protoplasm this rapid growth is fraught with interest. During the last 500 years its progress has been a trifle slow but steady.

Mr. Chedorlaomer would scarcely recognize the St. Louis of to-day. It has several business blocks, a post-office and a railroad lands freight and passengers within walking distance of the town pump. Travelers between the north and south stop off for lunch. In business it is retrospective.

His Grounds for Postponement.

Perhaps the best specimen of wit that has enlivened a Hamilton County Court in many a day was that emitted like a flash from John Coffey, the attorney, who has been guilty of a good many things that had disturbed the serenity of bench and bar. Mr. Coffey was counsel in a case which had already been postponed some two or three times at his request. It was before Judge Outcalt. Again Mr. Coffey asked for postponement. The court reminded him that it had already been postponed several times at his request. "Have you good grounds for wishing another postponement?" "Yes, sir, I have," replied Coffey. "What are they?" asked the court. "Coffey grounds, your honor." "Coffee grounds," repeated the judge. "Yes, sir," said John. Then the judge got on his dignity and reminded the lawyer that he was trifling with the court. "Your honor," said Mr. Coffey, "there was a small addition to my family last night and I submit, your honor, that that is good grounds for asking for a postponement." Did John get his postponement? Well, rather. And Judge Outcalt nearly fell from the bench. "Coffey grounds!" —Cincinnati Times Star.

A BEAUTY FROM THE WEST.

Miss Ethel Washburn, Stepdaughter of the American Minister at Vienna.

It is generally conceded that the court etiquette of Vienna is more rigid than any other in Europe. Some American Ministers to the Austrian capital have found considerable difficulty in accommodating themselves to the formalities so closely observed there, but the present representative from this country, Bartlett Tripp, has been particularly lucky in this respect. He attributes his good fortune largely to the fact that he is stepfather to one of the most lovely girls ever seen in an American legation. Miss Ethel

MISS ETHEL WASHBURN.

Washburn, the young lady in question, took Vienna by storm on her arrival there. Besides being the possessor of rare personal attractions Miss Washburn is also gifted with a goodly amount of sound American common sense, and in almost no time she had mastered enough of the intricacies of court etiquette to stand all members of the family in good stead. Miss Ethel is a daughter of Mrs. Tripp by a former marriage, her father having been one of the Minnesota Washburns. At the time of her mother's second marriage seven years ago she was known as "the flower of Minnesota," and Mr. Tripp, who was then Chief Justice of the Territory of Dakota, was congratulated many times on securing two such household treasures as the mother and daughter.

Will Have His Way.

You can't get the best of a shoe clerk. He knows more about shoes than a small boy knows about the exact day school closes. A woman hates a shoe clerk, and to all outward appearance the shoe clerk feels the same sort of sentiment toward the woman.

There is one habit that a shoe clerk has that is exasperating beyond everything. He always insists upon holding up the old shoe that he has just removed, and, after taking in all its rips and rags and patches, he flings it on the floor as if it were infested with small-pox microbes. That one little incident is quite enough to make the woman shut her teeth together and mentally declare war.

"What size, madam?" says he.

"Four B," she replies.

"Well, I think you need a 5½ triple 'A,'" he suggests.

Then if the woman is a real brave, courageous bit of femininity, she straightens up and says: "I will not wear a 5½. If you can't give me what I ask for I shall go elsewhere."

It all depends upon the makeup of the shoe clerk whether or not he gets angry at this point. Sometimes he goes away and, presently comes back with a shoe several sizes too small for the woman's foot. Then he proceeds to try to jam the unhappy foot into it, after which he smiles blandly and remarks sweetly: "You see, madam?"

But, anyway, whatever plan he follows and whatever demands she makes, the woman invariably trots off with her No. 4 "B" foot incased in a No. 5½ triple "A" shoe. If the clerk is clever she isn't aware of the deceit until she gets home and looks at the box. Then she thinks of how she said to him sharply: "You needn't bring on your 5½'s. I won't wear them!" And then she sits down and has a good laugh.

That's why I say that you can't get the best of a shoe clerk. Of course, women realize that they are unreasonable at times and that buying shoes is a trying business anyway, but it seems rather hard to think that we can't have the shoes we ask for just once in a while.—Chicago Record.

THE struggle going on in New York for the equal rights of women recalls to the Sun the case of a Buffalo man who loaded two shot-guns, and, handing one to his wife, requested her to fight a duel with him. The duel ended in the precipitate flight of the woman through a window, carrying the sash with her, and the man, of course, was held for assault with intent to kill. His conviction was regarded as certain, and it was held that his proposition to fight a duel, and placing the woman upon practically equally terms with him, would not excite anything except laughter before a jury, whereas, if it had been the case of one man fighting another, it would be exceedingly difficult to secure a conviction.

She Knew What She Was About.

Prolonged railway traveling is so tedious to most people that any little diversion is welcomed and made the most of. The Cleveland Plain Dealer records an instance of such a sort—an absent-minded performance on the part of an elderly lady, which must have beguiled at least half an hour for the other passengers. The day was warm and dusty, and she was seized with thirst. At one end of the car was a water-cooler, and to it the lady went.

She took the cup in her hand, turned the faucet, and stood waiting. The ice-water filled the catchpan and ran over, and soon was cooling the crossties. Still the woman stood holding the empty cup. Finally a trainman stepped up to her.

"Lady," said he, not impolitely, "do you know what you are doing?"

"Me? Certainly I do."

"Well, why are you running all that water off?"

The passenger evidently felt pity for such ignorance.

"Why," said she, "I'm letting it run till it gets cool!"

The Yellow Glow of the Horizon

Painted on the sky by the setting sun, is beautiful. Not so the sallow saffron of a face tinged with bile. And oh! the unspeakable discomfort that bile in the wrong place produces. Twinges in the right side and under the right shoulder blade, nausea, vertigo, sick-headache, constipation, faulty digestion. Not in an instant can the symptoms of biliousness be dispelled, but persistence in the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will eradicate them, restore digestion and regularity of the bowels, and counteract tendencies to more aggravated complaints, which an interruption of these functions begets. Rheumatism, inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, neuralgia, and inability to sleep, are also remedied by this genial preventive and restorative of nerve force and tranquility. As an antidote to the poison of malaria, it is unfailing and prompt. A wineglassful three times a day.

He Was Puzzled.

A Southern writer reports the question of a raw recruit, who perhaps was not quite so raw as he seemed.

At one of the post of the Signal Corps near Culpepper, an infantryman lounged up to the man on duty, and seemed deeply interested in his manœuvres. The signalman paid no attention to the new-comer, but continued to "flop away right and left" with his flag.

"I sa-a-y, str-a-nger," drawled the fellow at last, "are the fli-es a-pestering of you?"

THE first thing a man does on reaching the rural regions is to loudly rhapsodize over the beauty and purity of untrammeled nature. The next is to start back to town, "where there is some fun going on."

A PREISIDENT is not permitted to make a mistake.

"If I Were You."

If I were you and had a friend
Who called a pleasant hour to spend,
I'd be polite enough to say,
"Ned, you may choose what games we'll play."
That's what I'd do
If I were you.

If I were you and went to school,
I'd never break the smallest rule,
And it should be my teacher's joy
To say she had no better boy.
And 'twould be true
If I were you.

If I were you, I'd always tell
The truth, no matter what befell,
For two things only I despise—
A coward heart and telling lies—
And you would, too,
If I were you.

If I were you, I'd try my best
To do the things I here suggest.
Though since I am no one but me
I cannot very well, you see,
Know what I'd do
If I were you.

Five Little Chickens.

Said the first little chicken,
With a queer little squirm,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A fat little worm.

Said the next little chicken,
With an odd little shrug,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A fat little bug!"

Said the third little chicken,
With a sharp little squeal,
"Oh, I wish I could find
Some nice yellow meal!"

Said the fourth little chicken,
With a small sigh of grief,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A little green leaf!"

Said the fifth little chicken,
With a faint little moan,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A wee gravel stone!"

"Now, see here," said the mother,
From the green garden patch,
"If you want any breakfast,
You just come and scratch."

Something Needed, Sure.

"Mamma, I want some water in a bowl. I am going to christen my doll."

"No, little dear; that would be trifling with a sacred subject.

"Then give me some wax to waxinate her with. She's old enough now to have something done to her."

The Man in the Moon.

"There's the home of the man in Man in the Moon," said her guide.

As they came near, she saw in front of a large hole in the side of the mountain, shaped like a door, an enormous man. Elfie thought he must be at least fifty feet high. He was dressed in a long, brown coat, which reached to his knees; on his legs were long blue stockings, and purple trunks; his shoes were ornamented with buckles, his cap was blue and cut to a point in front, while a long amber-colored feather which floated up from it showed that he was a little bit vain of his personal appearance. His head was very, very large, forming at least one-third of his whole height. The face was round and full and very jolly-looking, a slight droop to the left eyelid giving his eyes such a quaint, shy look that nobody who looked at him could possibly help laughing.

He was sitting down on a great head of cheese, having his dinner; and (to show you what a very extraordinary man he was) he was eating the front of his own house!

"Hullo!" he shouted, when he saw our little traveler, "hullo! What brings you here? It isn't often that I have pleasure of speaking to any Earth-children. Come here and let me shake hands with you."

He stooped down and took Elfie's hand in his mighty fist and shook it warmly.

"Sit down, sit down, little one; here is a nice seat. Of course you wish to ask questions. I never knew an Earth-child who did not. Go right on, and I will tell you all you wish to know."

Elfie settled herself comfortably on the soft cheese seat, ready to enjoy herself.

"In the first place," she said, "I'd like to know about some of the things you have seen from here, and why do you look so jolly, please? I should have thought that you would feel more like crying all the time, for you have to work so hard making the new moons. Then I have read and heard so much of the misery that there is in the world, and which you must see every night. I can't understand it how you manage to look so happy about it."

While Elfie spoke, the Man in the Moon looked very serious, and as she finished he buried his face in his hands. When he uncovered it the smiling, happy look had gone.

"My little girl," he said, "you have asked me questions which would take me a lifetime to answer. This, though, I can say—that I have seen a great deal of trouble, misery, and wretchedness down upon the earth, but I have seen also a great number of things to rejoice at, and to make me glad. Long, long ago, I found that to sit down and make myself miserable about things that I could not help, did me no possible good; and that one who does so only cripples his powers for usefulness. By being bright and cheerful I have made many people happy, and kept my own heart young. You—and others—might remember this.

"As for my working so hard making me cry, I can tell you that the very best help toward making a contented mind is to work—work—work. Not, certainly, to toil on forever with no rests for play or pleasure, but to do something every day. I have always found that when I sit down to rest with the knowledge that I have accomplished something, I am always the happier for it and enjoy myself much better.

"And as for the things I have seen, I could, as you may well believe, tell you more stories about the things that have happened under my light, than you could get into the biggest story-book that was ever written."—St. Nicholas.

Give the Boys a Trade.

Go where you will, you will find youths entering manhood without any equipment for the struggle before them. Tens of thousands of them hope to become merchants, when they have no aptitude whatever for commercial affairs, and are doomed to lives of bitter toil and grinding poverty. This ought not to be. Everybody in America is justly entitled to a trade, and he ought to have the chance to master one. Many sons of poor parents and many orphan boys are compelled to forego the inestimable benefits of apprenticeship, and these ought to be assisted by wise philanthropy; but very many more fail to improve the great opportunity of becoming skilled workers, and so drift into the laboring army, to become helpless victims of poverty all their lives. Boys in town or country, learn a trade. It will be your surest and best friend through life. Parents, in whatever else you come short, don't fail to see to this matter. You will be insuring the happiness and comfort of your sons, the welfare of those who come after them, and discharging a solemn duty you owe to society and the country.—Farm and Fireside.

AN IDEAL GREAT MAN'S WIFE.

Mrs. Gladstone's Tact in Watching Her Husband's Many Moods.

The watchful care which Mrs. William Ewart Gladstone continually exercises over the health and comfort of her distinguished husband is the subject of frequent comment among her intimates. Possessed of a forceful intellect and strong womanly sympathies, she uses these characteristics in such a way as to make the ex-premier think her the cleverist woman in the world. Out of all the members of her household she alone knows just how to manage her venerable husband, who in recent years has occasionally manifested a disposition to indulge in what would be regarded as tantrums in less distinguished men. On one occasion recently a leading London journalist, while dining with the Gladstones, got into a heated argument with the sage of Hawarden over some question of public policy. While the discussion was at its stormiest a servant quietly slipped a card into the hand of the daring newspaper man. On it were the words written in Mrs. Gladstone's large, angular hand: "We never contradict Mr. Gladstone." The visitor then for the first time noticed that the grand old man wore a flushed and excited look. He at once took the hint, and after feebly contesting the point for a few moments longer confessed himself worsted and peace was restored.

laid hands on Africa, and in the interim she has acquired an area of considerably over 1,000,000 square miles.

The kingdom of Uganda is perhaps the most advanced of all the native African States. The country is very fertile and lies to the west and north of Lake Victoria Nyanza. The population is estimated at nearly 5,000,000.

As gunsmiths, carpenters, boat builders and blacksmiths the people—the Wa-Ganda—excel, and they have a passionate desire for all useful knowledge. They have quick, sharp minds, delight in argument, are easily excited and are very brave. Their king is Mwanga, who succeeded McTesa, whom Stanley visited during his African explorations.

RAZOR-STROPPING DEVICE.

The Blade Is Always in the Right Position.

A cutler has recently brought out a razor-stropping device to be used in connection with safety razors, as here shown. It consists of a nickled frame, with a round wooden part fastened rigidly to the center of two side arms pivoted at the top. These move back and forth, reversing the blade every time the direction of the machine is changed. At the end of the arms is a spring metal receiver for the blade of a safety razor. A slight pressure on the strop when the machine is in motion causes the blade to turn always in an opposite direction to which the apparatus is going, making it impossible to cut the strop and at the same time requiring no skill to sharpen the razor.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The Senate on Monday combined a sluggish investigation of bribery charges with its tariff talk, and no work was done of much importance. Almost immediately upon assembling the House went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill. Mr. Hayes offered an amendment which declared that the section which allowed the docking of members' salary had been heretofore repealed. Mr. Dearmond, of Missouri, made a point of order against the amendment. The chairman (Mr. Richardson) sustained the point of order. Mr. Hayes appealed from the decision of the Chair and the chairman declared the nays had it. Only a bare quorum voted. Roll-call was demanded, and the decision of the Chair was overruled by 88 to 102. The question was then put on Mr. Hayes' amendment declaring the statute repealed which authorized the sergeant-at-arms to deduct from the salary of members for absence. It was agreed to—118 to 84. Mr. Dockery gave notice that a yea and nay vote would be demanded on the amendment when the bill was reported to the House. The House adjourned.

The Senate disposed of seven paragraphs of the metal schedule Tuesday, after eight hours of debate. The debate was marked by quite a number of interesting clashes between the Republicans and Democrats. The question of civil service reform was given full sway in the House, the occasion being the amendment to strike out the paragraph in the legislative appropriation bill providing for the civil service commission. It gave opportunity for some stirring and not a few amusing speeches. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 109 to 71 amid great Democratic applause and Republican cries of "Spoils." No other amendments of any importance were made in the bill, the only ones adopted being to correct the totals of a few amendments. In the earlier proceedings the resolution providing for an investigation of the alleged armor plate frauds was adopted.

A test vote was taken in the Senate Wednesday, and to the surprise of many the tariff was not tabled. In the House discussion of the civil service commission was resumed, and several times during the day the question was disposed of only to break out a moment later in another place. The appropriation for commissioners and clerks of the Civil Service Bureau having been stricken out, the next paragraph, providing for the transfer to the Civil Service Commission of clerks from the departments was also stricken from the bill. The House refused to strike out, however, the appropriation of six thousand dollars for traveling expenses of civil service examiners. Another amendment made to the bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury discretion in the temporary appointment of clerks to wind up the accounts of the divisions proposed to be abolished, instead of taking them from the classified service. Prior to going into committee of the whole the House passed the Senate bill amending an act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouri Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas. The House adjourned at 5:05 o'clock after getting half way through the legislative bill.

The Senate on Thursday interviewed E. J. Edwards, of the Philadelphia Times, author of the "Holland" letter, in which bribery anent the sugar tariff was charged. The examination was secret. The House went into committee of the whole to consider the legislative appropriation bill, and Mr. Richardson was called to the chair. There was an unsuccessful effort to amend the pension paragraph so as to strike out the $200,000 appropriation for special investigation of alleged frauds. Mr. Alderson tried to have struck out the provision for contingent expenses of the Civil Service Commission, but was voted down. Mr. Stone offered an amendment striking out the provision for assistant attorneys to defend the Government against war claims, and it was defeated. Finally the bill was reported to the House. Separate votes were demanded on Mr. Hayes' resolution declaring the laws repealed authorizing the docking of members' salaries for absence, and on the amendment striking out the appropriations for the civil service. The Hayes anti-docking amendment was defeated—yeas, 104; nays, 127. The amendment of Mr. Enloe striking out the appropriation for the civil service commission was lost—80 yeas to 158 nays—amid Republican applause. The legislative bill was then passed. The House bill to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of Knights of Pythias was passed. A resolution was adopted setting aside Saturday, June 23, for eulogies on the late Representative Houk, of Ohio. The House then, at a few minutes past 5 o'clock, adjourned.

Senator Kyle's Hawaiian resolution and the tariff were tangled up Friday, and the tariff came out a little ahead. The schedule on several articles was changed, and the Senate bill is several pages nearer completion than before. At the conclusion of the morning hour in the House the House went into committee of the whole for consideration of private bills. Mr. Springer gave notice that the first thing Saturday he would call up the Brawley bill for repeal of the State bank tax law. The entire afternoon was consumed in a discussion of an omnibus resolution from the Committee on War Claims, grouping together thirty-seven claims for cotton, etc., aggregating $1,040,000. Half the time was taken up in a discussion on a point of order against the grouping of so many bills in one resolution. The only business transacted during the day was the passage of a bill for the relief of Thomas B. Reed. At 5 o'clock the committee rose and the House took a recess. The evening session was devoted to the consideration of private bills.

The Biggest Dog in the World.

The biggest dog ever known was a St Bernard named Plinlimmon, shown at an English dog show in 1886. He stood thirty-five inches high at the shoulder and weighed 214 pounds. Plinlimmon is now in this country, or, at least, was brought to America directly after being exhibited, having been bought by an American gentleman at a price so large that it is said he never would tell what it was.

LEAVES of the Talipot palm in Ceylon sometimes attain the length of twenty feet, with a width of eighteen feet. They are used by the natives in making tents. The leaves of the double cocoanut palm are often thirty feet long, while those of the Inaja palm on the banks of the rivers of Brazil are sometimes fifty feet long and ten to twelve feet wide.

A False Joan of Arc.

As shown by publications in this column recently it appears there was a true and false Molly Pitcher, heroine of the revolutionary war.

There is the same trouble with the famous Joan of Arc, but the historians are now feeling satisfied that they have got the false Joan, or at least one of them, located. It was on account of the uncertainty as to which was which that the canonization of the martyr maid was so long delayed.

That Joan was never buried at all is a paradox which has been maintained at intervals since 1683. The idea has even been suggested that the false Joan was a younger sister of the true Joan, and was put up by her family, now named Du Lys, in the hopes of reward. This is looked on as a possible hypothesis by Henri Blaze de Bury, in his "Jeanne d'Arc." The second edition is of 1890. The charge against the family of Du Lys is very dishonoring, but the difficulties about this sister, Catherine, are enough to make a student tear his locks in sheer perplexity. Meanwhile, it is not even certain whether there was only one, or two, or more false Joans. The imposter was first generally heard of, in modern times, when the Mercure Galant in November, 1683, published an extract from the chronicle of the dean of Saint-Thibaud of Metz for the year 1436.—Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.

Fox Terriers and Elephants.

The visitor to menageries often wonders why fox terriers are sometimes to be found in the enclosures with the elephants. It is simply because, if they were not there, the rats, which are many and large, would eat the feet of the elephants off. The elephants are chained, and, when they lie down, they cannot keep the rascally rodents from gnawing their feet. So a fox terrier is kept with them, whose business it is to see that the rats are driven away, or to kill as many as possible. The elephants appreciate the dog too. In one case lately the rats began to gnaw holes in the thick hide of the rhinoceros. So a terrier was placed with this beast, and in one night killed twenty-seven rats. Rats are one of the greatest pests which the keepers have to fight.

His Conscience Smote Him.

A friend of Landseer's asked him to paint his dog for him, but on the day fixed the animal was found to have been stolen. The artist promised to recover it if possible, and went to a well-known dog-stealer, telling him to let him have it at once, no questions asked. The man said he could not possibly find it under a fortnight, and, at the end of that time, appeared with it. "You see," he said, "I did steal the dawg, but I sold it to such a trump ov a hold lady for such han howdacious price, I thought I must let 'er 'ave the benefit of it for a fortnight."

In the Soup.

For ages the slang phrase or its equivalent, "in the soup," has in one form or another been in use among the Germans. "He sits in the soup" is used to indicate the situation of a man in misfortune by his own fault. "He has made a nice soup for himself" is used to indicate a ludicrous or ridiculous position in which one is placed by himself. "He must eat his own soup," with other expressions of this kind, is still in common use throughout Germany.

Intensely Proud.

In the suite of Princess Amelia there was a granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell, a Miss Russell. On January 30th, she was in attendance when the Prince of Wales came into the room and remarked: "For shame, Miss Russell! Why have you not been at church, humbling yourself for the sins committed on this day by your grandfather?" "Sir," replied Miss Russell, "for a granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell, it is humiliation enough to wait upon your sister."

Lockwood's Fun.

Frank Lockwood, the witty English lawyer, having been invited to stay for a couple of days at a friend's country house, decided to accept the invitation if his host were willing to extend his invitation for an additional two days. He therefore telegraphed: "May I make it four days?" and the message was duly delivered to Mr. X., who, after paying six shillings for its delivery, replied: "Yes, of course, but don't telegraph." Toward evening the mounted telegraph messenger again appeared, and once more demanded a further six shillings for his services. The telegram, when opened, read as follows: "Why not? Lockwood."

Lemons.

The introduction of the lemon-tree into Europe is due to the Caliphs during their invasion of the West. The lemon thus transplanted was found by the Crusaders in Syria and Palestine towards the end of the eleventh century. By them it was introduced into Sicily and Italy, though it was probable at the same period it was already grown in Africa and Spain. Arabian writers of the twelfth century speak of the lemon-tree as being at that time known in Egypt and many other places.

Misquotations.

The other da , in the House of Commons, Mr. W. Field delivered himself in the following sentence: "In the words of Scripture, it was sound and fury, signifying nothing." It is greatly to the credit of the house that this was received with roars of laughter. Misquotations are always amusing. KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bed time. Sold by all Druggists.

CORRESPONDENCE

ST JOE.

Special to the COURIER.

The commencement exercises of the Concord township school graduates held at St. Joe, in the Lutheran church of that busy, prosperous town, the evening of May 24, were well attended, and of most interesting character.

Trustee Woodcox had taken great pains to have the occasion made memorable to the young people and their parent. Large flags, property of the schools, fittingly suggested the national character of the school system. Banks of flowers tastefully placed were in keeping with the white dresses of the youthful graduates, who sat in semi-circle upon the rostrum, the boys at either wing, a class of twenty two.

The various schools were represented, and the number who passed the examination in the course of study was exceptionally large.

The audience from first to last was in close sympathy with the speakers, and left nothing to be desired in their quiet, continuous attention. It is much to the credit of the people that their various assemblies are unexceptionally characterized by full attendance and excellent hearing.

Addresses of W. H. McIntosh and Prof. Fairfield were well received and the singing gave life and variety to the meeting. Wholesome advice to the graduates was followed by presentation to each of his diploma by Supt. Merica, when the exercises concluded and adjournment was had to the residence of Prof. Bonnel, where a bounteous repast had been prepared for the graduating class and their guests.

The people are divided on the subject of a gravel road, the material objection being great cost and exceptional benefit, but a thorough discussion of the subject will do much to unite the people upon this most important public improvement.

An effort has been made to keep out baleful influences from the town of St. Joe, but despite hard fighting a saloon has effected a lodging, and next there is threatened a "Temperance" Billiard room, which will be opposed, but in vain.

A man may not sow thistles on his land because of the peril to his neighbor's farm land, but sordid unscrupulous persons, actuated by the money there is in it, may debauch the children of a community, regardless of their reproaches or remonstrances.

W. B. Campbell, of the Dispatch, came over on his wheel, and enjoyed the commencement with the rest.

W. H. McIntosh and wife, Hugh Culbertson and wife and Supt. Merica and wife, were here at the commencement, and also enjoyed the banquet with the rest. At the conclusion of the banquet, Mr. Culbertson and wife went over to the home of trustee Woodcox and spent the night. Next morning, Mr. Woodcox came over with a double rig and got Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh and took them out to his home. Prof. Fairfield walked out there an hour or two later, and all enjoyed a fine visit and generous dinner. Afternoon Mr. Woodcox brought them to Auburn. All who attended the commencement, speak highly of it and of St. Joe.

COUNTY PRINTING.

The COURIER has been subjected to some little of unkind criticism for the mild remarks it has made now and then as to the injustice our county officers have done to home printers by sending even their plain work to parties abroad. Especially have we been criticised for putting at the head of our column of "announcements" the plain statement that we should require a pledge of the men nominated, that the work would be given at home. Why they have been for years giving this work to outside parties, we do not understand, especially when much of it could be done as well and as cheaply at home. This has been so thoroughly given to outside parties, that but little patronage has remained to the home offices, but the public advertising, which of course had to be done in this county. To show those who criticize us, that we are justified, we publish a list of our own bills for job work for the county for each quarter the first year the present county officers were in office, omitting our bills for legal advertising, as that does not come into competition with outside parties.

In this last term we could not give a detailed statement of the amounts ordered of Burford by each officer, as the report in detail was only made three times, the December report being on the old plan, as provided for by law. It will be seen that with all the officers democrats, but one commissioner, the COURIER has received in the year 1893, a total for job work $61. Now suppose each of the other democratic offices received a little more, which we presume they did, it would still make but $200 all told in job work to home printers, while Burford got a total of $2,074,84. It may be argued, that Burford's jobs were mostly for bound books. It was probably one half for that, and the other half, put in at home, would have left $1000 in DeKalb county instead of Indianapolis We believe it could be let out to home parties for the same money, possibly at a saving. But at the same price, it should be kept at home, and if some of the work could not be done here, there plenty of good houses that would gladly do the bound books for the home printer at figures at least as low as those now paid.

We have not written to criticise the commissioners. They thought they were letting the work to the lowest bidders. But the bills show they were mistaken. Now we think they should try the home folks one year and see how it works. As for the individual officers, sometimes But even before the commissioners let the job to Burford, many of these officers were patronizing Burford by choice. If any one doubts this we can give instances when democratic and republican officers on going out of office, ordered as simple work as letter heads and envelops of Burford—not for their own use, for in a few days they would go out—but for the use of their successor. And great was the surprise of that successor, when after taking his office and ordering a few hundred letter heads and envelops of the home printer he found a few days later, a big package of the same from Burford. And he, too, shortly fell in into the same rut. And it has gone on steady ever since. We have been only too patient under this apparently studied neglect, and we now make a fight for what we believe belongs, at least in part to us. So we shall as we have stated, exact a pledge of the nominees to give all their work at home. Who can blame us? If any, let them come up and give a reason. As we said, we abuse no one. But the home people have been seriously wronged, and if they have not the courage to do their part to right the wrong, then the COURIER will do it alone. We shall make a manly honest fight for our rights, and we believe we will win. And if we do win, we feel sure that the people, will agree with us, that we have done the county a service as well as ourselves.

Harper's Weekly.

Perhaps the shortest of short stories is a cartoon; for, at a glance, and sometimes without a single word, it must truly characterize all the people it depicts and make sure that you do not miss the moral. The political story of a week or a month is told in the cartoons that from time to time stand upon the first page of Harper's Weekly.

THE best investment in real estate is to keep buildings well painted. Paint protects the house and saves repairs. You sometimes want to sell—many a good house has remained unsold for want of paint. The rule should be, though, "the best paint or none." That means

Strictly Pure White Lead

You cannot afford to use cheap paints. To be sure of getting Strictly Pure White Lead, look at the brand; any of these are safe:

Knows a Good Thing.

There is nothing I have ever used for muscular rheumatism that gives me as much relief as Chamberlain's Pain Balm does. I have been using it for about two years—four bottles in all—as occasion required, and always keep a bottle of it in my home. I believe I know a good thing when I get hold of it, and Pain Balm is the best liniment I have ever met with. W. B. Denny dairyman New Lexington, Ohio. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Relief in Six Hours.

Distressing Kidney and Bladder diseases relieved in six hours by the New Great South American Kidney Cure. This new remedy is a great Surprise and delight to physicians on account of its exceeding promptness in relieving pain in the bladder, kidneys, back and every part of the urinary passages in male or female. It relieves retention of water and pain in passing it almost immediately. If you want quick relief and cure this is your remedy. Sold by Robbins & McCord, Druggists, Auburn, Ind.

Highly Recommended.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. it is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

For Lame Back.

The most painful cases of rheumatism may be relieved by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; its continued use will cure any case, no matter of how long standing. It is equally beneficial for lame back, pain in the side, pain in the chest, lameness, and in all painful affections requiring an external remedy. A piece of flannel saturated with Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain is superior to any plaster. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark, a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of a severe cough. After using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors. Yours, Amos Clark. Sold by all druggists.

Every Lady and Gent

Newspaper Spelling.

The Waterloo Press lately took occasion to hit the Times for poor spelling Bliss had spelled "lilac," "lylock." In the same and other recent issues however, the Press uses, "precident," "bailed hay," "court marshalled," "exhonerated," etc., and usually spells "judgment," "judgement," and so on. In short, in looking over the county papers we find that Bro. Willis is only excelled in bad spelling by the beloved Clipper. Recently the Dispatch, aching probably to outdo the Press, or else to prove that though poor in "'rithmetic," it is good in "spellin'", came at the COURIER for a mere typographical error, in which, through hasty proof reading we had allowed "know nothing" to be spelled "n nothing." This was a thing to show off on, and was quite funny for one who "knows how to spell." About the same time, however, the Dispatch said, "the democratic assessment law is an 'irredescent' dream. (The true spelling is iridescent.) Still we are pleased to see that the Dispatch is improving in this line. Not so, the Garrett Clipper. For first-class "irredescent," wild eyed and fuzzy haired spelling, we must go to the Clipper. Old Noah Webster turns over in his grave and groans every time he hears the Clipper crowd walk along outside the fence. The other day they had "flamming headlines," and said "we wouldn't spat on them." and they didn't approve of "making a scape got of anybody," not even, we suppose, if a few "stray nickles" could be got out of it. And they don't want democrats to duck their hands in the "mier," not much. And so we might go on, but have no further object in this article than to show how much gall it takes for the Press to call Bliss a bad speller, even if the latter does say "culbert" for "culvert." People who live in stone houses should not throw glass. All newspapers are liable to make errors in spelling, and in grammatical construction, and few are free from frequent errors made by the compositor and not caught in reading the proof. But we do not know that one should sneer at another for this. Looking over the field it seems to be generally conceded that the only well spelled journal hereabouts is the old reliable and carefully proof-read COUR——but stop—we just happen to remember how near we came the other day to telling our several thousand intelligent readers that "John Patton of Grand Rabits" was the new senator from Michigan, and that a well known Auburn lady was "visiting friends in New Heaven." The COURIER's eagle-eyed proof reader reached the scene just in time to save the Dispatch the trouble of making another criticism. Oh, yes, "we are all poor creeturs"

P. S. Our only reason for taking our pencil in hand to write a postscript to this already too long article, is to record a solemn warning to all young men, to the effect that they should not adopt journalism as a profession, unless they can spell 1,000 per cent better than the Clipper, 500 per cent better than the Press, 400 per cent better than the Times, 300 per cent better than the Dispatch and almost as well as the COURIER

As Steuben Sees It.

Last week's Angola Herald is pretty severe on the late republican judicial convention. Hear it:

"W. L. Penfield, of Auburn, was nominated for judge, and our Eugene A. Davis for prosecutor, at the republican convention at Auburn last Thursday. The convention was remarkable only for its machine methods, the ease with which Mr. Penfield turned the crank, and the thorough "sitting down on" that Steuben county got. There were 46 delegates in the convention—25 from DeKalb county and 21 from Steuben. When the convention had been called to order the DeKalb delegates moved for a recess to complete their organization. The motion was carried, and they withdrew to a side room and Mr. Penfield turned the key. Of the 25 delegates, 18 were pledged to Penfield, and they introduced a harmless little resolution, called the "gag rule," sometimes termed the "unit rule," binding the DeKalb delegates to vote for no other than a DeKalb county man. After the men wearing Penfield collars had thus securely bound "hand and foot" the remaining seven DeKalb delegates, the ball opened. Mr. Penfield's men left Steuben comfortably situated in the circuit court room, with the chairman, while they proceeded to "do business," remaining in seclusion until their chief was nominated, on the 32nd ballot. He did not want his delegates contaminated by the presence of the average Steuben republican. Mr Penfield had but little more than one-third of the delegates, yet controlled the convention. By his "star chamber" process he took Steuben by the neck and shook her until the delegates took their medicine, and made him the nominee. They say, "he's a fine worker." The Steuben delegation deserted Judge Woodhull, who for thirty years has stood the acknowledged leader of the Steuben county bar, and split on Messrs. Bratton and Roby. It has successively nominated and supported James I. Best, James E. Rose, R. Wes McBride twice, and W. L. Penfield, all from DeKalb; and now, with her 1,000 majority (which must be depended upon to elect the nominee) Steuben continues to hold the bag. The average self-respecting republican kicks a little because Penfield got upon his neck and denied to him every principle of party honor and justice, but that bland and innocent smile, that childlike simplicity and laughing twinkle in the eye of Hon. W. L., will line him up, and in six years more he'll be ready to do honor for DeKalb and its political bosses again.

Something wrong when you tire too easily. Something wrong when the skin is not clear and smooth. Something wrong when the blood is impure. Everything right when you take DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

Stars and Storms.

Much of the beauty of the stars depends upon their scintillation. The multitudinous flashing of their tiny rays gives a wonderful life brilliancy to a winter's night. The great star Sirius excites the most admiration when near the horizon he coruscates with rainbow hues. But the astronomer would be glad if he could put a stop to the scintillation of the stars. That unsteadiness of their light is one of the chief obstacles he has to overcome in studying them with the telescope.

Scintillation has generally been regarded as due only to slight disturbance in the atmosphere. But as recent observations have shown that red stars scintillate less than white ones it has been suggested that the causes of some of the essential differences in the scintillations of different stars may be in the stars themselves. There is no doubt however, that the main cause of scintillation depends upon the condition of the air.

Most people suppose that when the stars appear to lose their liveliness of light and shine without twinkling as minute bright points in the sky fair weather is in prospect. Studies lately made in France and Switzerland seem to contradict this popular belief. It has been found there that when the stars are feeble in their scintillations foul weather is at hand. The night before a most violent storm in France, for instance, the stars hung so quietly in the sky that they seemed to have entirely lost their scintillating power. This is said to be only one instance among many which show that an unusual steadiness in the light of the stars precedes the appearance of storms.

Gorman's Great Speech.

Senator Gorman, of Maryland, is one of those democratic senators against whom has arisen an outcry in certain democratic papers, that claimed he is "a traitor" to the party because he did not blindly accept the Wilson tariff bill. He has however, been busy revising the senate tariff bill and assisting to get it into such a shape that all democrats in both houses can support it. He and other senators believe they have succeeded. Last Wednesday, he made an able speech on the subject, from which we take a few extracts, to show our readers what has really been done. Mr. Gorman rehearsed the difficulties that had confronted the democratic party in dealing with the question of tariff reform. The difficulty was not all in opposition, but in internal dissension as to how the fruits of victory should be secured. Withal he claimed that action by the present congress had not been unusually delayed. It was the last of September before the president signed the McKinley bill, and this is only May.

The Wilson bill, he said, had been reported to the house before its effect on existing industries could be properly studied; an imperfect measure that not only failed to meet the treasury demands, but actually increased the deficit created by the republican prohibitive duties. There was no expectation that it would become a law unchanged. The senate had always perfected such bills.

Yet no sooner did the finance committee begin its work than the cry for "action" was renewed with extraordinary vigor, and the democratic senators were informed that any change would be set down as "betrayal of the party's promises," but that every senator who showed the least concern for the interest of his own state was a traitor to the union and his party; that the senate was no longer a co-ordinate body, but its sole duty was to ratify blindly the action of the house. Said Mr. Gorman:

"It would be idle, Mr. President, to dwell upon the manifest absurdities of this outgrowth of petulance. But it cannot be denied that the demand for prompt action seriously impaired the efficiency of the finance committee's work and ultimately became so strong that revision was hastily completed and the bill was reported to the senate. I ventured the assertion in the course of the silver debate that nowhere was the truth of the old adage, 'The greater haste, the less speed,' better exemplified than in legislation. So it proved then and so it is now.

"I do not propose to discuss the merits or demerits of either the original Wilson bill or the measure first reported by the finance committee. It is sufficient to say that there has never been a moment when either could command a majority of the votes in this chamber. We might deplore such a condition and others might and did rail against those in a measure responsible for it. But the fact remained that we could not pass the bill.

"Such was the situation the democratic senators had to meet, and they have met it by the introduction of a democratic measure of tariff reform which merits and, I believe, will receive every democratic vote in this body, the indorsement of the democratic house, the signature of a democratic president and the approval of the democratic party."

In answer to the charges by the republicans, Mr. Gorman asserted that the bill had been constructed on the democratic theory of a tariff for revenue, with such incidental protection as could be given consistently to the industries of the country. It followed strictly the course marked out by President Cleveland in his letter of acceptance, upon which he was re-elected and the democratic party intrusted with full power. If there had been the slightest apprehension in the public mind of a radical overturning of industrial affairs, Mr. Cleveland would not have been re-elected. This was not a free-trade measure, but it was a longer step for freer trade than either the Mills bill or the tariff act of 1883. It was not protection for protection's sake, but it did discriminate between raw materials and manufactured articles to the full extent of the difference between European and American wages; nor was it a deficit-creating bill, such as the present law was or the house bill would have been. It was democratic because it reduced taxation to the requirements of the government. It was just; it was wise; it was businesslike; it was patriotic, and it was practical because it did not attempt to ignore facts in carrying out a theory. It was not perfect, but it was the most logical, most fair, most broad, most timely, and would prove to be the most advantageous tariff legislation enacted since the republican party sprung into existence.

Senator Gorman denied that any trust had dictated any part of any schedule of this bill. Justice to Louisiana had required the retention of the sugar bounty. That the sugar trust had thrived under the republican tariff there could be no question; whether it would prosper under the new bill remains to be seen.

Upon the subject of the income tax Mr. Gorman said:

"In the matter of internal revenue I may say that, personally, I am in full accord with the sentiments so ably and so eloquently expressed by the senators from New York and New Jersey regarding the income tax. Like them I consider that it served its purpose as a war tax and has no fitting place in our fiscal system in a time of peace. I could not, I say frankly, vote conscientiously or consistently with my judgment and convictions to make this method of taxation a part of our settled policy, but much as I deplore the fastening of an income tax in any form upon our tariff bill, I cannot ignore the fact that a large majority of my democratic colleagues should differ from myself in this matter and are so confident of the soundness of their position that they are willing to subject it to the test of a few years, thus enabling the people to see its actual workings and to pass upon it directly."

At the close of Gorman's speech, Senator Teller, republican of Colordo, said he did not believe the democratic Senators would vote on the bill, as Gorman had said they would. So in order to test it, he moved to lay the tariff bill on the table. A vote was taken, and every democrat, including Hill of New York, and every populist voted against laying it on the table. That is, they all favored the bill. We believe that some bill very nearly like the one now in the senate, will pass both houses, in spite of the opposition of the republican members.

CORRESPONDENCE

CONCORD.

Will Baker and Will Scott are splitting 3,000 rails for H. L. Brown.

Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Lutz drove to St. Joe Saturday to purchase new furniture.

Mrs. Will Sheldon visited friends in Auburn Sunday.

Harry Stutz, of Auburn, is here visiting his brother, Willie.

Oscar Burnett and wife, of Garrett, visited his grand parents, Mr. and Mrs C. C. Smith, last week.

Several had made arrangements to attend the memorial services at St. Joe Sunday, but were prevented by the rain storm.

Bertha Hennessey was home over Sunday.

Miss Sabon Miller is able to be out again.

J. B. Gibford, Wayne Scott and G. W. and Alice Draggoo were in St. Joe Friday.

Mrs. J. Jenkins and Clara Leighty, of St. Joe, visited Mrs. Emma Elson Thursday.

Mrs. G. W. Draggoo has a cactus which has 30 full blown blossoms and several buds.

Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Bernard, of Ft. Wayne, visited relatives here and at St. Joe last week.

Effie Baker visited her cousin, Minnie Tustison, of St. Joe, Thursday and Friday.

Clarance Hussy, of Spencerville, bought four veal calves at one farm house last Saturday.

Chosen delegates for the S. S. convention at Butler are, Meedames Josie Morr, Ella High and F. Buchanan.

Several attended church at Fairview Sunday evening.

Mrs. W. B. Brown left Tuesday with baby Ruth Dawson for its home in Denver, Colo., where she will live with her Grandma Montgomery. If she receives the same care she did with her great aunt, Mrs. F. Buchanan, she will be fortunate.

Lovina and Ernest Johnson were in St. Joe Thursday.

Lizzie Shutt, of St. Joe, visited Ina Ricketts over Sunday.

Jerry Ricketts who is suffering with a sore foot, is reported no better.

Fred Becher, Tell Elson and Mrs. Mansfield were in Auburn Saturday.

Dessie Milliman and children visited her parents, W. D. Johnson, of Fairview last Saturday.

Henry Baker is sailing on political wings at present.

Corn that is planted on bottom land is more or less frost bitten.

Candidates and delegates is all you hear.

The Auburn Swing washer, made and sold by Mr. Meese, is the only washing machine made in the county. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been in use here nearly four years. Clothes washed with it last longer, because they are not injured by rubbing, and being closed in, have the benefit of cleansing by steam. There is an advantage in buying this washer, as any repairs needed can be had right here, at all times of Mr. Meese.

New Undertakinag Establishment.

Wm. Ettinger, of Waterloo, has established a new undertaking business in the room on North Main street formerly occupied by J. S. Bowers. He has purchased a good hearse, full line of caskets, robes and other undertaking goods and will be ready for business about May 24. His long experience in this line of work, will insure his giving satisfaction. He has made a special study in the art of embalming and can promise good work. In that being a practical cabinet maker, he will do all kinds of repairing in that line. Give him a call. He'll deal fairly by you. 20-22

Nature's Electricity,

"If we could only capture and store the electricity that nature uses to make a first-class aurora borealis," said Thomas Edison, "the concerns that make dynamos would have to go out of the business. Or if we could chain the lightning in an ordinary thunderstorm we could easily make dynamos very cheap. The electricity it takes to make one little storm would more than suppy the electric needs of New York city for a week."

Like a beautiful flower full of color, but without scent, are the fine but fruitless words of him who does not act accordingly.

DESPERATE, BUT FUTILE.

A Well Laid Scheme For Liberating Two Convicts on Their Way to Prison.

"I never understood," remarked a general passenger agent while discussing a recent train robbery, "how it was that a whole trainful of people would allow themselves to be held up by one or two bandits till some years ago, when I was making a trip over the Michigan Central road. Then the mystery was explained to me. I was on my way from Detroit to Chicago and had taken a seat in the smoking car to enjoy my cigar.

"At the time the smoking cars of the Michigan Central were equipped with comfortable revolving chairs. Shortly after taking my seat I noticed that there were two convicts aboard. They were in charge of two deputies and were being conveyed from Detroit to the state prison at Jackson. They sat there talking to their guards complacently as if they had been going to some more agreeable entertainment. All went well until Ypsilanti was reached. Half way between that place and Ann Arbor is a small road crossing named Geddes. As we approached it an ordinary looking passenger went through the car in a careless manner, rolling his eyes from side to side, casually inspecting the occupants of the car. When he reached the prisoners, he pulled a whisky flask from his pocket and in an offhand way remarked: 'Here, you fellows, have a drink. It will be a long time before you have another.'

"The convicts accepted the invitation, took a good long pull from the bottle and handed it back to their apparently chance acquaintance, who pocketed it and passed into the next car. Hardly had he disappeared when the convicts with a motion quick as flash, pulled two revolvers from somewhere on the seats beside them and presented them at their guards. Before any one in the car had time to realize what was taking place those revolvers were going bang! bang! just as fast as the triggers could be pulled. The only men who appeared to have any presence of mind were the two deputies. They had seen the two revolvers coming, and by some dexterous move managed to strike up the convicts' arms so that the balls, instead of striking the victims for whom they were intended, passed through the roof of the car. While the scuffle was at its height the bellrope was pulled in some mysterious manner, and the train came to a dead stop at the crossroads near Geddes station, where a fast team of horses hitched to a light wagon was standing. By the time the train stopped, though, the convicts had been overpowered by their guards, but not until 18 shots had been fired.

"The whole thing was evidently a concerted scheme to liberate the convicts. The man with the whisky flask was an ally, and his tender of the whisky was a signal that everything was ready and the time for action had come. The attempt at escape fortunately failed, but if you had seen that car while the shots were being fired you could readily have understood how easily a few armed robbers overpower a train. Every chair in the car was vacant, and the former occupants were crouching in corners or wherever they could hide themselves behind some object that might stop a bullet. When everything was quiet again and the convicts were in irons, no less than 15 men were counted coming from the dressing room of that smoking car."

Can Hire Everything.

Do you know that you can hire almost everything necessary for your house, your table and yourself when you want to give a reception? Heirlooms can be got by the evening, and quite reasonably, from curio dealers. Cut glass and old silver, spindle chairs, rugs, etc., just the very thing that will have a nice, old time look about them, can be had. Likewise, old bottles are fixed up and common wine is decanted into them and sold to people who are perfectly aware of the fraud. It is a wonder, one host confessed to me, the influence a bottle will have on people. Let the bottle have nice cobwebs on it and a good brand, and they will believe the stuff that comes out of the bottle is good too.

A certain lady who entertains a great deal explains that she never uses her "family silver" except on special occasions, and that she keeps it in the safe deposit meanwhile, but at least one other lady knows this is fiction, because the same other lady is in the habit of hiring the same "family silver" for her affairs, and has once or twice had to postpone them because No. 1 had the stuff engaged ahead for the same date.—New York Journal.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

BOW (RING)

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

This Idea stopped that little game:

The bow has a groove on each end A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

Decoration Day in Auburn.

It didn't rain, as it too often does, but many thought it would. Still there was quite a crowd in town, and when the exercises at the church began, there was not a seat unoccupied in any part of the vast building. There was excellent singing, an appropriate prayer by Mr. Wooton, as well as the usual regular exercises by the G. A. R. Then came Mr. Penfield's oration, which was a carefully prepared and scholarly effort. It was well given and well received, everybody commending it highly. Then came the march to the cemetery, and the decorating of the graves, and the usual ceremonies there. The procession was the best ever seen here. The streets were in good condition—not dusty, nor yet muddy, but just right. The afternoon was cool, and the clouds had mostly disappeared. The Auburn Rifles were in the lead, and looked their very best We doubt if the state has a company of better citizen soldiers than ours. It takes hard, earnest work to become proficient in this line, but they have succeeded. Following them came the Veterans, S. of V. and the W. R. C, and then the children carrying flowers It was the largest number of children we have seen on an occasion of this kind in Auburn. There were scores of pretty little lassies, and bright eyed, happy lads, who gladly trudged off the long distance to the cemetery and back, and seemed almost loth to give it up on their return. The town had put on a holiday appearance. When the COURIER flags and bunting "were hung on the outer wall's that morning, everybody thought about it and began to decorate also, and soon the town was ablaze with flags and patriotic decorations. The stores and other business houses all closed from noon till 4 p. m. It was a pleasing success.

The Musical Club.

Our people are having a fine opportunity to develop a taste for a higher grade of music. In fact they have such a taste already, as is evidenced by the good attendance and growing interest in each public meeting of the Auburn Musical Club. Wednesday evening they gave their second public entertainment. at the M. E. church, and it proved very fine in all its features. There was piano music, vocal solos, duets, quartets and choruses, and all were raptuously received. There were several new features that were well received, and will do much to continue the popularity of these club entertainments. The chorus singing by the entire club is a marked feature, for all are aware how difficult it is to so train thirty or more voices so they can do well together, yet this has been very successfully done. One of the most remarkably clever performances, was the piano solo by Mrs. Garwood, "Home Sweet Home" with the "Waves in a Storm." But there were so many fine pieces, we have not space to describe them. We would not willingly discriminate as between the excellent music given, for it was all good, but advise every lover of good music to attend, at least one of these meetings and learn that though we have no theaters, we have an entertainment of a higher order, and all given by home talent.

W SHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1894.
R. W. Cobb,
DEAR SIR: I find the "Chainless" the best wheel for easy riding that I have ever used. It is a good hill wheel, yet geared to 63; it runs the easiest up hill of any wheel I have ever used, and I have tested a number of late.
I am in favor of the whole wheel family, but the "Chainless" in my opinion surpasses all others, especially for business men and ladies. When a man can prepare himself with short pants and long stockings he does not mind the greasy chain, but for the business man the pants legs must be tied up, and this, in hot weather is uncomfortable, besides often impracticable and forgotten.
You can say to your friends that I am a "Chainless" convert.
Respectfully,
P. J. LOCKWOOD.

Henry J. Shafer.

The subject of this obituary died at his home in Auburn, Ind., May 30, 1894, at midnight, at the age of 45 years, 11 months and 3 days. He was born at McKay, Ohio, June 27, 1848. He moved to this county with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Shafer, whose home was for so many years at the center of Jackson township. After the usual attendance in the public schools, he attended the then leading Normal College of the West, the Holbrook Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio. He graduated at Antioch college, Yellow Springs, Ohio. He was afterwards principal of the graded schools of Larne, Marion county, Ohio, and for a time occupied a similar position at Pierceton, Ind. Later, he taught school a few terms in the schools of this county, his last being at Maple Grove, west of Summit. He then studied law in the office of W. L. Penfield and afterwards followed this profession till his death.

Last winter he fell into poor health, apparently resulting from a severe attack of the grip, and from this he never fullly recovered, though at times his friends and physicians were hopeful. But for about a week before his death it was seen there was no hope, and he passed peacefully away, just as the clock showed the midnight of May 30. The funeral was held on Sunday, June 3, at 2:30 p. m., and a large concourse of mourning friends followed him to his last resting place in Woodlawn, the lovely grounds for which he had done so much to beautify. The sermon was by Mr. Wooton and was a very able and affecting effort. Mr. Brosy, of the Lutheran church, also assisted in the services, as both pastors were members of the same order, the Knights of Pythias. This very popular order had charge of all the services, and there were delegations from all the neighboring towns. The band, with muffled drums led the large concourse on its sad journey. The members of the bar were present also in full force. The Auburn Rifles, of which Mr. Shafer was an honorary member, marched with the funeral procession, and formed a picket line at the grave. Mr. Shafer leaves a loving wife and sweet child, a little boy, to mourn for him. The people of Auburn all sympathize with them and the other bereaved ones. The family came to this county in 1854.

It was a sad coincidence that the funeral occured on the anniversary of his marriage. June 3, 1890, he was united to Miss Zora Baird, who is thus early deprived of the society and assistance of a loved companion.

The members of the bar met Saturday, and selected Mr. Penfield to draw up suitable resolutions, and a brief biography, and these are now spread on the records of the court. It will be proper to close with an extract from these records:

"He was not of a demonstrative nature, not ostentatious in the display of his feelings and affections, yet those who knew him well never doubted his steadfast, firm devotion to all the relations of domestic life nor his strong and unshaken attachment and fidelity to his friends. * * * He never sought political office; but in the line of his profession, the esteem in which he was held, and the confidence felt in his probity and attainments was manifested by his unsolicited appointment as counselor and attorney for the county—a position which he held to the date of his decease. As a student of the science of law he displayed a high order of intelligence, zeal and industry, in mastering its principles. He was a safe conselor and faithful to the interests committed to his charge. Those who know him best most appreciate his innate nobility of character."

The attendance was very large. At least 100 marched to the grave, and over fifty carriages were in line.

By a mother-in-law—"You can deceive your guileless little wife, young man but her father's wife—never!"

School Day.

Fairfield township has instituted a new feature in her school work this year, in the form of a general holiday or "School Day," Saturday, June 23. It is in connection with the annual graduating exercises, and is intended as the beginning of an annual School Day. The forenoon is to be devoted to the graduating exercises proper. In the afternoon the Alumni Association meets. Among the numbers who will be present and address the people will be Rev. W. D. Smith, of Elkhart, Prof. Elmer Bower, of Michigan and other able speakers. A good program has been prepared for both the forenoon and afternoon sessions. Prof. L. M. Sniff, president of the Tri-State Normal, will speak in the Lutheran church at the Center in the evening. The day session is to be held in Bair's Grove north of the Center. There are seven graduates in the class this year. Forty have been graduated from the township in former years, making a total of forty-seven graduates in all. Two of the members, David S. Gardner and Rebecca Rowe, are dead, Mr. Gardner dying while in attendance at college in Springfield, Ohio. Of the forty graduates, all save three or four have continued their studies in higher institutions of learning, and the teaching force of the township is made up almost entirely of former graduates. All this shows the educational progress that old Fairfield is making and the advantages of systemized efforts in school work. The graduating system itself has proven of inestimable value to the educational work of the township. It has given an inspiration to the pupils, and has awakened a greater interest in schools both with parents and teachers. We know there will be a greater interest in this School Day, and it is to be hoped that every parent in the township will lay aside his work and with his family attend this meeting, and thus have a day of recreation, social enjoyment, and a pleasant and profitable time.

County Schools will Begin.

Co. Supt. Merica and the township trustees had a meeting on Monday, at which it was decided to have the schools over the county begin Sept. 10, though there is some little doubt as to the money now locked up under the call from the attorney-general. We trust, however, that this matter may be settled soon, so the trustees may have the money to use. The diverting of the school funds from them was all wrong in the first place, and we still hold that the decision was made without hearing both sides of the question. The more recent decisions show this.

Indiana Miners Fire on a Coal Train with Winchesters—Indianapolis Bank Wreckers Receive Their Sentence—The Oregon Election—Miners Shot Down.

WITH RIFLES

Indiana Striking Miners Stop a Coal Train.

A special from Terre Haute, dated Wednesday, says: The wildest reports come from the Shelburn District of trouble with the striking miners. Company H of this city, of the First Regiment, Indiana Legion, was due home from Cannelburg at 4:45 this evening, but had not arrived at midnight, being stopped along with Company F in the Shelburn District to assist troops there in coping with the disturbances of the striking miners, who seem to be on the verge of desperation. The trouble at Cannelburg is over. Adjutant General Robbins having broken camp there, and the entire trouble is now centered at Shelburn and adjacent country. The freight train crew on the Evansville and Terre Haute road, due here at 6 o'clock this evening from the Shelburn district, did not arrive till 11:30 to night, and the story they tell is a thrilling one. They were hauling five loads of coal bound for Terre Haute, the militia being a little ahead on another train, when suddenly about two miles from Farmersburg, an armed body of miners descended from a hill and at the point of Winchesters compelled the engineer to run the coal train up a siding onto the coal branch. Simultaneously a bridge on the branch line was set on fire, and the engine after leaving the coal, had to run through a blazing fire of the timbers to get to the main track. Two shots were fired at the cab but neither the engineer or fireman were hurt. The proceedings were bold to an amazing degree, almost under the eyes of the militia. The troops charged back but the miners retreated to the hills. Four of the leaders were arrested. The latest, at midnight, is that the militia are ready at a moment's notice for an attack and the greatest excitement prevails. The railroad company is trying to repair the bridge.

The military authorities have complained to the Governor of the timidity and incompetency of the Sheriff of Sullivan County, and it is said that the Governor has removed the Sheriff and asked the Judge of the Circuit Court to appoint a peace officer through whom decisive action may be taken.

The Coffins Receive Their Sentence.

F. A. Coffin, P. C. Coffin, and Albert S. Reed, the convicted bank looters, were arraigned in the Federal Court at Indianapolis for sentence. The defense, led by ex-Attorney General Miller, made a desperate effort to secure a new trial, but failed. Francis Coffin got ten years and Percival Coffin five years, while Reed, who was merely a tool of the Coffins, was released on suspended sentence, mercy being shown in his case. The ambitious young Coffins gained the confidence of the aged bank president and secured vast sums of money from him on fictitious values.

Will Cross the Sea Alone.

Capt. Adolph Freitsch of Milwaukee, who proposes to cross the Atlantic in a thirteen-ton schooner, has arrived at Buffalo with his little craft, the Nina. He will remain there several days, and then go through the canal to New York. Capt. Freitsch is bound for Stockholm and expects to make the voyage from New York in thirty days. He will be the first man to attempt the trip without a companion, but he says his boat steers so well that he will get enough sleep in small installments to carry him through.

Big Rebellion in China.

A dispatch from Tien-Tsin, China, says that the revolution in the provinces of Kirin and Manchoria is extending greatly. Mounted banditti, armed with repeating rifles, have defeated the imperial troops in every engagement and have occupied several important positions, including the Sarsing arsenal, in which 100,000 rifles were stored. The situation is so alarming that Viceroy Lihung Chang is gathering a large force of troops to suppress the rebellion.

The Colorado Flood.

Idaho Springs special: The damage by the flood in this county is estimated at $100,000. The storm was the longest and most disastrous ever known. On the mountains instead of rain, sixteen inches of snow fell. Almost all bridges over Fair Creek and tributaries were destroyed, some houses were washed away and mines flooded.

The Oregon Election.

The voters of Oregon Tuesday elected an entire State ticket, two members of Congress, one Supreme Court Judge, and full County and municipal tickets. Owing to the great extent of the flood it will be a week or more before full returns are received. It is safe to say the Republicans have elected their entire ticket.

Strike Settled.

The strike at Cripple Creek, Col., appears to have been settled. The terms seem to be that the owners pay $3 for eight hours work, and may employ both union and non-union men.

Miners Shot.

Charleston (W. Va.) special: As the Powellton miners were coming from work Wednesday, they were fired on by strikers in ambush. Four miners were killed outright and many more were wounded.

Negro Democratic League.

C. H. J. Taylor, President of the Negro National Democratic League, has issued a call for a convention to be held in Indianapolis August 2.

It Is a Lottery.

The United States Court of Appeals has handed down a decision in the case of the United States against the officers of the Guarantee Investment Company, who were prosecuted in the United States District Court at Chicago on the charge of conducting a lottery. The decision of the lower court that the Guarantee Investment Company is a lottery was affirmed and the sentences imposed on the officers by Judge Grosscup approved. George M. McDonald, the President, was sentenced by Judge Grosscup to pay a fine of $1,000 and to serve the Government for eleven

A CENTURY OLD CLAIM.

Heirs of a Revolutionary Patriot Again Ask Millions from Uncle Sam.

After the lapse of fifteen years the De Haven heirs are coming to the front again with their claim against the United States Government. Jacob De Haven was a wealthy tanner of Germantown, Pa., when the American soldiers at Valley Forge were suffering untold hardships. Jacob's patriotism, like that of Robert Morris and others, prompted him to turn over $450,000 to the Government. At the close of the war Robert Morris and the other wealthy Philadelphians took continental script for the advances. Jacob De Haven refused to settle except in gold. His heirs claim that he never did settle, and died poor and broken-hearted in 1793. The first effort on the part of the heirs to secure the repayment of the loan was shortly before the war of 1812. The claim was lost in the burning of the capitol in 1815. The next effort, on the eve of the Mexican war, was pushed aside by weightier matters. Again, in 1859, the claim went to a hearing, but the war of the rebellion came on to stop it. In 1876 the claim failed of a hearing on account of the Hayes-Tilden contest for the Presidency. The Western part of the family now intends taking up the matter where the Eastern heirs dropped it. Some of the heirs think the claim should be for the loan and interest compounded at 6 per cent, or $230,000,000; others would be satisfied with 4 per cent, or $2,538,000; others say 4 per cent compounded interest, $28,800,000 and still others affirm the original loan was made at 10 per cent, making the claim $5,666,000.

VACCINATING BY FORCE.

Chicago Health Officers Ask Police Aid in the Pursuance of Their Work.

Polish and Bohemian residents of the smallpox infested district in the southwestern portion of Chicago have lately seriously interfered with the work of health officials who had been sent out in that locality with orders to vaccinate the inmates of every house. In some cases the officials have been refused admittance to houses, and at other times they have been beaten and their lives have even been threatened. The Health Department decided that it would require a show of force in order to go on with vaccination in a thorough way, and the Police Department was asked to aid in the work. Inspector Lewis of Desplaines District, detailed 100 officers to accompany the Health Department representatives. When the procession of police officers in full uniform and the health officers proceeded to the places designated, large crowds of men, women and children swarmed out and hooted them, but further than that did not attempt any interference. The health officers, under the leadership of Dr. Garrott, were well supplied with vaccine points and with fumigating material. When they went into the houses to vaccinate the people police officers accompanied them, and no violence was offered. The police throughout the city have received orders to assist the health officers in carrying on their work.

COAL FAMINE IN THE WEST.

Missouri Pacific Compelled to Abandon Trains—Other Industries Affected.

Specials from railroad centers of Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas indicate that business there is becoming affected by the coal miners' strike and the consequent scarcity of coal. At Sedalia the Missouri Pacific shops shut down. The shops of the Central Branch Railroad at Atchison, Kan., which is controlled by the Missouri Pacific in that city, have been closed down indefinitely. Several regular freights have also been discontinued. At Van Buren, Ark., the Missouri Pacific Road shops and roundhouse are at a standstill. Nothing but passenger and perishable freights are moving, owing to the scarcity of coal, caused by a thousand men striking on Sunday at Coal Hill, Huntington and Jenny Lind. There are but twenty-five cars of coal accessible and that is to be used for passenger trains and emergencies only. At Lincoln, Ill., the roller-mills have closed down and the electric street cars were obliged to stop running. The Illinois Central has begun to draw on its 1,500 tons of coal at Sioux Falls, S. D. At West Superior, Wis., the price of soft coal has risen from $2.75, at the opening of navigation, to $3.50.

INJURED BY EXCESSIVE COLD.

Frosts in Many Parts of the Country That Caused Great Damage.

The Weather Bureau in its weather crop bulletin says:

Over the greater portion of the country east of the Rocky Mountains the night temperatures have been unusually low and injuriously affected or retarded the growth of vegetation in the States of the central valleys and also in the eastern portions of the cotton regions and frosts occurred in the States of the Ohio, Upper Mississippi, and Lower Missouri Valleys. The damage resulting from the frosts of the previous week is reported as being more serious than was first supposed in Kentucky, Missouri, and South Carolina, but in the States of the Northwest crops are recovering from the effects of frost. Drought conditions are reported from Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming, and rain is needed in Colorado, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, and in portions of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas.

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

Wisconsin and Georgia the Scenes of Serious Wrecks.

A most distressing accident happened on the Wisconsin Central at Manville, a deserted station three miles north of Marshfield, Wis., Tuesday night. The St. Paul limited, made up of baggage and two coaches, three sleepers and the private car of Howard Morris, was derailed at that place by a defective switch, resulting in the death of five and many injured. The rear coach of a train on the Albany and Columbia branch of the Southwestern Railway was overturned by broken rails at Holts, Ga., Wednesday morning, and forty people were injured, two or three of whom will in all probability die. The train consisted of six coaches loaded with excursionists from Andersonville to attend Decoration Day exercises at the National Cemetery.

NEGRO COLONIZATION PLAN.

Mexican Company Buys 2,500,000 Acres of Land on the Rio Grande.

An extensive land deal was closed at San Antonio, Texas, involving 2,500,000 acres of land lying on the Rio Grande in the Mexican States of Coahuila and Chihuahua. The land was sold by ex-Gov. Gonzales, of Chihuahua, to the Mexican Coffee, Cotton and Colonization Company, with headquarters at San Antonio, and represented by J. S. McNamara. W. H. Ellis, who is interested in Mexican colonization schemes, will colonize 10,000 negroes on part of the land.

May Call for Federal Troops.

Denver army officers believe that it will be necessary to call out United States troops to quell the insurrection at Cripple Creek. They believe the strikers cannot be dislodged from Bull Hill by charging upon the mountain, but that it will be necessary to shell their stronghold. Mining attorneys have advised the mine-owners to call upon President Cleveland for regular troops under the statute giving the President power to protect the people in their rights when the State authorities refuse or fail to do so. The Cripple Creek banks, fearing a riot, have shipped to Colorado Springs and stored in safety vaults $100,000.

THIEF AND ASSASSIN.

Statement of a Dying Railroad Detective Shows Up a Villainous Plot.

George S. Newcomb, assistant special agent of the Western Indiana Railroad, who was shot in Chicago the other night on an incoming Grand Trunk train, made an ante-mortem statement, and on the strength of it Special Agent Jas. C. Maxwell, of the Grand Trunk Road, was locked up at the Harrison Street Police Station. Before the police get through with the case they expect to prove that there was a huge conspiracy between detectives employed by the Grand Trunk Road and a gang of confidence men to divide the plunder got from the people robbed on the trains of the company. For some time confidence men have been boarding the trains of the Grand Trunk Road and robbing the passengers. So serious have these outrages been that Newcomb and Maxwell were detailed to board incoming passenger trains, catch the thieves at their work if possible and arrest them. Newcomb charges that while en route to Archer avenue to apprehend these thugs, Maxwell boldly admitted that he had entered into a conspiracy to "protect" these highwaymen in their operations and generously offered to divide his share of the proceeds with Newcomb. So convinced was the dying man of the perfidy and villainy of his brother officer that he firmly believed that the suspicious characters they found on the rear car of the Grand Trunk train were Maxwell's accomplices. He believes that they had been informed by Maxwell that the road would be clear for their operations, and that when he seized the thug who a moment later shot him, it was by Maxwell's order that the shot was fired.

OIL TAKES PLACE OF COAL.

Hundreds of Manufactories in Chicago Are Using It.

Since the beginning of the great coal strikes, Chicago fuel-oil merchants claim there has been a marked increase in the sale of crude oil to manufactories for use in place of coal. Even before the price of coal was boosted skyward by the contracted output, dealers say oil was substituted, with a goodly margin to the credit of economy. As coal went up, there has, of course, been a corresponding increase saved in the use of fuel oil. The saving results not only from the difference in cost of the two fuels but also from the saving of labor. One man can easily manage six or eight boilers or furnaces, while if coal is used it would require the services of at least a dozen men to feed the fires and watch the gauges. The first experiments with oil for boiler heating purposes were tried in Chicago about seven years ago. Now over a hundred factories in the city use it as their only source of heat. All of the brick yards in and about the city use oil for burning brick. The North Chicago, West Chicago and South Chicago street-railway plants, the 47th, Washington and Harrison street Edison plants and nearly all the ice and cold-storage plants also use oil. All the power at the World's Fair and on the Midway was furnished from crude oil.

SITE FOR FERRIS WHEEL.

Inventor Is Puzzled to Find a Location in New York.

Part of the Ferris wheel has arrived in New York and Inventor Ferris is casting about for a suitable location. This seems to be the point that worries him most. He has an elephant on his hands, so to speak, and, as he expresses it, "is looking for a stable to house it in." Mr. Ferris says he has a half dozen locations in view. The gross total of material in the wheel is 6,000,000 pounds of iron and steel and 500,000 feet of lumber. It will take two months to tear down the wheel in the Midway Plaisance and transport it to New York. It will require 150 cars in transit and the big axle will be taken East on the great car specially constructed to transport the World's Fair Krupp gun across the continent.

TOWNS ARE IN DANGER.

Big Canyon Reservoir Undermined and Expected to Give Way.

The water has undermined the walls of the large reservoir situated at the mouth of Big canyon, just above Palmer Lake, Col., and it is momentarily expected to collapse. Citizens of Monument and Husted and also Colorado Springs have been warned. At Boulder, the pipe factory, five houses, the railroad tracks and all the city and railroad bridges have been washed away by the flood in Boulder Creek. Many mines have been flooded and tunnels have caved in. At Manitou business is practically suspended and hundreds of men are working to save their property. The stream from Williams canyon is rushing over Mineral Water Park, leaving gravel in place of grass.

St. Louis Assignment.

The Central Trust Company of St. Louis made an assignment to W. F. Leonard, its secretary and treasurer. Liabilities $100,000, assets about the same.

RUIN BY THE FLOODS.

GREAT HAVOC WROUGHT IN THE FAR WEST.

Raging Torrent of Water Sweeps Everything Before It in the Vancouver Region—Thousands Are Homeless and Property Loss Will Reach Millions.

Fraser Valley a Sea.

Terrible destruction has been wrought by the floods in the Frazer Valley and throughout the entire Vancouver region. Thousands of families have been rendered homeless, many lives were lost, while the loss of property will reach into the millions. The known, nor will it be for several days, as full extent of the calamity is not yet the waters are still rising, threatening even greater havoc. Two thousand families homeless and a property loss of $3,000,000 is the estimated result up to the time this is written. The river rose ten inches at Westminster Thursday, and from points farther up come reports that the river is nearly two feet higher than has ever before been known. The valley for 100 miles has been inundated. So great has been the destruction that ocean steamers passing in through the straits of San Juan de Fuca are encountering floating roofs of houses and barns and innumerable carcasses of hogs, sheep and cattle that have passed out through the Fraser's mouth with other debris from the valley.

Steamers from the rivers and Puget Sound are still being pressed into the work of rescue. Though no lives have been lost there have been many narrow escapes and thrilling experiences. Many families have been driven from their houses. One steamer brought 307 settlers from New Westminster late Thursday night. At many points there is great destitution among the luckless settlers who have fled from their homes. At the Salmon River settlement, where the water is ten feet deep on the flat, many families are huddled together on the highlands and living on one scanty meal a day. The rescuing steamers have neglected them to care for others who are in greater danger. Every effort is being made to relieve the flood sufferers, but facilities and means are utterly inadequate to meet the demand. The Canadian Pacific has 1,000 men at work repairing its tracks, but the flood is breaking it faster than they can possibly mend it. Press dispatches given below tell of the destruction by the flood throughout the Northwest.

Spokane, Wash.—Further particulars of the flood which destroyed the town of Conconully have been received. In addition to the flood in the creek, a cloud-burst occurred, increasing the volume of water into a raging torrent. Everything was swept before the flood. Trees, houses, and rocks came down upon the town, where they lodged, forming a jam fifteen feet high at places. Nothing is left. When the flood was within half a mile of town every one fled to higher land. Outside aid is necessary. The loss is complete, as there was no chance to save property.

Portland, Ore.—The Upper Columbia continues to rise. Union Pacific affairs are in a deplorable condition.

Colorado Towns Swept Away.

Boulder, Colo.—The pipe factory, five houses, the railroad tracks and all the city and railroad bridges have been washed away by the flood in Boulder Creek. Poverty Flats is submerged. The Sunset branch of the Gulf Road and the Mountain Road are entirely gone. The towns of Crisman and Salina, mining camps in Boulder Canyon, have been wiped out of existence. Each had a population of about 200, all of whom are now homeless. The total loss in and around Boulder is estimated at $500,000. All the crops in the St. Vrain Valley, one of the richest grain regions in the State, have been destroyed by the flood. Fifty bridges between here and the mountains have been carried away. The towns of Copper Rock and Sugar Loaf are gone, the Prussian and Corning mills are flooded, and six of their outbuildings swept down the canyon. Springdale and Jamestown suffered greatly. Several other small towns along the canyon have been partly destroyed.

Erie, Colo.—Coal Creek is on the rampage, and the main street of this city is two feet under water. A section of track on the railway is washed out and the telegraph wires are down for half a mile. Boulder Creek and St. Vrain's River are each badly swollen. The railroad bed is rapidly washing away. Many families have been compelled to leave their homes. Business houses are flooded and stock has been drowned and growing crops carried away.

Manitou, Colo.—Business is practically suspended and hundreds of men are working to save their property. The stream from Williams Canyon is rushing over Mineral Water Park, leaving gravel in place of grass. Tons of earth has been torn from the pavilion grounds. Dynamite has been used frequently to demolish gorges. The water is still rising.

Palmer Lake, Colo.—The water has undermined the walls of the large reservoir situated at the mouth of Big Canyon, just above the village, and it is momentarily expected to collapse. The reservoir is 100 feet wide, 9,000 feet long, and 20 feet deep.

Denver, Colo.—Platte River continues to rise, and the people living on the low ground had to flee for their lives. The railway embankment was washed away in places, and bridges were badly damaged.

Pueblo, Colo.—The flood in Pueblo is receding, and no further damage has been done. The total property loss, aside from the damage to the railroads, is thought not to exceed $100,000.

Golden, Colo.—The flood in Clear Creek caused damage to the amount of $20,000 to Coors's brewery and other property in this city. Many people had to leave their houses.

Idaho Springs, Colo.—The damage by the flood in this county is estimated at $100,000. On the mountain tops, instead of rain, eighteen inches of snow fell.

DEATH IN THE DARK.

HORRIBLE WRECK OF A WISCONSIN CENTRAL TRAIN.

Six Persons Are Mangled and Burned to Death and a Much Larger Number Seriously Injured—Fire Adds Its Terrors to the Struggling Survivors.

Switch Was Tampered With.

The St. Paul limited southbound train on the Wisconsin Central Railroad, which passed Marshfield at 1:03 a. m. met with a horrible accident which has never been equaled in Northern Wisconsin, and adds another long list of victims through disasters of this kind. Six persons are dead, and from fifteen to twenty are injured, some of them fatally. Following is a list of those killed outright.

BIGELOW, JUDSON, brakeman, Stevens Point, Wis.

BOSLEE, OLIVER, newsboy, Stevens Point, Wis.

GEBHARDT, GEORGE, fireman, Stevens Point, Wis.

HUBBARD, JAMES, engineer, Stevens Point, Wis.

RUSSELL, WILLIAM B., railroad surveyor, Milwaukee.

WAGNER, MRS. JOHN, Butte, Mont.

The train, which was in charge of Conductor Gavin and was made up of seven coaches and sleepers, left Abbott's Ford behind time, and while running at fifty miles an hour struck a defective split switch at Mannville, a deserted station, derailing the entire train and piling engine and cars in a heap of broken timbers. To add to the horror, the entire mass was soon in a sheet of flames, which, mingled with the groans and cries of the injured, made a scene that terrified the hearts of the bravest.

Number of Killed Not Known.

According to the dispatches about fifty passengers were on the train. Under direction of Division Superintendent Horn, who happened to be on the north-bound passenger, a special train was fitted up and left for Stevens Point at 7 o'clock bearing the remains of Engineer Hubbard, Fireman Gebhardt and Russell and a passenger. When the body of Bigelow, the head brakeman, was recovered it had a watch in one hand and a lantern on an arm.

Mannville, the scene of the accident, was once a lively sawmill town, but of late years has gradually sunk to nothing, until now all that remains is a few scattered buildings. During the forest fires last fall the depot burned, and about all that is left to mark the place is a heap of burned ruins and a number of side tracks. The accident occurred at the first switch, where a supposed broken bar caused a switch to open sufficiently to derail the train.

After leaving the track the train plowed along over the ties for a distance of ten rods and then toppled and rolled over, the engine and tender going into the ditch and the cars piling on top of each other. All were soon set on fire from the stoves. From out of this tangled mass men and women who were lucky not to be pinned down crawled, many making wonderful escapes.

Receiver Howard Morris and Sidney Hirsch, a business man from Ironwood, occupied the company's business car, which did not get into the heap and escaped destruction by burning. The rear sleeper and the business car alone came out practically unharmed.

Cause of the Terrible Disaster.

General Manager Whitcomb said of the accident and the possible cause: "The split switch of the passenger track has evidently been tampered with, allowing the wheels of the locomotive to catch the point." Describing the catastrophe Mr. Hirsch said: "Our train was running at the rate of about fifty or sixty miles an hour when the crash came, and the train seemed to go into a heap within a few seconds. I was asleep in the next to the rear sleeper at the time and was thrown from my berth, as were all the other passengers. As soon as we could scramble out we found a terrible state of affairs. The baggage, express, smoker, day coach, a business car, and a sleeper were piled on top of each other, and within a very few minutes the pile was on fire."

Land Seekers' Excursion, June 5.

On the above date the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad will sell tickets at one fare for the round trip to Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Louisiana, Kentucky, Mississippi, and points in Florida. Tickets good to return until June 25. Stop-overs allowed on going trip. For further information apply to City Ticket Office, 230 Clark street, or Charles L. Beds Like Cupboards.

"The peasents of Brittany have some strange customs, and one of them is of quite ancient origin," said a traveler. "Many years ago their coast was visited by pirates, who invaded the houses and carried off all the money and valuables they could find. In order to protect themselves in the future, the people had an odd kind of a bedstead made, which looks exactly like a cupboard with shelves and a door. On the lower shelf slept the master of the house and his wife, while the children of the household were distributed on the upper shelves. A small opening like the port-hole on a steamship was made against each shelf, and covered with a wire sieve, which admitted the air. At bed-time the family crept into their respective places, taking their treasures with them, and, locking the door, slept with a feeling of perfect security. Many of these curious articles of furniture are still to be found in the old houses of Brittany, and are highly prized by curiosity seekers."

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER X—Continued.

"The river," thought Constance, white with horror: "the ruins are only a little way from the river."

She ran along the romantic pathway which followed the river bank for about half a mile, and there ascended the steep hill on the slope of which stood the battered old shell which had once been a feudal castle, with dungeons beneath its stately halls, and a deep and sacred well for the safe putting away of troublesome enemies. Very peaceful looked the old ruins on this balmy September day, in the mellow afternoon sunshine, solitary, silent, deserted. There was no trace of nurse or child in the grassy court or on the crumbling old rampart. Yes, just where the rampart looked down upon the river, just at that point where the short, submerged grass sloped deepest, Constance Sinclair found a token of her child's presence—a toy dog, white, fleecy, and deliciously untrue to nature—an animal whose shapeless beauty had been the baby Christabel's delight.

Constance gave a little cry of joy.

"They have been here, they are somewhere near," she thought, and then suddenly, in the sweet summer stillness the peril of this particular spot struck her—that steep descent—the sunburned sward, slippery as glass—the deep, swift current below—the utter loneliness of the scene—no help at hand.

"Oh, God!" she cried, "the river, the river!"

She looked round her with wild, beseeching eyes, as if she would have asked all nature to help her in this great agony. There was no one within sight. The nearest house was a cottage on the bank of the river, about a hundred yards from the bottom of the slope. A narrow foot-path at the other end of the rampart led to the bank, and by this path Constance hurried down to make inquiries at the cottage.

The door was standing open, and there was a noise of several voices within. Some one was lying on a bed in a corner, and a group of peasant women were round her ejaculating compassionately.

"Das arme madchen. Ach, Himmel! Was gibt es?" and a good deal more of a spasmodic and sympathetic nature. A woman's garments, dripping wet, were hanging in front of the stove, beside which sat an elderly vine-dresser with stolid countenance smoking his pipe.

Constance Sinclair put the women aside and made her way to the bed. It was Melanie who lay there wrapped in a blanket, sobbing hysterically.

"Melanie, where is my child?"

The girl shrieked and turned her face to the wall.

"She risked her life to save it," said the man in German. "The current is very rapid under the old Schloss. She plunged in after the baby. I found her in the water, clinging to the branch of a willow. If I had been a little later she would have been drowned."

"And the child—my child?"

"Ach, mein Gott," exclaimed the man, with a shrug. "No one has seen the poor child. No one knows."

"My child is drowned."

"Liebe Frau," said one of the women, "the current is strong. The little one was at play on the rampart. Its foot slipped, and it rolled down the hill into the water. This good girl ran down after it, and jumped into the water. My husband found her there. She tried to save the child; she could do no more. But the current was too strong. Dear lady, be comforted. The good God will help you."

"No, God is cruel," cried Constance. "I will never see Him or believe in Him any more."

And with this blasphemy, wrung from her tortured heart, a great wave of blood seemed to rush over Constance Sinclair's brain, and she fell senseless on the stone floor.

CHAPTER XI.

GETTING OVER IT.

Baby Christabel was drowned. Of that fact there could not be a shadow of doubt in the minds of those who had loved her, although the sullen stream which had swallowed her lovely form refused to give it back. Perhaps the loreleis had taken her for their playfellow, and transformed her mortal beauty into something rich and strange.

Anyhow, the nets that dragged the river did not bring up the golden hair, or the sad drowned eyes that once danced with joyous life. And if anything could add to Constance Sinclair's grief it was this last drop of bitterness—the knowledge that her child would never rest in hallowed ground, that there was no quiet grave on which to lay her aching head and feel nearer her darling, no spot of earth to which she could press her lips and fancy she could be heard by the little one lying in her pure shroud below, asleep on Mother Earth's calm breast.

No, her little one was driven by winds and waves, and had no resting-place under the weary stars.

Melanie Duport, when she recovered from the horror of that one dreadful day, told her story clearly enough. It was the same story she had told the peasant woman whose husband rescued her. Baby Christabel was playing on the rampart, Melanie holding her securely, as she believed, when the little one, attracted by the flight of a butterfly, made a sudden spring—alas! madame knew not how strong and active the dear angel was, and how difficult it was to hold her sometimes—and slipped out of Melanie's arms on to the rampart—which was very low just there, as madame might have observed—on to the grass, and rolled and rolled down to the river. It was all as quick as thought; one moment and the angel's white frock was floating on the stream. Melanie tore down, she knew not how; it was as if heaven had given her wings in that moment. The white frock was still floating. Melanie plunged into the river; ah! but what was her life at such a time?—a nothing. Alas! she tried to grasp the frock, but the stream swept it from her; an instant and one saw it no more. She felt herself sinking, and then she fainted. She knew nothing until she woke in the cottage where madame found her.

Melanie was a heroine in a small way after this sad event. The villagers thought her a wonderful person. Her master rewarded her handsomely, and promised to retain her in his service till she should choose to marry. Her mistress was as grateful as despair can be for any service.

The light of Constance Sinclair's life was gone. Her one source of joy was turned to a fountain of bitterness. A dull and blank despair took possession of her. She did not succumb utterly to her grief. She struggled against it bravely, and she would accept no one's compassion or sympathy. One of her married sisters, a comfortable matron with half a dozen healthy children in her nursery, offered to come and stay with Mrs. Sinclair; but this kindly offer was refused almost uncivilly.

"What good could you do me?" asked Constance. "If you spoke to me of my darling I should hate you, yet I should always be thinking of her. Do you suppose you could comfort me by telling me about your herd of children, or by repeating bits of Scripture, such as people quote in letters of condolence? No; there is no such thing as comfort for my grief. I like to sit alone and think of my pet, and be wretched in my own way. Don't be angry with me, dear, for writing so savagely. I sometimes feel as if I hated everyone in the world, but happy mothers most of all."

Gilbert Sinclair endured the loss of his little girl with a certain amount of philosophy. In the first place she was not a boy, and had offended him ab initio by that demerit. She had been a pretty little darling, no doubt, and he had had his moments of fondness for her; but his wife's idolatry of the child was an offense that had rankled deep. He had been jealous of his infant daughter. He put on mourning and expressed himself deeply afflicted, but his burden did not press heavily. A boy would come, perhaps, by and by, and make amends for this present loss, and Constance would begin her baby worship again.

Mr. Sinclair did not know that for some hearts there is no beginning again.

Martha Briggs recovered health and strength, but her grief for the lost baby was genuine and unmistakable. Constance offered to keep her in her service, but this favor Martha declined with tears.

"No, ma'am, it's best for both that we should part. I should remind you of"—here a burst of sobs supplied the missing name—"and you'd remind me. I'll go home. I'm more grateful than words can say for all your goodness; but, oh, I hate myself so for being ill. I never, never, shall forgive myself—never."

So Martha went back to Davenant in her mistress' train, and there parted with her to return to the parental roof, which was not very far off. It was not so with Melanie. She only clung to her mistress more devotedly after the loss of the baby. If her dear lady would but let her remain with her as her own maid, she would be beyond measure happy. Was not hairdressing the art in which she most delighted, and millinery the natural bent of her mind? Gilbert said the girl had acted nobly, and ought to be retained in his wife's service; so Constance, whose Abigail had lately left her to better herself by marriage with an aspiring butler, consented to keep Melanie as her personal attendant. She did this, believing with Gilbert that the girl deserved recompense; but Melanie's presence was full of painful associations, and kept the bitter memory of her lost child continually before her.

Constance went back to Davenant, and life flowed on in its sullen course somehow without Baby Christabel. The two rooms that had been nurseries—two of the prettiest rooms in the big old house, with French windows and a wide balcony, with a flight of steps leading down to the quaintest old garden, shut in from the rest of the grounds by a holly hedge—now became temples dedicated to the lost. But the business of life still went on, and there was a great deal of time she could not call her own. Gilbert, having dismissed the memory of his lost child to the limbo of unpleasant recollections, resented his wife's brooding grief as a personal injury, and was determined to give that sullen sorrow no indulgence. When the hunting season was at its best, and pheasant shooting made one of the attractions of Davenant, Mr. Sinclair determined to fill his house with his own particular set—horsy men—men who gave their minds to guns and dogs, and rarely opened their mouths for speech except to relate an anecdote about an accomplished setter, or "liver-colored pointer of mine, you know," or to dilate upon the noble behavior of "that central fire Lancaster of mine," in yesterday's battue—men who devoted their nights and days to billiards, and whose conversation was of breaks and flukes, pockets and cannons.

"You'd better ask some women, Constance," said Gilbert, one Sunday morning in November, as they sat at their tete-a-tete breakfast, the wife reading her budget of letters, the husband with the "Field" propped up in front of his coffee-cup, and the "Sporting Gazette" at his elbow. "I've got a lot of men coming next week, and you might feel yourself de trop in a masculine party."

"Have you asked people, Gilbert, so soon?" said Constance, reproachfully.

"I don't know what you call soon. The pheasants are as wild as they can be, and Lord Highover's hounds have been out nearly a month. You'd better ask some nice young women—the right sort, you know; no nonsense about them."

"I thought we should have spent this winter quietly, Gilbert," said Constance, in a low voice, looking down at her black dress with its deep folds of crape; "just this one winter."

"That's sheer sentimentality," exclaimed Gilbert, giving the "Field" an impatient twist as he folded it to get at his favorite column. "What good would it do you or me to shut ourselves up in this dismal old house like a pair of superannuated owls? Would it bring back the poor little thing we've lost, or make her happier in Paradise? No, Constance. She's happy. 'Nothing can touch her more,' as Milton, or somebody, says. Egad, I think the poor little darling is to be envied for having escaped all the troubles and worries of life; for life at best is a bad book; you can't hedge everything. Don't cry, Constance. That long face of yours is enough to send a fellow into an untimely grave. Let us get a lot of pleasant people round us, and make the most of this place while it is ours. We mayn't have it always."

The sinister remark fell upon an unheeded ear. Constance Sinclair's thoughts had wandered far away from that oak-paneled breakfast-room. They had gone back to the sunny hillside, the grassy rampart, the swift and fatal river, the bright landscape which had stamped itself upon her memory indelibly, in the one agonized moment in which she had divined her darling's fate.

"Gilbert, I really am not fit to receive people," she said, after a silence of some minutes, during which Mr. Sinclair had amused himself by sundry a venturous dips of his fork, like an old Jewish priest's dive into the sacred seething-pot, into the crockery case of a Perigord pie. "If you have set your heart upon having your friends this winter you had better let me go away, to Hastings or somewhere. It would be a pleasure for you to be free from the sight of my unhappiness."

"Yes, and for you to find consolation elsewhere, no doubt. You would pretty soon find a consoler if I gave you your liberty."

"Gilbert!"

"Oh, don't think to frighten me with your indignant looks. I have not forgotten the scene in this room when you heard your old lover's supposed death. Sir Cyprian Davenant is in London, in high feather, too, I understand; for some ancient relation of his has been obliging enough to die and leave him another fortune. A pity you did not wait a little longer, isn't it? A pity your father should have been in such a hurry to make his last matrimonial bargain."

"Gilbert!" cried Constance, passionately, "what have I ever done that you should dare to talk to me like this? How have I ever failed in my duty to you?"

"Shall I tell you? I won't say that, having accepted me for your husband, you ought to have loved me. That would be asking too much. The ethics of the nineteenth century don't soar so high as that. But you might have pretended to care for me just a little. It would have been only civil, and it would have made the wheels of life go smoother for both of us."

"I am not capable of pretending, Gilbert," answered Constance, gravely. "If you would only be a little more considerate, and give me credit for being what I am, your true and dutiful wife, I might give you as much affection as the most exacting husband could desire. I would, Gilbert," she cried, in a voice choked with sobs, "for the sake of our dead child."

"Don't humbug," said Gilbert, sulkily. "We ought to understand each other by this time. As for running away from this house, or any other house of mine to mope in solitude, or to find consolation among old friends, please comprehend that if you leave my house once you leave it forever. I shall expect to see you at the head of my table. I shall expect you to surround yourself with pretty women. I shall expect you to be a wife that a fellow may be proud of."

"I shall do my best to oblige you, Gilbert; but perhaps I might have been a better wife if you had let me take life my own way."

A MODERN HEROINE.

How She Stopped a Driver's Brutal Treatment of a Horse.

Sleighs drawn by four horses are employed on the Wellington street route, says the Montreal Star. A heavily loaded sleigh was coming cityward. One of the horses next the vehicle fell. The driver lashed it with his whip. Then he kicked it. Finally he swore at it. But he did not get down to extricate the animal from the harness, which held it a prisoner. The men in the sleigh buried their chins in their overcoats and indulged the contemplation of fatalism as a philosophy which removes every passion from the breast. Suddenly a lady clad in a sealskin sacque got out, and, going up to the driver, said to him in an imperative way: "Give me that whip." The driver was dazed. In a stupefied way he handed over the whip. "Now," said the little lady, "if you touch that horse again I will let you feel the weight of this whip across your shoulders. Get down this moment and cut the harness and help the horse to rise." The driver stared at her. The women in the sleigh tittered, the men hung their heads. "Get down this moment," said the lady, shaking the whip over the driver. The latter mechanically obeyed. The harness was loosened, the horse was raised to its feet. The lady put her hand in her sachel, brought forth some biscuits, and treated the four horses to one each. The effect was magical. The hopeless cynicism of their poor faces gave place to hope, and love, and gratitude. Then the lady, very white, but as resolute as Joan of Arc ever was, entered the sleigh. The men still hung their heads in silence.

Buying Babies with Postage Stamps.

"Have you had many requests for the canceled postage stamps you receive?" asked a business man yesterday. "No? Well, that's strange, for I have been besieged by boys and girls asking for them. At first I thought it was a revival of the old stamp collecting craze, but all the little ones seemed so earnest in their work that I questioned several. I was informed that the stamps were wanted to redeem Chinese babies. You can imagine how such an assertion astonished me. Upon further inquiry I was told that it was a habit in China to kill babies, especially girls, and that these stamps were being gathered by a religious order to send to that country. It is said that with the stamps the missionaries of that country are able to redeem the condemned babies from death. You would be surprised at the number of children and men that are engaged in collecting canceled stamps. I know of one little girl who turns over to the head of the order over 500 stamps a week. Now, whether this is a fake, like some other stamp collecting schemes that gained headway in the country, such as obtaining a cot in a hospital for so many stamps, etc., I do not know. There is no questioning the fact, however, that a large number of people are engaged in an honest effort to redeem Chinese babies by collecting stamps."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

There Are No Chinese Cripples.

Nobody ever sees a deformed or crippled Chinaman. When a deformed Chow is born he is promptly put out of the world. When an adult Chow is crippled he is generally put out of the world also. No one save the other Chows knows exactly how it is done, but the general impression is that he is persuaded to hang himself or induced to fall into a waterhole. When anything serious happens to a Mongol he generally kills himself shortly afterward, which probably means that a deputation of his countrymen sit persuasively on his head until he is extinct. Chinese suicides are curious things, and are often worth investigating.

SIR FREDERICK LEIGHTON, the great English painter, is a stalwart, long-nosed man of pompous manner, with curly hair and a flowing gray beard, and always wears a voluminous silk tie, loosely knotted, the ends flowing superbly over his shoulders. He is a profoundly ornate speaker, but his periods, like his paintings, smell too strongly of the lamp, and the art students, whom he addresses with immense suavity once a year, find him a bit of a bore.

BALLOON IN WAR TIME

THE SUBJECT AGAIN OF INTEREST TO ARMY MEN.

Recent Advances in the Science Make Air Ships Valuable in Military Operations—What Europeans Have Accomplished—United States War Balloons.

Useful for Observations.

To have an effective balloon corps fully equipped and ready to take the field in case of war at a moment's notice is now regarded by all the great European powers as a matter of vital importance. Everything tends to show that if there is one branch of modern warfare, or rather, perhaps, strategy, which is likely to be watched with keen interest during the next war it will be that of military ballooning. It is generally conceded that France has made the greatest strides toward perfection in this line, though the world at large has not been permitted to know the exact results of its latest experiments. There is a great deal of secrecy about the establishment of Meudon, where the Government Parc d'Aerostation is situated. France has been and is spending a great deal of money in perfecting an absolutely faultless dirigible balloon, one that can be moved in any direction at the will of the aeronaut irrespective of the direction of the wind. The French experts claim that their war balloon, the "General Meusnier," attained a speed of twenty-eight miles an hour and could be guided with utmost ease to any given point. However, since no outsiders were allowed to witness the wonderful performance, it might be a trifle exaggerated.

The German Emperor does not propose to let his warlike neighbor monopolize this feature of army equipment. He has just presented to the German Society for Promotion of Aerial Navigation for the advancement of this science the sum of 50,000 marks. This is to be applied for the construction and equipment of a giant balloon. This balloon will be as high as a four-story house. It will be fifty-six feet in diameter and will contain not less than 2,530 cubic meters of gas. It will be made of Egyptian cotton stuff and will be coated with vulcanized gum, a substance which is considered superior to varnish.

BURYING A BALLOON.

Expect to Ascend 33,000 Feet.

A very interesting feature of this monster balloon will be the provision of a special valve of a new construction which will keep the gas pure for a longer time and thus sustain the balloon for a longer period. It is proposed to make not less than fifty journeys within a year and to ascend as high as possible. An altitude of 33,000 feet is thought to be obtainable by the use of artificial respiration. More than $2,500 will be expended in purchasing scientific apparatus for this balloon, which is intended more for taking observations than for the purpose of war.

Aside from this, the German army has this spring put in the field as efficient a balloon corps as that of France, though, perhaps, not so strong numerically. At Metz, during the last maneuvers, several successful ascensions were made which practically proved the vast advantage an army may derive from these aerial observatories. A very interesting experiment was also made to show that the balloons can, in an emergency, supply the want of bridges. A good-sized balloon was supplied with a large number of ropes dangling from its side. One of these was seized by a soldier, who was carried across the river in the twinkling of an eye. As soon as he had landed he fastened the end of a line securely, after which the balloon was hauled forward and back, and in less than no time transferred a battalion from one side to another.

A new air torpedo, to be used in balloon warfare, is the invention of a Frenchman, who has disposed of his patent to the Russian Government. The inventor claims to be able to direct this with as much accuracy as that of a submarine torpedo. It has a carrying capacity of nearly 1,000 pounds of explosives. The discharging of these can be made without subjecting the attacking party to any risks, owing to the remarkable guiding power of this aerial cruiser, which is to strike and glide away with marvelous rapidity either as it emerges from the clouds or springs unseen above the smoke of battle to let fall its missiles of destruction when least expected. No public experiments have as yet been made with this flying torpedo, which, if it is all that the inventor claims, will prove a most dangerous power of destruction. However, till a practical test has been made, no one can judge of its merits.

War Balloons for the American Army.

In building the war balloon "General Myer" for the signal service of the United States army the first real step was taken by the military officials of this country to advance with the great war powers of Europe in this line of military work. It is modeled after both the French and English military balloons, and the mechanical details embody the best features of each. It resembles the English in the similarity of material from which the envelope is made. The system of inflation is also like that of the English, the hydrogen being stored under pressure within steel cylinders. In the plan of its suspension gear it is after the French models.

The envelope of the "General Myer" is spherical in shape, with a capacity of 13,000 cubic feet, corresponding with the ordinary balloon used abroad for captive ascensions, and having a lifting power sufficient to carry two men with the necessary signal instruments. The envelope is formed of gold-beaters' skin, which is especially adapted to this purpose, as it is impervious to the hydrogen gas and is very light. The membranes from which this fabric, gold-beaters' skin, is formed are taken from the entrails of the bullock, each animal furnishing one. When stretched they are from eighteen to twenty-four inches long and ten to sixteen inches wide. After taking the membranes from the slaughtered bullock they are first scraped free from fat and soft parts and salted till needed for use. After taking them from the salt they are first culled, washed and soaked in fresh water till the salt is taken out. Then a day or two before using they are placed in a vessel containing soft water, in which has been dissolved some fish glue, which adds to their adhering qualities when making the fabric of the envelope.

In making the envelope, says a correspondent in Aeronautics, a cotton model balloon with a neck was made of the same size as the General Myer and its surface oiled. This cotton bag was then inflated with air by a blower and the neck securely fastened so as to retain the air. The model was kept in a state of tension by applying the blower from time to time as the air under pressure from within leaked through. The model thus fully inflated was suspended by ropes attached to the neck and to the top or opposite hole. This suspension permitted the balloon model to be turned as upon an axis, and thus brought every part of its surface in rotation within easy reach of the operator. A scaffold framework, having a height nearly equal to the semi-diameter of the model, was placed around one side, or semi-circumference, thus presenting to the workmen a nearly vertical surface on which to lay the membranes. The nice task of placing the membranes forming the fabric of the envelope was done by women. Each membrane was taken from the water, stretched out upon the surface of the model, smoothed down by hand, and sides or ends, where irregular, were cut off by a pair of blunt-pointed shears, which the women used most deftly. Being wet and charged with the solution of fish glue, the membranes stretched taut over the surface, and adhered while damp to the model. The membranes in this way were placed side by side, the edges overlapping, until the entire surface of the balloon model was covered with one coherent layer of the gold-beater's skin. Over this first layer a second and third were put, in like manner, except that the membranes in each alternate were placed at right angles to the longitudinal direction of the preceding series. Over the third layer were placed, from the top to the neck, long ribbons about an inch wide, of the same material, and in lattice. These ribbons were made by stretching a layer of gold-beater's skin upon a long and smooth oiled board, and superimposing thereon five additional layers successively, and, after drying, the fabric, which resembled parchment, was cut into narrow strips. These interlacing ribbons or cords, appear as diamond-shaped figures, increasing in size from each pole to the equator, and strengthen the balloon fabric and limit its tearing to rents no greater than about sixteen inches at the equator, in case the balloon should come in contact with any sharp-pointed object. Over these strengthening cords three additional layers of gold-beater's skin were placed similar to the first three. Around the top and about the neck an additional layer was placed to further strengthen these parts, where the strain is great. After the fabric was thus completed the air was pumped out of the model, the neck of the cotton bag was separated from that of the outside fabric and air was blown into the true balloon envelope between the skins and the cotton material, gently separating the skins from the oiled surface of the cotton model and permitting the latter to be pulled out through the neck of the balloon proper. There remained a translucent globe, which, except for the latticed ribbons in diamond-shaped figures, appeared homogeneous throughout, not the line of a joint or lap of the thousands of pieces of which it was formed showing.

In the top of the balloon envelope was now cut a circular opening about eighteen inches in diameter, into which the valve ring or thimble was inserted and seized, and into the thimble was secured the valve. The envelope of the balloon being complete, it was placed within the netting, the top of which was secured about the valve ring, and upon ropes being attached to the ring the balloon and netting were hoisted, air was again blown into the balloon and the netting adjusted. After this the balloon was hoisted higher and the suspension gear, with basket, was attached, after which came the captive gear—that is, the cable which holds the balloon when it ascends. All was perfect and the "General Myer" was ready for use.

How the Cable Is Made.

The cable serving to hold the balloon captive is made of several strands of steel wire, having in its center an insulated wire for telephonic work, the outside strands acting as return wires. The balloon, with complete equipment, is now at the Fort Riley, Kan., School of Instruction, where it is being used in instructing the signal corps at that post. It has been pronounced by experts as a masterpiece in military ball on building.

This is not the first time the United States army has made use of balloons. During the civil war the federal government recognized their value for making observations. In the month of September, 1861, one of the most daring aeronauts, La Mountaine, furnished important information to Gen. McClellan. His balloon rose from the northern camp of the Potomac and passed above Washington. The ropes were then cut and La Mountaine rose to the height of a mile and a half and found himself directly over the lines of the enemy. There he was able to perfectly observe their position and movements. When he had made his observations he threw out ballast and rose to a height of three miles, when an air current carried him in the direction of Maryland, where he descended in safety. General McClellan was so well satisfied with the observations taken that through his influence the war department received orders causing more balloons to be provided. The use of balloons, however, was discontinued for many years, but now it is believed they will be given a permanent place in the equipment of all armies. The science of aeronautics has so advanced, new features being constantly added, that it is hard to disbelieve anything claimed by the enthusiasts in this line. The chances are that we will dispense entirely with ordinary fleets and do our fighting in the air. The only thing needed just now to show what can be done with these much-talked-of war balloons is to start a first-class continental war.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All candidates for county offices will be required to pledge themselves, if elected, to give all the printing to home firms.

FOR AUDITOR

Frank P. Seller, of Fairfield, will be a candidate for nomination for auditor, subject to the decision of the democratic county convention.

MR. EDITOR—Please announce that Frank A. Borst, at present deputy county auditor, will be a candidate for county auditor before the democratic nominating convention, June 9, 1894

Wm. L. Blair, of Wilmington, will be a candidate before the democratic county convention for nomination for county auditor.

Please announce Daniel Tomlinson, of Wilmington township, as a candidate for auditor, subject to the action of the delegates to the democratic convention of June 9.

FOR RECORDER.

Geo. L. Lanning will be a candidate for recorder, subject to the decision of the democratic county convention that meets at Waterloo the second saturday in June.

Henry L. Houser, of Butler township, will ask recognition for the office of recorder, subject to the decision of the coming democratic county convention.

The name of William J. Whetsel, of Franklin township, will be presented to the democratic county convention for the nomination for recorder, subject to the decision of the delegates.

M. Kiplinger, of Grant township, will be a candidate for the nomination for recorder, by the delegates to the democratic county convention that meets June 9.

John P. Crimmins, of Keyser township, will be a candidate before the democratic nominating convention to be held at Waterloo June 9, for the office of county recorder, and hopes to receive their favorable consideration.

Lucius C. Loveland, of Stafford township, will be a candidate for recorder subject to the decision of the democratic county convention.

FOR CLERK.

Wm. H. Leas, of Grant township, will be a candidate for the office of county clerk, subject to the decision of the democratic convention that meets in Waterloo June 9.

Sol. Barney, of Concord township, will be a candidate for the nomination of county clerk before the democratic convention of June 9.

FOR COMMISSIONER.

For commissioner of the north district, the friends of Allen Shultz, of Franklin, will present his name before the democratic county convention of June 9.

At the request of many friends the name of R. S. Reed will be presented to the democratic county convention for commissioner of the southwest district.

EDITOR COURIER. Please announce that I will be be a candidate for Commissioner for the north district, subject to the decision of the delegates to the democratic county convention.
GEORGE PIERSON.

For commissioner of the North District, the name of Frederick Gfeller will be before the nominating convention at Waterloo June 9, and subject to the decision of the delegates.

The many friends of Solomon Reinebl, of Fairfield township, desire his name announced as a candidate for commissioner of the north district, subject to the decision of the democratic county convention.

The many friends of Jacob Walborn, of Union township ask the announcement of his name as a candidate for commissioner of the southwest district, subject to the decision of the democratic convention.

FOR TREASURER.

P. K. David, of Keyser township, will ask support of the democrats at the coming convention, for the office of county treasurer.

The name of Jas. O. Blake, of Smithfield, will be presented to the democratic county convention as a candidate for the nomination of treasurer and he asks for a fair consideration.

Henry Hines, of Jackson township, will be a candidate for treasurer of DeKalb county, subject to the choice of the delegates to the democratic county convention.

SURVEYOR.

C. E. Van Auken, the present surveyor will be a candidate for the nomination to that office before the democratic county convention that meets in Waterloo June, 9.

Democratic County Convention.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 31, 1894.

COAL strikes in West Virginia causing much trouble and some bloodshed.

COAL is scarce, owing to the strikes, and many factories are using wood.

STATE election in Oregon Monday gave republicans about 5,000 plurality and the legislature in doubt.

HEAVY floods in Oregon and to the north in British Columbia have done great damage. Many lives lost.

HON. BILLY WILLIAMS, who once represented this district in congress, is back at his old home in Warsaw, after a sojourn of several years in California.

THE populists hold their county convention June 23. The number of delegates to which they say some precincts are entitled exceeds the total number of votes they ever had there.

IT IS difficult to say whether the populist state platform shows more ignorance, egotism or socialism. It has a plank or two that show good sense, but none of the party seems to care for them.

LIGONIER had a big row in the democratic caucus there May 26. The usual quarrel between the McNagny and the anti-McNagny men. After the first caucus was over, another one was called, and much bitter feeling was manifested. Between the foolish blunders of McNagny, and the equally foolish and reckless course of a few of his friends, it is becoming plainer each day, that a republican is likely to represent this district in the next congress.

LIGONIER is again torn up over the postoffice matter. McNagny has selected J. D. Casey, who was the postmaster under J. E. McDonald fur years. He had always been a republican, and had served under the republican postmaster several years. But when McDonald took the office he retained Casey, and the latter finally became "a democrat for revenue only." Hence the democrats of the place are mad. Of course, McDonald, who had been sour because his father was not made state pension agent, is all right now, and whooping it up for McNagny in the proper style.

The Coal War.

Miners over Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa have been on a strike. The companies pay them only starvation wages, about 65 cents a ton for mining the coal. The ming owners get about $3 a ton for handling. So the men are the sufferers. They have a right to ask for higher wages, but they have gone farther, and stopped trains loaded with coal, sidetracked all cars they could find filled with coal, and have even torn up the tracks. These acts are crimes, punishable by law. In Indiana, the worst trouble was at Shelburn in Sullivan county and Cannelburg in Daviess county, where the coal trains were all stopped. Some cars decided efforts by the sheriffs of the two counties were laughed at. Then Gov. Mathews was called on. He issued a warning to them, to stop these criminal proceedings, telling them he felt they were right in striking, and hoped they would succeed, but that they must not proceed in a lawless way, or stop trains and destroy property. He warned them that they would have to obey the laws even if he had to call out the militia. They only laughed at him, and said they were not afraid of his "kids." Things went on getting worse till Saturday, when the Governor saw he could not have peace without force, when he called out nine companies from that end of the state, and a Gatling gun squad. These went that night, a part to one place, and a part to another. Sunday morning they were on the scenes of the trouble. The trains were liberated and the coal cars are sent forward. The miners mostly agreed to remain peaceable, and only a few were arrested. These were let out on bail. Several riotous leaders are still wanted, but could not be found. It is believed there will be no more trouble in Indiana. In the other states, the situation remains about the same as last week. The striking miners are in a pitiable condition, as they have earned nothing since April 21. Up to that time they had earned about 85 cents a day. The trouble comes largely from the way the mine owners have been cutting prices and then trying to save themselves by reducing the wages of the men. They should stop this cutting prices and give the men decent wages. The rail roads should also come half way in order to lessen the trouble. They could haul a car of coal at half what they are charging. This would also enable the mine owners to pay the men better wages. Another grievance of which the men complain, is that efforts are made to make them trade at the company's stores, where high prices are charged. There is a law against this practice of the companies placed on our statue books by the legislative of 1889, another democratic law to protect the common people, but the companies are trying every scheme to get around the law and keep the men still buying at these stores. Later reports say that on Monday the strikers sidetracked a coal train at Alum Cave and made more trouble. An attempt was also made to blow up a bridge. The five loaded coal cars captured by the strikers were burned Tuesday, before troops could get to them.

New Shoe Shop.

Alva Potter has established a shoe shop for custom work and repair work, over the store of Mrs. Jones & Son, on Main street, where he will be found at all times, ready to do first class work promptly. He is well known as a good workman.

The Coming Convention.

Great interest centers around the coming democratic convention at Waterloo, and it will be one of the largest we ever had, unless bad weather should prevent Several things add to the interest of this meeting. One is the more than ordinary high character of the men who are seeking nominations. It is not often that we see a set of fifteen or twenty men asking nominations, who are all men of excellent standing. No matter who is nominated, we are sure of a good ticket. Again, we are to have a better way of casting the vote of the different delegations. Each delegate will write the name of his candidate on a ballot or have a printed one, and fold it and hand it to the chairman of his delegation, who will put them all into an envelope, seal it, and hand to the secretaries. There will be two sets of secretaries. The first set opens the envelope and sees that the delegation has cyst the proper number of ballots—no more, no less. They then hand the ballots to the second set of secretaries and these count the votes, and when all are in, announce the number of votes each candidate has received. This, we believe, will be fair, and therefore satisfactory. No delegation can listen to ascertain how others vote, and then cast their own vote according, either to help someone to hurt someone. All delegates will be more apt to vote their real sentiments. Then, too, we change the order of nominations a little. We begin with commissioner, which is by far the most important office of all. This gives us a chance to name the men, while all delegates are present. We have often named them at the close of a heated contest, when half of the delegates had gone. The rest of the offices follow in the usual order. Another thing that will call out many voters will be the speeches. We expect to have Judge Zollars, of Ft. Wayne, there, and possibly Senator Barrett of the same place. This will be a new feature. If the day is fine, the meeting may be on school grounds. Also, it should be borne in mind that two additional state delegates will probably be selected to represent the county at large, as it is found by comparing with other counties that DeKalb is entitled to 18 delegates, instead of 16.

Democratic County Convention.

On Saturday of this week, the democrats of DeKalb county hold their first great meeting of the campaign. Waterloo will put on her holiday attire and welcome them to the first grand county convention ever held in that town. There will be too good bands, and a good speech by one of our best known speakers. The voters will be there. The candidates will be present, and their friends by the hundreds will meet that day, each anxious to see his favorite knock off the plums. Let every democrat that can spare the time attend this great meeting. It will be a day of rest, and we trust a day of enjoyment. And no matter who gets nominated, let us make up our minds to be suited, for all are good fellows, and as far as we can say, have made a good canvass. As the church notices say, "All are cordially invited." Come out and bring your democracy with you.

Congress not Slow.

The COURIER has several times called attention to the cry that "congress is slow." We have stated that other tariff bills have required more time than this congress is taking. The subject is an important one and the work very tedious. There are several thousands of different articles to be considered, and in discussing each, they must take into consideration all the conditions and consider what effect a given rate of duty will have. Then a lot of talking will ensue, each man believing he can make the matter plainer than anyone else can. And so the time goes on. But they are making better time than was ever made before when there was a general overhauling of the tariff. Remember it is now only the first week in June and that the House of representatives passed the general tariff bill over two months ago. In the senate, the work is slower, because we have only a small majority, and several of these senators are with the republicans in tariff matters. No doubt a bill could have been put through the senate long ago, but for the obstruction of the republican senators. We append here, the dates at which the different tariff bills for the past fifty years, have been passed, to show that this congress is doing work more rapidly than any other congress has done.

Walker tariff, 1846, passed senate July 28, 1846, and was approved by the president July 30, 1846.

Morrill tariff, 1861, reported to the house March 12, 1860, passed the senate Feb. 20, 1861, and was approved March 2, 1861.

Tariff bill of 1883, passed the house June 27, 1882, passed the senate Feb. 20, 1883, and was approved March 3, 1883.

The McKinley tariff passed the senate Sept. 10, 1890 and was approved by the president Oct. 1, 1890.

It seems to be the concensus of opinion by leaders upon both sides that the present tariff bill will pass the senate about the middle of June.

Comment has been made upon the fact that the finance committee has offered 409 amendments to the Wilson bill. The same committee offered to the McKinley bill 399 amendments that changed its substance while of the 409 amendments offered to the Wilson bill Senator Jones in charge of the senate bill, states that a majority of them simply changed the senate amendments and restored the rates of duty as originally provided by the Wilson bill.

Call for Town Orders.

Upon presentation, I will pay all outstanding municipal orders up to and including No. 368, dated Feb. 7, 1893. Also all road orders up to and including No. 515, dated Aug 8, 1893. Interest will stop May 31, 1894.

Court News.

A part of last week was spent on the Kennedy ditch case and on Friday Judge Powers went up to see about it in person. Elmer and George Greenwood, of Butler, were brought over here last week on a charge of stealing liquor, and were put into jail. One of them was up for stealing hams, at last term, but got off somehow. Orie May for larceny, had sentence suspended, as he is under age. Scholes gets $876 damages against the B. & O but we think it will be appealed, as the road has till Nov. 1, to do this. Receiver Hanna asks consent to sell the notes and accounts of the Egle Iron Works. Treasurer Sawvel has been enjoined from paying over to the state, the school money belonging to the school corporation.

The Bastardy case of Miss Mabus of Columbia City against Benton, of Garrett has been on for a day or two. Benton is fighting it, and evidently like Congressman Breckenridge, he thinks God has forgiven him, and the people ought to do the same. The jury may not view it that way.

She Addressed the Jury.

We mentioned last week, in our court items the case of R. D. Tefft vs Mrs. Catherine Munger, in which Tefft got a judgment against the defendant It was a note she gave a long time ago, to realize her son's goods from attachment for a debt he owed and refused to pay. Mr. Tefft did not expect to collect the money of her and had told her so, and that all he wanted was to get it into a judgment so he could perhaps get it of the son, after she no longer needed her property. But she tried to fight the suit just the same. As there was no defense she could make, her attorney, C. M. Phillips declined to make any plea, and besides the lady wished to make the plea herself. She asked Judge Powers if she could speak in her own behalf and he said she could. Thereupon she arose, and with a good deal dignity and calmness made a plea, which Geo. M. Henderson, the court reported took down in short hand. The followed is her plea to the jury:

"GENTLEMEN: I am an old woman. I have been a widow for 25 years, and resided in this county for 33 years, in Waterloo. I have labored hard all my life. Years ago I used to work in the tailor shops until I ruined my eye-sight, and than I began weaving, and by my hard work and frugality I have secured a little home, and I do not believe you will permit it to be taken from me by a man who can live without it. All that I ask is justice. I do not feel that I should be compelled to pay this debt; it is not my debt, and I should not be made suffer for it. All that I have in this world is a little home worth about $300., and I have worked hard to keep it up, and fix it occasionally so that I could live in it. And haven't I done all that is required of me? I pay my debts. I do not make debts, unless I can pay them, but this debt came onto me unawares; I was not expecting it, and I was abliged to do something. I never got a cent for it, and do you think it is right that I should pay the debt? But, you will do with me as you please you will do with me as you like, but I beg of you to do with me as you would like to be done by, or as you would have your wives done by, and that is all I will ask."

It created quite a stir in court, for all felt she had made a sensible speech. But of course, the jury could not do otherwise than bring in a verdict against her, as the case was a plain one, and she did not deny giving the note. Mr. Tefft will have to wait till she is dead however, if he ever realizes anything on his judgment.

Lambs for the Slaughter.

Republicans cast 2499 votes at the last general election, and it looks as if about half of them want an office. Here are a few of the name that we have been able to catch on the fly:

FOR CLERK.

Frank Brink, J. G. Johnson, M. F. Long, Eugene McDowell.

AUDITOR.

H. M. Bicknell, W. B. Campbell, A. N. Wilson, M. E. Reynolds.

TREASURER.

James Provines, Geo. Pugsley, G. O. Denison, D. W. Fair.

SHERIFF.

H. P. Stroh, L. A. Henning, H. H. Knott, James N. McBride, James O. Blanchard. Wm. A. Kennedy.

RECORDER

J. A. Sawyer, B. F. Greist, Thomas Phillips, Milton C. Jones, U. S. Rant, Miles, H. A. Lesh, J. H Elson, Henry G H. Baker, W. H. Crane. John H. Topper.

From the above list it would appear that no one wants to be surveyor. Perhaps the party has no one with sufficient education, or that the splendid two years' work of Surveyor VanAuken, and the thousands of dollars he has saved the county, gives them to understand that it will not pay to run anyone against him. Their heads are level at this point But what shall we say as to coroner? Perhaps that office does not show a salary tempting enough. The same may be said as to representative and commissioner, for no names have been announced for those places, as yet. It begins to look as if republicans prefer a good salary to any amount of glory.

Political Notes.

The voters over the county are insisting on the nomination of Hon. S. S. Shutt for representative, whether he wants it or not. It is believed he would rather not have it, but that he could be induced to accept if given to him unanimously as the voice of the people. It would be a genuine case of "the office seeking the man," which ought to be the way in general. Nothing would please us better than to see it tendered to him in this way and to have him accept. The county has no fitter man.

Democratic for Reform.

It is a fact that should not be overlooked by those democrats who begin to feel despondent over the delays in congress, that nearly all congressional elections to fill vacancies since the regular election of 1892, have gone in favor of democratic tariff reform. Among these may be named, the first and second districts of Rhode Island, April 5, 1893; the seventh Massachusetts district in April, 1893; the eighth Pennsylvania district on July 25, 1893; the first Michigan district in November, 1893; the fourth Louisiana district in April, 1894, and the third Ohio district on May 1, 1894. These were elections to fill vacancies and involved the tariff issue.

Poor, Innocent Republicans!

Republican politicians are feeling very much cast down to think "the senate has surrendered to the sugar trust." But they omit to state the other fact, that republicans have for twenty years, surrendered to every trust that called on them. We feel genuine sorrow for these innocent republicans. They object to giving five millions to one trust, but they have been giving more than 400 millions a year to the other trusts and are still doing all they can to keep this up. The duty to be put on sugar is much lower than the rate a republican law levied for many years past and much lower than in the McKinley law, but they never knew before how wicked it was.

Frank James is said to have moved in to Kansas and gone into the lightning rod business. Thus ends all talk that he had decided to reform and live an honest life.—[Detroit Free Press.

To Benefit Barmaids.

A movement is on foot in England, fostered by a group of noble ladies interested in the subject, to protect barmaids as to their hours of labor. It is estimated that there are 120,000 young women in London in licensed houses who work from 15 to 18 hours a day on weekdays and from seven to nine hours on Sundays, with one Sunday off in each month. Surely when so much is said about an eight hour day for men these young women ought not to be forgotten. They find a haven of rest in their brief intervals of leisure at the Morley rooms, established by the late Mr. Samuel Morley and now under the superintendence of Miss C. M. Gough. Here barmaids out of work can stay, paying a very small sum for board and lodging. But the social part of the work is the most valuable. Barmaids are brought into contact with ladies of education and refinement. The rooms are used for reading, writing, music, conversation, rest and advice, and books are lent from an excellent library.

The Miner's Lamp.

In many respects the miners' electric handlamp meets the requirements of mining work infinitely better than the old safety lamp, but it has a radical fault, which must be overcome if it is to be kept in use. The inrush of mine gas to the working galleries is often so sudden that the miner has no idea of its presence, and the only means he has of discovering it is the combustion that goes on within the netting of his safety lamp. As a matter of fact, an electric lamp will give a splendid light while its too confiding owner is being smothered. What is wanted is an electric lamp fitted with an appliance that will automatically give warning of the presence of either black damp or fire damp without the making of any special observation. Until this is done the use of the electric lamp in mines will be attended with anything but safety.—Chicago Record.

Ora Smith a cousin to Dr. Hines, was seriously hurt by a kick Tuesday. He was handling a road scraper at George's corners near Henry Hines' when a tug came loose, and he stooped to pick it up and hook it on again when the horse kicked him with both feet, one foot struck just below the breast bone and the other on his right side, breaking two ribs. He is seriously hurt internally, and Dr. Hines thinks the chances are against his recovery. He is about twenty-one years of age, and his home, is in Kosciusko county.

Still Defaming Girls.

The Unspeakable editor(?) of the Garrett Clipper has as usual, made an insulting attack on an innocent and defenseless woman, a young girl this time. He claims that Bertha Beard, daughter of J. D. Beard. wanted to elope with a patent medicine agent. There is not a word of truth in it. She had made arrangement with a young man, to come over to the musical entertainment at Auburn, with several other couples near there, but afterwards decided not to come. An irresponsible fellow sent a sensational item from Waterloo and it seemed so much like a genuine rape and seduction article that the fool editor snapped it up as truth. He'll get another $775 licking yet, for the young lady is a respectable girl.

Mr. Chck did himself proud in clearing up and trimming out the public square. Many loads of green boughs and many entire trees lay on the ground while the work was going on. The trees were too thick all over the north end of the grounds, and selecting the ones that could best be spared, they were cut off Of course some of the trees were fine ones but the best were spared and the grove is more beautiful than before. It is also hoped that the newly sown grass may grow till it is as lovely as before the dense shade killed it off.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McDougal started on their long westward journey last Saturday. Not westward at first, for they went to Bucyrus, Ohio, for a visit with relatives, and from there they go to Denver, Colo., which is to be their future home. Bird Dickinson goes there with them, and he and Mr. McDougal will go into business together. the jewelry business we suppose, as Mr. Dickinson is an expert jeweler. Mr. and Mrs. McDougal have been worthy and honored citizens, and have endeared themselves to a large circle of friends, all of whom wish them the highest degree of prosperity in their new home.

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

A letter received last week from J. P. Goetschius, now at Milton, North Dakota, says the May snow storms did no damage there, and crop prospects are good. He is in the furniture trade, and doing well as far as business is concerned, but has been unfortunate in the loss by death of his wife and a one year old son. He has but one child left, a boy of about three years. His DeKalb friends will read with sorrow, these afflictions, and will sympathize with him.

Harry Prentiss, Charles Eels and Lee Lewis, three Albion young men, came over on their wheels Sunday, making the 22 miles here and back with no trouble. They took dinner at the Swineford and made a brief stop in Garrett, each way. Mr. Prentiss is a son of the late Nelson Prentiss. Mr. Lewis is a brother of our townsman James Lewis, while Mr. Eels is a son of Attorney T. M. Eels, a well known member of the Noble county bar. All expressed themselves pleased with the trip, though they found some difficult stretches of road.

Many have refused to believe the stories about the big mustard stalks that grow in California, but A. J. Ralston has a cane at his grocery, given him by the late Isaac Farver, that is from a mustard stalk grown on his farm in Jackson township. It is a strong and reliable a cane as one could wish, and very light. And speaking of curios Mr. Ralston has a genuine Apache war club, brought home by his daughter, Alza Scott, when she visited the Coast lately. It is a murderous affair, a sort of cross between a club and a sling shot.

Rolland Edge got a fair sort of bicycle pretty cheap. Franks raffled off his bicycle by numbers, each purchaser paying as many cents for a ticket as the number of the ticket he bought. Edge bought No. 29, so that his wheel cost him 29 cents.

In reading what the COURIER said about the pupil in No. 5 school, in Richland A. P. Foltz is reminded of one who attended his school last year and was punctual every day for a term of 185 days. It was a child of about seven. Another missed only three days in the same year.

A. P. Foltz, who was recently at the home of Trustee Joseph Wilson in Stafford says Mr. W. has a great curiosty in the form of a petrified turtle which was found on the farm. He has it set up in the front yard, and it is a real curiosity, as it shows plainly the markings always seen on the back of a live turtle.

Remember the great excursion and picnic of the Maccabees Monday next. They go to Bawbeese Lake at Hillsdale, and there will be great numbers from Ft. Wayne and other points. The fare for round trip is $1.25 which includes admission to the grounds. Train leaves Auburn at 8 a. m. Returning leaves the lake at 8:30 p. m.

Wes Showers was hurt last Friday by the caving in the of ditch on Ninth street, that they are digging to drain the Swineford House basement. They got into quicksand as soon as they got far west as Cedar street, and it has cost a good deal extra labor, as well as danger. A second cave in happened Tuesday, but no one was hurt, Mr. Showers is able to be out.

The two ladies' clubs known as the S. H. G. and the C. L. S. C. had a pleasant combined meeting Saturday After the former had closed its session they went over to Mrs. DeWitt's where the latter was in regular session, in order to do some business in which both were interested. When this was done Mrs. DeWitt surprised both clubs by a nice lunch of ice cream, cake, etc. They were all delighted with this feature of the meeting.

Butler Review:—Henry Grube is a hustler for good roads, for he has 600 loads of grave subcribed for the road east of town. We cannot say too many good words for him and those who propose to assist him. * * *

While the ditch was being dug to place the water works in to the Review office a log from the old corduroy road was dug up. As near as we can find out the road was put down along in the latter part of the fifties.

Commissioners' Court.

The commissioners met Monday. All present. That afternoon Mr. Henderson went to Butler and Mr. Hoffelder to Waterloo, to inspect the work on the new bridges. They have had a good deal of work, such as ditch, bridge and license matters as well allowing bills. They are still at work, but so much is unfinished, that we have to wait our report till next week.

A Garrett Republican.

Communicated.

EDITOR COURIER: One of our very influential republican politicians, Tom. G. Smallwood, foreman of the boiler shop, called into the office of the master mechanic, who is a new man here, and asked as to what was the custom and advisability of closing the shops on Decoration Day, opposed the closing of the shops on the grounds that no one but Jim Ross would give any attention to the day. Now, Comrade Ross is an active, energetic G. A. R. man and a republican, and certainly the peer of this man Smallwood, who fails to "see himself as others see him." The exercises were a magnificent success and Comrade Ross took an active part in the exercises. At least 200 people were turned away from Wagner's large opera house for want of room, and this fellow Smallwood was not in it.

Beginning with May 1, we will give away 100 art Portfolios, to the first 100 persons who pay one year's subscription to the COURIER. No matter whether the person paying is a new subscriber or an old one, we shall treat all alike till the 100 copies are used. The pictures are as fine as any sold, and have a description of each view. The name of this series is "Beautiful scenes of the White City." It has much valuable information, besides the pictures. This 100 embraces "Part 1" only, but it contains 16 lovely views.

No Smallpox in Garrett.

There was a report Saturday that small pox had got a start in Garrett. Later, Dr. Swartz went over and found it to be only a case of vaccination that "worked" pretty hard, producing some fever. A telephone message to G. A. Bishop from Mr. Lackey, confirmed this. The man is D. W. Linville, the one who has been something of a wrestler. He had been exposed in Chicago, or thought he had, and had come home and been vaccinated. He is on the streets again now. Tuesday, we received an official notification from Dr. Chas. S. Stewart, Health Officer of Garrett, saying, "There is no smallpox in Garrett. The suspected case has proven not to be smallpox."

Normal at Waterloo.

H. E. Coe, of the Auburn High School, and H. H. Keep, principal of the Waterloo School, will open a normal school in Waterloo Monday, June 11, to continue eight weeks. Terms for the full term, $2 00. This school, under these two able teachers, will be entirely devoted to normal school work and all needed preparatory drill for teachers and those preparing for that work. Call on or write to either Mr. Coe or Mr. Keep. Remember the term begins next Monday.

Full O' Prunes.

Hank Little, the windjammer of the Garrett Clipper, and who each week claims to be the head and brains of what he calls the "McNagny democracy," is indulging in another of his disgusting drunks. He began last week immediately after he had finished the usual torture of the English language in an effort to prove that all decent people who do not agree with him are fools and idiots as well as traitors to the party. This screed evidently strained the tank where his brains should have been, for his present drunk is one of his worst. It is a shameful sight, though our people have become so used to it that they expect it once in so many weeks. But some have been complaining for the past two or three times, especially those on South Main street, along in front of whose residences this pansy blossom daily reels. They ask why it is he cannot be kept off the public streets. We have no answer to give. If he were a country lad who made such a show for a half hour, he would be hauled up and punished, as has often been done. And Hank himself has been up several times before a justice and twice at least before court, when Judge McBride was on the bench. But lately he has been allowed to have his own sweet way about getting drunk and showing off his condition. The authorities are apparently either afraid of him, or else they like to see a man in that condition. In the meantime, he goes on "filling up with prunes" and when he can hold no more, will get some one to doctor him up till he is once more able to insult decent people through the columns of his disreputabe paper. The proper thing would be to compel him to drink his prunes inside the jail a few times till he could show a little decency.

WHAT Chicago really needs is fewer suspended fines and more suspended criminals.

RHODE ISLAND'S penitentiary is run at a loss of $20,000. Why don't they order a lockout and shut down?

"SHOULD Christians go to the theater?" is a screaming headline in a New York paper. Yes, sometimes, when they will refrain from wearing unchristian bonnets.

TRY the effect of good will and hope upon the man who has wrapped himself in the covering of a reckless and sullen despair, and you will see verified the old apologue of the sun, the wind and the traveler.

INDEPENDENT is he who has no wants which he cannot gratify without the least risk of being overtaken by debt or tempted to dishonor; a man ten times richer, but with twenty times more wants, is in reality twice as poor.

THE woman suffrage petitions in New York captured the men by wholesale. It remains to be seen, however, whether the signers will vote as they petition. Many a bearded voter will affix his name to a paper when presented by a charming woman and then, when he finds himself in the privacy of an Australian booth, will "vote her down."

ABOUT 300 Hungarians and fifty Italians have left Braddock, Pa., for their native land. They carried all sorts of traps in their bundles, and the steamship agent says that they had from $300 to $1,000 each in their pockets. The coal strike had driven them away, and as they will be healthy at home, we shall not worry if they conclude to stay there and enjoy their otium cum dig.

THE boers in South Africa are about to institute an order of knighthood to be called De Orde Van Verlossing. They are probably moved to it by jealousy of the numerous members of the titled aristocracy of Great Britain, who, having "left home" for their country's good, are now seeking fortunes in the virgin fields of the Cape Colony, Matabeleland, and Mashonaland.

IT is said that engravers in Germany harden their tools in sealing wax. The tool is heated to whiteness and plunged into the wax, withdrawn after an instant, and plunged again, the process being repeated until the steel is too cold to enter the wax. The steel is said to become harder this process almost as hard as the diamond, and when touched with a little oil of turpentine the tools are excellent for engraving and also for piercing the hardest metal.

CERTAIN progressive ladies of England have discovered that they have the same right to organize themselves into military companies that the men enjoy, and have forthwith proceeded to enlist a battalion of fair volunteers. The actual service of the Amazonian regiment will doubtless be confined to dress parade, and though its members may never be called upon to face powder it is assured in advance that not a soldier will ever flinch when confronted with the necessity to powder the face.

The attempt of the Hungarian ministry to force the passage of the civil Marriage bill has been defeated. The bill was a flagrant attack upon ecclesiastical marriages. Under its operation no marriage performed by priest or clergyman, of any denomination, could be recognized as lawful, unless it was supplemented by a civil service. The measure was so strongly urged by the Government that its passage was regarded as reasonably sure when it was first presented. It was defeated in the Upper House by a small majority.

THE east is really waking up. The railroad from Jerusalem to Jaffa is to be extended to Nablus and Gaza, and there is a project on foot for the establishment of a line of steamers on the Dead Sea. The intention is to bring the rich produce of Moab across the sea in a few hours instead of carrying it, as now, around the north and South end of the sea by caravan, a trip of four or five days duration. The next we hear will probably be news of an uprising on the part of the camel drivers against the innovation, which is to take the bread and dates out of their mouths.

AN Italian deputy, who is not enamoured of Europe's system of armed peace, recently gave in a speech some striking statistics about the blood tax in each country. He shows that, while it does not appear startling when estimated per head per annum, it really is so, because such a large proportion of it falls upon the very poor, and upon those who are hindered by the exigencies of military and naval service from producing wealth. An Italian family, for instance, the head of which perhaps earns barely 20 cents per day, and that not all the year round, is ground to the very dust by the annual war tax of $2 for each of its members. How long Europe can or will stand this imposition is a mystery. But it looks as if the end were not far off.

THE idea that a disease artificially communicated while the patient was in good health lost much of its virulence was not a new one. Inoculation with genuine smallpox matter was quite common among the better classes in England before Jenner's time, the matter being obtained originally from mild cases, and afterward from those inoculated. The originality of Jenner's idea consisted in the proposition that cowpox was really smallpox in the cow, and that, when communicated to the human system, it acted as a preventive of the more serious disease. Although Jenner experienced a great deal of opposition, his theory really made its way with great rapidity. He was first able to make the experiment of vaccination in 1796, and compulsory vaccination was enacted in some European countries as early as 1813.

A WOMAN in one of the inland cities of New York State, who has been sued by a lawyer for $10 for professional services in recovering a sealskin coat, put in a counter claim for advice and assistance in enabling the lawyer to find a suitable spouse. If this claim can be sustained, the energetic dame has met the disciple of Blackstone on his own heath, and gives him a Roland for his Oliver. No one better than he should be able to appreciate the value of good counsel. That the counsel was effective in this case would appear to be proven by the fact that the lawyer is a recent recruit to the army of Benedicts. The woman declares that inasmuch as she "devoted much time and attention to the subject," she believes her services "reasonably worth $60." On the score that he or she "who findeth a good wife findeth a good thing," there can be no doubt of this if all that she alleges be true. It might even be conceded that her rates are ridiculously low.

NEW YORK PRESS: If the reports which come from the Wyoming region of Pennsylvania be true the Wyoming massacre of history has a rival in recent times hardly less atrocious and alarming in many features. The statement is made that during the last year over 200 assassinations have occurred in that section, while only seven of the murderers have been arrested. Within the last three months thirty-five mysterious murders have been reported. Not only has there been a wholesale taking of human life, but property to the value of millions of dollars has been destroyed. If the reports are correct such a condition of affairs is astounding. These crimes are said have been committed by members of an oath-bound organization made up of ignorant and lawless men, who fly to terrorism and bloodshed to wreak vengeance for fancied wrongs. The State of Pennsylvania owes it to her fair fame to bring the lawbreakers to justice and to crush this latest outbreak of Molly Maguireism.

IT is said that a process has been invented for extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere so economically that sulphate of ammonia can be sold at $22 per ton for fertilizing purposes, which is only about one-quarter of its present price. The cheapening is rendered possible by the fact that a good quality of illuminating gas is given off as a by product of the process. The gases and vapors of a hydro carbon, as coal or petroleum, are introduced into a retort having a temperature of 2,200 degrees. In this the carbon and the hydrogen separate. Air is introduced, and lime is sifted through the retort. The hydrogen passes off, and is collected and carbureted for illumination. The carbon, nitrogen, and alkali form a cyanide, which may be decomposed by steam, and sulphate of ammonia is obtained. If this material can be offered as cheaply as stated it should be in enormous demand, and may result in a great increase in what is known as intensive farming in the neighborhoods of the cities.

Peril in Powders.

"The habit of taking 'headache powders' is increasing to an alarming extent among a great number of women throughout the country," said Dr. Walter F. Bailey of St. Paul. "These powders, as their name indicates, are claimed by the manufacturers to be a positive and speedy cure for any form of headache. In many cases their chief ingredient is morphine, opium, cocaine or some other equally injurious drug having a tendency to deaden pain. The habit of taking them is easily formed, but almost impossible to shake off.

"Women usually commence taking them to relieve a raging headache, and, finding it successful, soon resort to the powder to alleviate any little pain or ache they may be subjected to, and finally, like the morphine or opium fiend, get into the habit of taking them regularly, imagining that they are in pain if they happen to miss their regular dose. I know one woman who is nearly a physical and mental wreck from using these powders. She says that she takes between twenty and thirty of them every day, and that she suffers torture unless she takes them at regular intervals."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

VOICE OF THE VOTERS

NEW-YORKERS DENOUNCE SENATE TRAITORS.

Big Mass Meeting Demands that the Declarations of the Chicago Platform Shall Be Carried Out—Let There Be No Star Chamber Proceedings.

The People Are Aroused.

A monster mass meeting, called by the Mannattan Single Tax Club, was recently held in New York City, to express indignation at the "treachery of the Democratic Senators who are thwarting the demand for a radical reduction in the tariff." The speakers were Alfred Bishop Mason, Henry George, Franklin Pierce, James P. Archibald and Thomas G. Shearman. All handled the Senate and its "conservatives" without gloves. Mr. Mason began by saying "Judas lives again in Washington. Benedict Arnold sits in the Senate." Mr. George spoke with great force and fire. He said:

If the Democratic party cannot give us a better bill than the McKinley bill let the McKinley bill stand, he excialmed, and those who heard agreed. Let the party go back again to the people.

I make no personal complaint in this matter. I believe that these traitors in the Democratic party, these men who are selling it out, are doing more for the cause of free trade than the best bill that could be offered. I speak of the Democratic party. There are in that party honest men, who believe in the platform upon which they went before the people, who want to carry out its precepts. But so long as traitors are not cast forth; so long as honest Democrats must trade and dicker, not with Republican protectionists, but with men in their own party who made demands upon them, then the Democratic party must take the responsibility of the acts of these men. Let it drive the traitors out. Let it declare that no man who does not stand upon its platform has any business in that party, and will not be recognized there.

When the acclaim that greeted this had died away Mr. George said that the very success of the Democratic party at the last election came from the condition of the country, for even then the clear, plain symptoms of the hard times were to be seen, and the necessity for haste appreciated. Then he went on:

Sloth and Weakness.

No situation is so bad for the industrial and mercantile interests as when a high tariff is threatened with a quick reduction, and the wise and safe thing is to act quickly. But months passed away and nothing was done. Before the extra session months elapsed, while Mr. Cleveland was parceling out offices. Then came the extra session, and nothing was done. Finally the House began work, not to do away with the evil, but upon a bill with the McKinley bill as a model. At every turn monopolies and trusts asserted their power. Finally that weak thing, the Wilson bill, did pass the House. It was chock full of concessions to trusts and monopolies, chock full of protection. Then it passed into what has become the American House of Lords. You know the rest. Never has bargaining been so clear. Never has corruption been so open. The Democratic party has been in power in the Senate, and it has been paralyzed by efforts to placate protectionists or agents of protected rings in its own members. Even such a man as Senator Mills——

Mr. George pronounced the name so indistinctly that many of his hearers thought he said Senator Hill, and hisses mingled with the cheers. When it was understood whom Mr. George meant there were only cheers. He went on:

Even Mills Has to Trade.

Even such a man as Senator Mills, an honest and able free-trader in every sense except that in which we single-taxers use the word, who showed one of those spectacles which are said to be dear to the gods, and which should be dear to men, one stalwart man, faithful among the faithless, standing up to say no, yet we find him voting for a tariff on iron. Why? There is only one explanation. He had to pay to get some other Democrat's vote for a reform which he considered more important.

We are here to-night to say, as far as our voices shall reach, that it is time to call a halt. It is more important that the Democratic party should stand clear upon the record than that it should succeed. Bring the fight into the open. Let the people know who it is who stands to the pledges and who it is who deny and repudiate them.

Senators Speculate, People Starve.

Consider what to-day is going on! Dickering, bartering, this making of fortunes out of legislation, while the great mass of the people are suffering in their misery, waiting for the Senate to do something to help them. Each day little items appear in the newspapers, are read and forgotten, which recite the most horrible tragedies. Our cities and our roads are filled with men asking the first of human rights, the privilege of earning their living. And what is Congress doing? Nothing. It is trading, trading on the very life-blood of men and women and little children, while rings and trusts and monopolies are cared for.

Our so-called representatives are selling labor to trusts and rings. I say that the party and men who promised to do something for labor by remitting taxes have done nothing. Remission would, for a time at least, increase the production and set to work thousands who are now idle and trying with all their might to find work. These Coxey armies are not vagrants, or if they are they are not vagrants from choice. No matter how ridiculous are their demands, they are not so ridiculous as the demands of the protectionists' lobbies.

Only Contempt for Poverty.

The agents of the steel ring, the sugar trust and the whole horde of them go to Washington in private cars, and are received by Democrats with the most distinguished consideration. But the men who go there on foot, feeling want, the pressure of awful suffering and misery, are received by the standing army of Congress—for that is what it is—with clubs and punished for treading on the grass. It is time that the people were aroused. It is time that the Democratic principle was asserted, the principle of "equal rights to all, and special privileges to none." For the Democratic party I care little; for Democratic principles I care everything. I don't care what Mr. Cleveland does; to him belongs the credit of starting this principle in the Democratic party.

"He never wrote it in the world," shouted some one far back in the hall.

"I don't know," said Mr. George in reply. "What care I who wrote it? He fathered it." And then there was shouting and clapping of hands.

The resolutions were adopted with a great shout, just four votes being cast in the negative. It is probable that these four votes were not cast against the income tax clause in the resolutions. Certain it is that the income tax is as popular with the masses in the East as it is in the West. A part of the resolutions read as follows:

That we call on the honest Democrats of the House to accept no Senate amendments that adds an iota to the protective features of the Wilson bill, even at the risk of leaving the McKinley act in force and remitting the whole question to the people.

That a Republican, trust-made McKinley bill is better than a Democratic Gorman surrender bill, which to injury adds insult, and is smeared with still more shameless bargain and sale.

That after the open manipulation of the stock market by the secret work of Democratic Senators and the charges that Sugar Trust money was contributed to the Democratic campaign fund, both party policy and political decency forbid the imposition by Democratic votes of any duty whatever on sugar.

That as citizens of New York we repudiate the idea that we prefer tariff taxes to an income tax, and declare that any tax on what men have is better and more democratic than any tax on what men need, and, while not commending the income tax in itself, we believe that its substitution for all tariff taxes would greatly lessen the burden upon the masses, remove a perennial source of national corruption and make vastly easier the problem of justly and wisely obtaining a Federal revenue.

The Same Old Disease.

Censure is justly imposed by the entire country on the group of pretended Democratic Senators who are obstructing the way of tariff reform.

The Republican masses are justified in denouncing these men for their attitude, because it is not assumed on the principle of protection, which they repudiate, but merely for the gratification of individual pecuniary interest.

The Democratic masses, north and south, east and west, hold these men in open contempt, and if they ever have an opportunity to give effectual expression to their abhorrence of treachery which disgraces the party that expression will be unqualified and explicit.

But let us speak the truth about the attitude of this group of traitorous obstructives. Who are they but Republicans in conduct and in purpose, although denying themselves to be Republicans in principle? What is their dominating motive but the motive that has dominated the entire Republican party since its formation?

Each of these men proposes to protect his individual interests at the cost of fidelity to his party and of dishonor to himself as a Democrat. But this selfishness, restricted to a few Senators professionally Democrats, is the creed of all the Senators who are not Democrats.

Subordination of the Democratic frith to the pockets of a few individuals is inconsequential when compared with the deliberate and organized robbery which the Republican party and its code of political economy has inflicted on the entire country, with varying degrees of oppression and injustice, during every period in which it has been in power at Washington.

Democratic obstruction in the Senate is simply the Republican science of pretended government carried outside its own party lines into a little patch of the Democratic party. As soon as opportunity comes the Democracy will purge itself of the sin of these few culprits. But the Republican party proposes to persist in the same sin and to inflict its consequences indefinitely upon a nation.—Chicago Herald.

Republicans Indorse It.

Senator Teller's declaration in the debate that he was opposed to factious delay on the tariff bill by his Republican colleagues, because he considered the bill ample for the protection of American industries," and a "better bill than I had an idea would come to us from the Democratic party after its declaration at Chicago," shows how thoroughly Gorman and Brice and McPherson and Smith have done their work. Mr. Teller's indorsement shows up those tariff-reform enemies in their true light. Nobody has an adequate comprehension yet of the extent to which they have made the bill a protective measure. Every examination reveals fresh abominations, and unless the House Democrats insist in conference on striking out most of these, the bill will be very little different from the McKinley law. Why Republicans should oppose it in its present form is explainable only on the ground that they do not care so much for protection as they do for the partisan advantage which would flow from the continued unsettled condition of the business interests of the country which a failure to pass a bill of any kind would secure.—New York Post.

Spare the Woolen Schedule.

The woolen manufacturers, following the example of the sugar trust, are now making demands upon the Senate.

They ask that the McKinley tariff remain untouched till Jan. 1, 1895, when a reduction of 10 per cent may be made, followed annually by a similar reduction until absolute free trade conditions are reached.

This sounds better than it is. In 1870 the manufacturers of woolens were ready to accept more than double the reduction they now suggest. If their present proposition is accepted it will be followed by demands for concessions to the wool-growers. But free wool is about all that is left of real tariff reform in the pending bill. It would be as well to maintain the McKinley act on the statute books as to strike out free wool.

The woolen schedule, from top to bottom, should stand as it is. There is no reason why the manufacturers' proposition should be accepted, and every reason why nothing should be done to imperil free wool.—New York World

Even Mills Makes Bargains.

Senator Mills' vote against free iron ore will be regretted by many of his friends who do not understand his situation. Mr. Mills was on the subcommittee when this particular concession was made to the "Conservatives," and he agreed to a duty on ore in return for free wool and other benefits to the consumer. He was keeping his pledge in voting as he did, just as he is keeping another pledge in voting against the more recent and more flagrant concessions to the "Conservatives." Moreover, a good many sincere tariff reformers lost interest in free coal and free iron ore when many Massachusetts Democrats, under the lead of ex-Gov. William E. Russell, signed a circular urging protection for the sugar trust. Free coal and iron ore were to be boons for New England, but if New England Democrats were to be in favor of trusts, why make a struggle in their behalf?—New York World.

The Sole Exception.

The only trust not represented in the new tariff bill is that which the people formerly reposed in the Democratic Senators.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Hurry Up Tariff Reform.

THE fact that it took ten months to pass the McKinley law is not a logical excuse for delaying the new tariff bill.—Washington Post.

NOW, IF the Senate could adopt a rule to force its members to do something the public would feel a great sense of relief.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

THE Senate must pass that tariff bill before the Fourth of July. They would thus give our annual glorification day, the present year, unusual significance.—Boston Globe.

IT is certainly the part of wisdom for Republican leaders to avoid all filibustering in the consideration of the tariff. The country wants the question settled.—Philadelphia Times.

OBVIOUSLY it is the party policy as well as the patriotic policy of the Democrats to throw musty Senatorial tradition and courtesy to the dogs and put an end to business uncertainty, so far as legislation can do it, without more ado.—Chicago Herald.

No Star Chamber!

NO GOOD purpose can be served by conducting a star-chamber inquiry into these allegations. It should be conducted with open doors. Turn on the light.—Boston Herald.

THERE is an earnest protest from all quarters against the decision to conduct the investigation of the relations of the sugar trust to the tariff bill with closed doors.—Philadelphia Press.

THE complimentary things which the Senators will have to say of one another during investigation will no doubt be numerous. Modesty compels them to close the doors.—Washington Star.

A MODEL RESIDENCE.

ELEGANT HOME FOR ONE WITH MODERATE MEANS.

Suitable for Any Part of the Country Except the Extreme South—Costs Little More than the Ugly Packing Boxes that Some Erect.

A Neat Country Residence.

This design was carried out, and is a very neat and attractive home, and as it was necessary in the arranging of this plan to obtain the required amount of room and conveniences at a given cost, the exterior had to be very plain and simple in detail to allow it.

The front faces the west. Thus we have a south view from four rooms on first floor, and a front view from dining-room. The front veranda is wide, and arranged so that a group can sit out upon it with ease; the hall is eight feet wide, with an easy flight of platform stairs leading up to the floor above, the platform or landing being on a level with floor over kitchen wing, making two risers more up to floor in main house. There is a cellar under the whole house, the laundry being under kitchen. The stairs to cellar are placed under main stairs, and reached directly from the kitchen.

The wood-shed is a convenient feature to all country houses, and should always be connected with the kitchen.

PLAN OF FIRST FLOOR.

The refrigerator is built in pantry, with an opening into wood-shed, through which to put the ice into tank; the connection from kitchen to dining-room is through the large china closet, which is fitted up with shelves, press table, etc., and makes a perfect butler's pantry. The parlor and dining-room are connected by sliding doors; the dining and sitting rooms have open fire places, with hard-wood mantels; the sitting-room has a hard-wood book-case built into recess to right of mantel, and the bed-room connected with sitting-room is a good room, and provided with two closets and stationery wash-bowl.

The second story contains four large chambers, with an abundance of closet room, a good servant's bed-room over kitchen, and a large bath-room; hot and cold water is supplied to all wash-bowls, sink and bath. There is also a large attic over the second floor, capable of being finished off into two or three rooms if desired, and yet have enough for storage. The roof is shingled, and the exterior walls clapboarded; the interior finished in pine, which is filled and varnished, the cut and incised work being picked out in ebony. The estimated cost of this house is $3,000, and is a good example of what can be done for that sum, as the general arrangement is such as to show considerable variety on the exterior, producing an architectural effect only obtained by the natural combinations and workings of the constructive part of the structure with the least expenditure of labor and detail in design. This is one of the most attractive homes for the amount expended, and for the country is all that is desirable in every respect.

Good Place for Them.

The Lawrenceville district of Pittsburg has made another exportation of Hungarians, Italians and Slavs to the cotton plantations of Texas. The crowd numbered 200, which makes 700 already sent from the one district alone, and the third exportation from Lawrenceville in three months.

ONE of the ladies in fancy dress was, though fair enough, a trifle fat. There spake to her a reporter: "May I ask what character you represent?" "Helen of Troy," she answered. "What did you think it was?" "Well," he murmured, "I thought you might be Helen of Avoirdupois!"—Tid-Bits.

The Way to Tell an Orange.

Big oranges are not good. They are all skin and fiber. If you want "a yellow cup of wine" buy small fruit; that is, fruit that runs 175 or 200 to the box. Weigh it in the hand and take the heaviest. Sweet, sound oranges are full of wine and sugar and very heavy. A thin, smooth skin is a good sign. Wide, deep-pored skins are unmistakable signs of a coarse, spongy article. Bright yellow oranges usually cost more than russet, because they are prettier. When the commission merchant buys in a hurry he saves time by taking an orange between his hands and squeezing it to death. If it runs a cup of wine he takes as much of the cargo as he needs; if it runs dry he cuts the price or refuses to trade. There is no surer way to tell the real value of an orange, mandarin, or grape fruit.

Frequent Onslaughts

On the delicate membrane of the bowels and stomach with drastic purgatives must have their natural consequence—to weaken and disable both organs. Nature exacts severe penalties for infringements of her laws, and there is no more glaring one than that which consists in frequent and unnecessary dosing with violent cathartics. This is, however, the course pursued by many unwise people who seem to think that the bowels, unless constantly relaxed, are not in a healthy state. When a laxative is really needed, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the safest and most thorough. It neither gripes nor operates violently or excessively. It invigorates the intestines and stomach, and arouses the liver. Regularity and vigor are guaranteed by its use. Sleep promoted, appetite restored, are among its beneficial effects. A tendency to rheumatism and kidney trouble is nullified by it, and it completely eradicates malarial complaints.

Fought Until They Agreed.

A laughable affair occurred in a West Main street business house Friday. Two well-known citizens got into a dispute, which soon grew into a rough-and-tumble fight. The combatants clinched, rolled over on the floor and pommeled each other in the most approved style. Faces were scratched and shirts completely torn in shreds. After becoming completely winded, each agreed to call the slugging match a draw. As No. 1 arose he remarked: "I'm a fool." No. 2 asserted the same concerning himself, and both marched arm in arm to the hydrant, where they washed the gore from their faces and then shook hands.—Sedalia (Mo.) Gazette.

Not the Usual Kind of Obituary.

George Wollard is dead, and dying he went as straight to hell as an arrow shot from its bow. For seventy-four years he has lived in this town. During that time he has opposed every enterprise that would tax him a copper; he opposed schools; he never gave a cent to church or charity; he favored saloons; his influence was always on the devil's side. He left an estate worth $65,000 and a life that smells to Heaven.—Memphis (Mo.) Democrat.

Of Course They Didn't Agree.

A rather funny story is told in the New York Sun of two society women deeply interested in the cause of political equality for women, who called upon a well-known lawyer and asked him to address a meeting for them. "Certainly, ladies," was the bland reply; "it will give me great pleasure to speak for you; but which side am I to take?"

IN every country band there is one or two members who cannot play a note, and who cannot learn, but they are always active in keeping up the organization.

AN egotist will always speak of himself either in praise or in censure; but a modest man ever shuns making himself the subject of his conversation.

A Woman Shrinks

from telling her physical troubles to men. During the past 20 years thousands of women throughout the world have written in womanly confidence to Lydia E. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and laid bare the life of misery they endured. They wrote freely, knowing that their letters went straight to the hands of a woman, who not alone understood their sufferings, but whose heart was full of sympathy with them.

The experience of thousands has proved how carefully their letters were studied, and how true and sure came the answer and helpfulness.

And also that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is woman's great friend.

STARTING A BALKY HORSE.

The Hayseed Put His Finger in the Animal's Ear with Immediate Effect.

A colored man had just delivered a trunk from a one-horse wagon on N street, Washington, the other afternoon. When he came out of the house and climbed to his seat he bade the horse shake himself. The animal apparently did not understand what was said, for his only movement was to place his feet more firmly on the pavement and give his tail a slight tremor. The driver repeated the command, at the same time adding emphasis to his words by a quick stroke of the whip. It was to no purpose, the horse had balked. The blows fell thick and fast on the beast's back, but the horse had apparently come to stay. The man climbed down from his seat and began work on the other end of the obstinate creature by pulling at the bridle and speaking heavily loaded sentences into the auricular receptacles of the horse. The only effect noticed by the News man was that the horse pressed its feet so closely to the cobble stones that it almost crushed its shoes. Many were the modes of moving his horseship advanced by the bystanders. At last some one suggested that a fire built on the pavement beneath the animal would be calculated to make him move. It was to be tried as a last resort. A bunch of shavings and some small sticks were placed under the horse, and the driver was just going to apply a match to the pile that was intended to melt the animal into action when a stranger who had been noticed joining the crowd a few minutes before stepped up. The newcomer's browned face and hands, stout boots and broad hat suggested that he had come from the rural districts.

"Hold on there," he said to the driver as he stepped out into the street, "that ain't the way. You climb back into yer wagin an' I'll start the creatcher." The negro did so. "I ken start 'im" said the man as he stepped to the horse's head and began patting him on the neck. Then, without further words, he thrust his finger in the animal's ear and pulled gently. The horse shook his head once or twice in a vain attempt to get away and then started to move off. As it trotted away around the corner the farmer was heard to exclaim: "Begosh, that moves 'em every time."

CAUGHT AN ARCTIC PELICAN.

The Man, as the Event Proved, Was Also Caught by the Bird.

Old Tom Clellan is an industrious Scotchman who has his dwelling on the bank of the artificial reservoir which supplies the city of Fostoria, O., and its numerous factories with water. One day recently he espied a large white bird floating upon the lake, and, taking his gun, he succeeded in creeping up to within a few feet of the majestic stranger. He fired upon it a tremendous load of shot from his gun, which he had previously loaded for "banshees" and "brownies." The pelican only ducked its head, and evinced but slight injury from the heavy charge of shot. The old man fired again, and this time the bird floundered desperately, but was unable to rise. He then threw off his clothes, swam to the crippled bird, and attempted to seize it in his mouth and swim to shore with it; but the strange bird dexterously besmeared the old man's bald head with a kind of mucous or saliva, and then, distending its cavernous pouch beneath its throat, opened its mouth and jammed its head and throat down over old Tom's head, neatly encasing the latter in the spacious pouch.

Being thus completely circumvented in his efforts to capture his prize the old man pulled out for the shore with lusty strokes, towing in his wake his prize. On reaching the shore some persons seized the indomitable bird by the legs and another of the party grasped the old man in like manner and, taking a steady pull, they released him from the membranous prison in which his head had been ensnared by the huge bird. Old Tom, it is needless to state, immediately dispatched the bird, not even waiting to put on his shirt and trousers. The bird is now on exhibition in Fostoria.

THROW UP YOUR HANDS.

The Most Sensible Thing to Do When a Desperado Has the Drop on You.

"When a desperado gets the drop on you the only thing for a sensible man to do is to throw up his hands," says James Skaggs, of Coffeyville, Kan., at the Lindell, to a reporter for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "To throw up your hands is no reflection upon your bravery out in the wild West. To attempt to draw your weapon when a man has pulled down on you is to invite a verdict of 'Came to death for being a —— fool.' The most desperate man will throw up his hands when he has the worst of the draw. He argues that if he is being arrested he will always have the chance of escaping. If his assailant simply desires to humiliate and intimidate him, why, there is the broad future to get even in. I have known Wells-Fargo stage-coach guards to throw up their hands at the first command and give up their arms. There is no use in saying that the robber will not shoot. Too many dead men have told that he does. I knew a little Wells-Fargo man who had a great reputation for bravery. The coach was held up on the Santa Fe trail. The guard was one of the first to surrender. The passengers were disgusted as they stood in line and were robbed. When the coach renewed its journey they were very harsh in the criticism of their guard. The coach rolled on for a half mile and turned a bend behind some rocks. The guard then stopped the coach and unstrapped a Winchester from the side of the vehicle. Then he started back on foot alone. Just as he expected, he came across the men on the road dividing the booty. They did not perceive him until he got his Winchester at work and killed all three in their tracks. Then he stepped forward, secured all the booty and the weapons of the robbers and rejoined the coach about nightfall, the driver having moved slowly, as he knew what the brave fellow was up to."

A REMARKABLE SKULL

Which Belonged to Some Unknown Prehistoric Being.

A most remarkable specimen was recently added to the collection of a noted archæologist of California, which was unearthed near the headwaters of the Amazon. It is nothing less than the skull of some prehistoric being, and that it is a rare find will be seen from the accompanying illustration. The wonderful thing about the skull, next to the remarkable state of its preservation, is the fact that it has been reduced to about one-third of a skull's natural size by the exercise of some art or process now unknown. Apparently all the bones were removed from the head, and all that now remains is the skin which has ossified and become as hard as stone. Whatever may have been the nature of this process the features of the being still remain. A long growth of luxuriant black hair is still attached to the scalp, and hair of the same color form very distinct eyebrows. The appearance of the skull seems to indicate that it was made the subject of some strange religious ceremony after death. To the back of the head and amid the growth of hair which hangs below the neck is attached a long pendant string, apparently made of some sort of hide, and showing by marks of discoloration and disintegration great age and much exposure. The lips are tied firmly together with long cords, the ends of which hang below the jaw a foot or so, forming, as it were, a sort of flaxen or hempen beard.

A PREHISTORIC SKULL.

He Knew His Strength.

A Georgia fruit dealer had about his store a man of color who was noted for his honesty; at least, he had been for the six months he had been employed. When the first load of watermelons for the season was received Zeke became worried and nervous, and just before closing for the night he went to the proprietor.

"I spec, boss, I'se got ter resign," he said, twirling his hat in hand like a shame-faced boy.

"Why, Zeke, what's the matter?" was the surprised response. "I'm satisfied with you, and I thought you were satisfied with me."

"I wuz, boss, twel terday."

"What's wrong now?"

"I cain't stan' hit, boss," he said, vaguely.

"Can't stand what?"

"Cain't stan' de great tem'tation, boss," he went on rapidly. "De orringes ain't nothin', nor the bananners, nor the peaches, nor plums, nor grapes, nor noner dem. Dem's nothin' to a man ob my princ'ples; boss, an' 'taint no tem'tation for me not ter pick um up when you ain't lookin'; but, boss, hit am dem yar watermillions wot's rasslin' wid dis chile, an' dey's gwine ter fling him, sho. Dem's what I cain't stan', boss, an' ef I hain't done resigned my job, dish yer very night, dar's a commandment gwine ter be busted wide open, an' I'se 'sponsible fer hit. Godfathers and Godmothers.

We must, doubtless, look to the Jews for the origin of godfathers and godmothers. The use of them in the primitive church is so early that it is not easy to fix a time for their beginning. Some of the most ancient fathers make mention of them, and through all the successive ages afterward we find the use of them continued without any interruption. By a constitution of Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, 1236, and in a synod held at Worcester, 1240, a provision was made that there should be for every male child two godfathers and one godmother, and for every female one godfather and two godmothers. King Henry VIII., referring to the Princess Elizabeth, says:

My Lord of Canterbury,
I have a suit which you must not deny me.
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism.
You must be godfather, and answer for her.
—Henry VIII., Act V., Scene 3.

A constitution of 1281 makes provision for a Christian name being changed at confirmation; this is practically a renaming of the child. The manner in which it was done was for the Bishop to use the name in the Invocation, and afterward for him to sign a certificate that he had so confirmed a person by such new name. It is possible that this practice might have been in Shakspeare's mind when he wrote:

Call me but love, and I'll be new baptized,
Henceforth I never will be Romeo.
—Romeo and Juliet, Act II., Scene 2.
—The Westminster Review.

Nothing Unscaled Among the Alps.

To-day, when every great peak has been thoroughly explored, when famous climbers have achieved the most difficult summits alone, or at least without professional guides, but few remain the mere ascent of which confers any brevet of distinction in this field of athletics. As in all professions, and in all sports which boast semi-professional experts, the standard has been raised. In order to take a high rank, or to "make a record," the aspirants for the honors of the Alpine Club must traverse such peaks as the Matterhorn and descend on the opposite side, or across the Dom du Mischabel, the highest peak on Swiss soil, which presents little difficulty until one descends the steep rock face above Saas. There are still a few summits left which are admitted to be somewhat "tough," and one of the most successful enthusiasts in the matter of rock peaks has recently given his verdict in favor of Chamouni as a happy hunting ground. — Scribner's Magazine.

A BAD MAN IN OHIO.

But He Flourished a Century and a Half Ago.

A short time ago William Gable, a young man, was working near a big rock in the northwestern corner of Morgan County, Ohio, says the Toledo Blade. He accidentally knocked some moss off it and revealed two or three letters chiseled in the surface. He began to dig at once and removing the remaining moss found a message from Lewis Whetzle, or Wetzel, as he is known to pioneer history. On the face of the rock is the legend "Enjoy the peace which I have prepared for you," and to the right of this is the inscription cut into the sandstone: "Engraved by me, Lewis Whetzle, born in Virginia, February 29th, 1752."

The discovery of this rock, long buried beneath the wood's moss and leaves, brings to mind once more the wonderful deeds of daring of Whetzle. Close to this rock ran the old Federal trail, which led from Grave Creek to the Scioto towns. It crossed the Muskingum River at the present town of Gaysport. The town of the Delaware Indians was Duncan's Falls, five miles up the river. The trail ran close to this lettered rock on the high ridge just above it, and it is very likely that Whetzle did the work while on one of his scouting expeditions along this trail. It was on one of these that Whetzle, armed only with his knife and tomahawk, attacked a camp of four Indians. Three of them he killed, the fourth ran for his life and escaped.

Whetzle was a wonderful man in many respects. Not very tall, only five feet nine inches, he was a man of enormous strength. His shoulders were those of a giant and his chest gave notice to all that he could run a race with any savage and win. He was as dark and swarthy as an Indian, and his face was deeply pitted with the small-pox. His hair, and this was his special pride, reached, when combed to its full length, to the calves of his legs, and every Muskingum Indian had sworn to have his scalp. His eyes were black and shone with a fierce fire. He feared nothing and was wild or tame as he was either enemy or friend.

His name will be forever connected with the history of the border along the Ohio and through West Virginia.

A LOST TREASURE.

Seeking Hidden Jewels in Burmah, Further India.

It is now almost nine years since Great Britain annexed Upper Burmah after a successful war waged against King Theebaw. At that time, Mandalay, the capital, was occupied by British troops and during the occupation the crown jewels were stolen from the royal palace and so securely disposed of that every effort made since to find them proved ineffectual. Now after so many years the subject is revived by the deathbed confession of an English soldier, who said that he and a comrade stole the valuables. That comrade, Private William White, has been dispatched to Burmah by the Indian government to recover the lost treasure.

That the jewels are of great value is certain, for Burmah contains the richest ruby mines in the world and various other kinds of precious stones are abundantly found sixty miles from the capital.

Inhabited Thatch.

The town of Bangalore, in India, lies in a low, moist valley. There the conservator of forests took up his residence when he was reporting on the state of some woods in Bengal. He found the bungalow in a very dilapidated condition. The "chut"—a whitewashed ceiling-cloth stretched horizontally at the height of the walls, and hiding unseemly beams and rafters—was full of holes. So also was the thatch, as he knew from the patches of blue sky to be seen here and there.

I sent for the owner of the house, and ordered him to make the building thoroughly habitable.

"Sir," he replied, "it is the dry season. You only want the house for a month or so, and during that time there will not be a drop of rain. What need is there for repairs?"

He was plausible, but still I insisted on having the place put to rights. The next day when I reached the bungalow I found four or five thatchers and some servants loitering outside, but not a hand's turn of work had been done. Moreover, it was evident that they had not the slightest intention of beginning, for one of the thatchers approached me with joined hands, and said:

"You may hang me if you like, sahib, but I cannot work at that house."

"Why, what is the matter with it?" I asked, wonderingly.

"Come and see!"

Calling the other workmen, who had tied their hooked iron tools to the extremities of long bamboos, we approached the house, and then, standing by the doorways, began cautiously and apprehensively to pull down the chut, or ceiling-cloth.

The sight that met our eyes absolutely beggared description. The whole roof, thatch, rafters and beams, seemed literally alive with cobras. They swarmed in hundreds; hooded crests and angry heads hissed at us from every nook and corner. On examining the house further we found that the walls, made of sun dried bricks, were completely honeycombed with holes and snake-channels; and it was evident that the cobras had used the spot for years as a sort of nursery for bringing up their young. I am glad to add that, next day, the bungalow was burned to the ground.

Internal Temperature of Trees.

The internal temperature of trees has been observed from some time past by M. Prinz of Uccle, in Belgium, who finds their mean annual temperature at the heart of the trunk the same as that of air, but the mean monthly temperature of the trees sometimes differs from the latter by two degree or three degree centigrade. On certain days the difference in question may be as much as ten degree centigrade. In very cold weather the internal temperature falls to a very few tenths of a degree below the freezing point and then remains stationary. In very hot weather the temperature of the tree stays at fifteen degree centigrade or thereabouts. A large tree is therefore colder in hot weather and warmer in cold weather than air.—London Globe.

Crows at Niagara.

An interesting sight was witnessed by the visitors at Niagara Falls recently. It was the annual migration of crows toward the South. This usually occurs in early winter, but this year, for some unknown reason, did not occur until March 1. The crows passed southward by the million, and for two days the air was black with them and the noise of their cawing almost deafening. When they got to the falls they lit in large numbers on the ice bridge and set up a wild cawing. The sound echoed against the walls of the gorge and made a tremendous noise. When they were rested, they arose, with a loud whirring of wings, and continued their flight. Many flew into the falls and were drowned.—Detroit Free Press.

Tricks of Desert Coyotes.

Coyotes show a strength of understanding that is something alarming. Desert prospectors, like Mr. Riley, who have been often on the verge of death, tell me that when parties are lost in the wilds the coyotes persistently follow, and only when they are leading for water will these miserable creatures relinquish pursuit. The Indians of Palm Springs have a strong belief in the cleverness of coyotes, and have informed me in all seriousness that coyotes are known to steal large watermelons and roll them miles away from where the theft was committed. It is certain that coyotes, when grape hunting, only select the largest and ripest bunches, and they display this sagacity when choosing melons.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Hard Times in Lapland.

The existing distress in Swedish Lapland, caused by the heavy snows of last winter, is described as being exceedingly severe. Generally the reindeer easily finds nourishment beneath the snow, but this winter that has been impossible. The snow was so deep and hard that the animals could not pierce it. On the Finland side there was plenty of food for them and they went by thousands across the frontier, when they were confiscated by Finland. These creatures are the whole riches of the Laplanders, who are stated to be now quite beggared.—London News.

Musician, Litterateure and Hangman.

Johann Seyfried, the new hangman of Vienna, is a man of versatile talents. He not only understands his special profession thoroughly, but is at the same time a virtuoso on the zither, and is a singer of more than ordinary quality. He has an enviable record as a hunter and an athlete, and has lately written the memoirs of his uncle, Heinrich Willenbacher, and of his brother, Rudolph Seyfried, both of them men of remarkable executive ability in their special professions.

Gas From Wood for Cooking.

A Western genius has invented a machine for making gas for illuminating purposes out of wood instead of coal. The machinery is very simple, consisting merely of a retort and purifying chamber, with a tank for holding the gas. He claims that the machine can be used for domestic purposes, and that by attaching it to an ordinary cooking stove enough gas to last a day can be made by the fire necessary to do the cooking.—Scientific American.

Temperance Reforms in Saloons.

A temperance reformer of Lowell, Mass., named Gardner recently originated a new kink in temperance work. He caused it to be announced that he would like to hold a temperance meeting in a barroom. At first the saloonkeepers held off, but finally one who wasn't doing much business offered the use of his saloon. The result surprised both the saloonkeeper and the reformer, though in different ways, for while the reformer didn't do much reforming, the saloonkeeper did a land-office business, and now Gardner is swamped with offers from other saloons.

As to War in Europe.

Archibald Forbes, a writer with few if any superiors in his special field, is of the opinion that the war in Europe, which so many believe to be impending, will not occur until 1896. France and Russia have a united army of more than 1,500,000 men, but Russia is not well supplied with modern weapons. Germany, Austria, and Italy have a force of about 1,200,000 men, well equipped. When Russia has issued the new weapons to her army Mr. Forbes believes the long-expected and oft-predicted conflict will begin.

SURPRISING FIGURES.

The Extent of Advertising Done by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company.

Some idea of the importance of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, as a Lynn enterprise, may be estimated by the amount of advertising which is placed by them in the leading newspapers of America. Advertising is in their line one of the surest gauges by which to judge the extent of their business.

The newspaper advertising of this famous concern is all placed through the advertising agency of Pettingill & Co., Boston, and the writer recently learned while in their offices that eight tons of electrotypes were shipped by them to the newspapers in one day, all of which were advertisements of the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Some idea of the extent of such advertising can be formed when one considers the fact that a five-inch electrotype weighs but a few ounces, and that eight tons consists of 256,000 ounces, or an amount sufficient to furnish all the leading publications of America with more than five electrotypes each.

As a Lynn enterprise the Pinkham Medicine Company stands in the front rank.—From the Lynn Item.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE:
Dear Sir—I will say this to you, that Consumption is hereditary in my wife's family; some have already died with the disease. My wife has a sister, Mrs. E. A. Cleary, that was taken with consumption. She used your "Golden Medical Discovery," and, to the surprise of her many friends, she got well. My wife has also had hemorrhages from the lungs, and her sister insisted on her using the "Golden Medical Discovery." I consented to her using it, and it relieved her. She has had no symptoms of consumption for the past six years. People having this disease can take no better remedy.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception. "I had been troubled with heart disease 2 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 509 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

EARNINGS OF BEGGARS.

The Professionals In London and Paris Pick Up a Good Living.

The professional beggar is not a modern innovation by any means. Readers may recall Scarecrow, the famous London beggar, who, having disabled himself in his right leg, asked alms all day in order to get a warm supper at night. According to John Timbs, the Ruffiers, of whom we often find mention in the literature of the seventeenth century, were troops of idle vagrants who infested Lincoln's inn fields.

They assumed the characters of maimed soldiers who had suffered in the great rebellion and found a ready prey in the people of fashion and quality who drove by. Indeed it is made clear by contemporary allusion in comedies that this square was the regular haunt of bogus cripples who lived by mendicancy, which they carried on in the most barefaced and even intimidating manner. It is related that George IV, when prince of Wales, once attended a beggars' carnival in London incognito. He had not been there long when the chairman, addressing the company and pointing to the prince, said:

"I call upon that 'ere gemman with a shirt for a song." The prince, as well as he could, got excused, upon a friend, who accompanied him, promising to sing instead, which the latter did amid great applause. The health of the prince and his friend having been drunk and duly responded to, they departed in order to afford the company an opportunity to fix their different routes for the ensuing day's business, for at that time the professional beggars of London used to have a general meeting several times during the year, at which they were divided into companies, each company having its particular walk.

In those days their earnings varied, some getting as much as 5 shillings a day. Most of the professional beggars in London today—and their name is legion—emanate from two or three common lodging houses. The most populous of these, which is known as The Dispensary, supports an individual known as a "scriver," who earns a living by manufacturing the pathetic signboards which the sham cripples and the bogus blind men carry round their necks. In Paris, as is well known, the professional beggars hold regular weekly meetings, at which the routes to be followed by the members of the guild are mapped out by a standing committee.

They have an organ of their own, called The Journal des Mendicants, which appears twice a week. From a recent issue the following advertisement is taken: "Wanted—To engage a cripple for a seaside resort. Good references and a small deposit required."

This queer announcement is explained by the fact that the proprietors of hotels and boarding houses of fashionable French watering places assume that visitors would be disposed to give alms if an opportunity were afforded them, and as they cannot very well do the begging themselves they engage professional beggars to whom they grant permission to solicit alms on their premises, and the beggars in return pay them one-half of their daily receipts.—North American Review.

Benefits of Bicycle Riding.

Among the main reasons which bicycle riders give for their choice of locomotion are the following:

Bicycling is a popular, clean, healthful sport, and a wheel is good company.

The wheel is a time saving machine, and in this busy age time is money.

Exercise on the wheel is better than walking, because the weight of the body is principally supported by the saddle. Strength is economized and the exertion of force distributed more generally throughout the muscles of the legs, arms and body, and equal results in progress reached by far less exertion, or proportionately greater results by the same exertion. In other words, the wheelman rides ten miles in an hour with less fatigue than he would walk four in the same time, because in walking almost all the muscular exertion is thrown on the legs.

Few people breathe properly. They use only the upper portion of the lungs and leave a large residuum of impure air. Bicycle riding causes thorough respiration and tones up the general circulation. It is particularly beneficial to men and women of sedentary habits, and gives them such exhilarating pleasure that they do not feel the labor involved.—New York Ledger.

A Small Piece of Justice.

In a small town not many miles from Erie, Pa., there was a case before the justice of the peace that was settled very summarily.

It appears that a Mr. Jones had beaten Mr. Brown's dog with a club for chasing his chickens. They met at the office of the justice, each accompanied by a lawyer, and bound to see the thing through, no matter what it cost. As Jones and Brown were prominent citizens of the town a large crowd assembled at the trial, expecting to hear some great oratory from the lawyers.

The justice was a very pompous and ignorant old fellow, who was great on big words, no matter whether appropriate or not. The case was called, the witnesses who had seen the clubbing gave their testimony, and Jones' lawyer arose to open for his client, when the justice said:

"Hold on, Mr. Lawyer, there is no use argifying or condisputing about this matter, as there is no case of assessity for it. Mr. Jones was highly unwrong in beating Mr. Brown's dog, so I fine him ten dollars for cruelty to dumb animals, and that is all there is about it."—Detroit Free Press.

Butler Took the Case.

"I had a important law case on," said a Wakefield gentleman. "I knew no one could win that case for me but Ben Butler. He was in Washington at the time. I went to Washington, and after hard scrabbling for two days got an audience with him. He said he wouldn't take my case for $1,000 a day. He had more work on his hands now than he could attend to, and he went about his work right then.

"'General,' I said, 'I was born in the same town with you.'

"He grunted, but wasn't otherwise affected that I could see.

"'Do you remember little Miss——? And you remember the boy who used to send notes to her, and the boy who used to take them? I am the boy who took the notes.'

"'And I am the boy who sent them,' said the general. He held out his hand. 'I guess I'll take your case, after all,' he said, and he did and won it."—Boston Globe.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

LAST WEEK

Miss Heller, of Ft. Wayne, is visiting her cousin, Mrs. Mary Morell.

Mrs. H. M. Finch, of Chicago, is visiting her sister Mrs. Winslow. She will remain some weeks.

Mrs. Mary Morell went over to Auburn Friday of last week, spending the day with her relatives there.

Mr. VanAuken has been surveying our streets for a few days past with a view to having them of uniform grade.

Mr. Crane, one of the original proprietors of the town plat of Waterloo, was in town Friday, calling on acquaintances and old settlers.

The infant child of Mrs. Buss, the widowed daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Bevier, died Thursday morning, May 24, the services and burial occurring Saturday.

The cucumbers in many gardens that came up so finely, have disappeared since touched by frost, the beans are nipped, and the corn looks as if so much water did not agree with it.

Saturday, June 2, at 10 o'clock a. m., will commence the selling off at auction by Jerry Plum, of the drugs, medicines and other goods, fixtures, etc., owned by Mrs. J. U. Winslow. The selling off in this manner will be continued Thursdays and Saturdays, indefinitely, or at private sale.

The memorial services Sunday at the Presbyterian church were well attended. The house was filled even standing room being all taken. The audience room was beautifully decorated, the singing excellent, as was also the sermon, commanding the closest attention and interesting all. The G. A. R. and W. R. C. came, of course, in a body.

Mrs. St. Clair, upon returning home Friday afternoon after an absence of some hours, found to her surprise the ladies of the Presbyterian church social assembled in her rooms. Not having been at the previous meeting, or at church when the notice was given, she knew nothing about it. However, nothing discomforted, Mrs. St. Clair welcomed her guests, and "all went merry as a marriage bell."

Robert Patterson writes us May 31, from Howell, Michigan, where he has been doing business since Oct. 10 of last year, to his old friends here, through his old friends of the COURIER. He says among other things: "Howell is located on the Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern R. R. and on the Detroit, Lansing & Northern R. R., is 52 miles west of Detroit, 30 miles east of Lansing and 76 north of Toledo, is surrounded by a fine farming country, and is well represented by all branches of business, has electric lights and is at present putting in a system of waterworks of 10 miles of pipe, are erecting a large brick flouring mill in place of one burned recently. We have also a condensed milk works, employing about 75 hands at present. The business buildings are all first class. The population is a little less than 3,000. Church privileges are A No. 1, composed of Baptists, Presbyterians, Catholics, Evangelicals and M. E.s. The latter have a membership of over 500 and their attendance at Sunday School last Sunday was 474, which is a fair sample. It is estimated that about 1150 scholars are enrolled in the four schools of the place. So, you see, we are a remarkable town religiously, although we have eight saloons. But to offset the saloon we have a strong lodge of Good Templars. I write these lines to you that you and yours may know that I have not forgotten you. I have been at home but three times in the past 8 months and then only for a short time. It is not pleasant to remain away from home and family, but my business compels me to. I am well, weigh 197 and never felt better. Charlie and Willie are at Elkhart and are doing well."

WATERLOO.

Fine flowers at Dickinson's greenhouse now.

Mrs. Fink, of Chicago, is still a guest of her sister, Mrs. Winslow.

Great interest is centered on the democratic convention that meets here Saturday.

E. P. Dickinson's little girl, Hattie, who has been quite sick, is again able to be about.

Our people were glad, Tuesday, to learn that the small pox scare at Garrett was all ended.

The district C. E. meeting is held here to-day and to-morrow, and promises to be largely attended.

The republican caucus last Saturday was well attended and a good deal of interest manifested.

Miss Mary Sears, of South Bend, visited over Sunday with her sister and family, Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson.

Judge Rush R. Sloane, of Sandusky, Ohio, came down Saturday, and spent a day visiting his sister, Mrs Winslow.

Mrs. Winslow has a great many of her rare flowers, in bloom now, and will have many more as the season advances.

Lou and Emma Patterson returned Tuesday from a visit with their sister, Mrs. Ira Bachelor, near Orland. Mr. B's young daughter came home with them.

Father Bensinger, who has been sick for some time, is again able to be out. Tuesday he went to South Bend, to attend the district conference, which is in session there.

Mrs. Winslow did not have the auction sale of drugstore stock last Saturday, as all interest centered in the caucus. To-day, however, at 2:30 p. m., the sale will begin in earnest. Mr. McDonald will be auctioneer.

Order of the O. E. S. of this place will serve dinner June 9, on the occasion of the Democratic County Convention, in the building next to the butcher shop, north of the railroad. Prices reasonable with abundance to eat.

Mr. F. R. Dickinson, of Tecumseh, Mich., surprised his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson, by sending them 175 pounds of groceries, consisting of sugar, coffee, oat meal, canned salmon, cherries, peas and sweet corn.

Judge W. B. McConnell, of Fargo, North Dakota, was here Tuesday. He came back a week ago, to attend the funeral of his mother at Angola, and at this time was on his way home from a visit with his wife's people at Fremont, Ohio, where his wife also reside most of the time. He is serving his third term as judge, the first term being by appointment during Cleveland's first term.

Joe Lower was driving home from Auburn Sunday evening with a Mrs. Harner, who keeps house for him, and the latter's little child, and when not far from town another team ran by him and frightened his horse, and it ran. Seeing the danger, he threw the child out into the fence corner, and then the buggy was upset, he and Mrs. Harner being considerably bruised. He had two ribs broken. The child was not much hurt.

CONCORD.

Lewis Layman is painting Jas. Hennessey's house.

Alma Ervin visited her parents in Cedarville Thursday.

Children's Day will be observed here June 17 at 3 p. m.

Mrs. Rose Phillip's sister, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, is visiting her.

Is. Lawman and Richard Ervin drove over to Auburn Saturday.

Orville Latson, of Auburn, is here visiting his half-brother Ira Bone.

A goodly number from this place will be in attendance at the convention.

W. B. Brown and Master Carl, of Auburn, came down to F. Buchanan's Monday.

Jas. Hennessey and family visited in the family of C. Baker in Auburn Sunday.

Mr and Mrs H. Timmerman and Mrs. Smurr and Ettie were in St. Joe Thursday.

Della Baker's face is so badly swollen from being poisoned that she is unable to attend school.

W. Baker and Will Scott have erected 3,000 pickets for J. D. Leighty on his farm east of St. Joe.

Sue Testison, of St. Joe, and her mother, of this place, visited in the family of H. Cline Thursday.

T. H. Murray received a love tap from his favorite horse a few days ago and now walks quite lame.

Dr. E. M. Hines, of Auburn, is treating Jerry Ricketts' diseased limb with beneficial results. It is a terrible case.

Last Monday morning girls took a tumble. Sue Ricketts fell from the first step to the last one, receiving slight injuries.

Geo and Belle Swineford and Miss Minnie Hornberger were the guests of A Swineford and wife, of St. Joe, Sunday.

Ex-sheriff St. Clair, of near Waterloo, employed one of his sons and B. Phillips to haul several loads of baled hay to St Joe for shipment last week.

Ten men of Auburn, headed by R. W. Cobb, on bicycles, rushed through here Sunday morning. They said they were headed for Ft. Wayne and came by St. Joe to get the benefit of the gravel road.

Rev. Lineberry was made the victim of a rather mysterious joke last Saturday. He was fattening a chicken for a roast on Mrs. L's return from visiting her parents at Plymouth. In the evening he started to feed it, but no chick; turned every box in his barn inside out, peeped down cellar, still no chicken. A thought probably dawned on him, when he remembered that the Lutherans had a chicken social that evening. He attended and we suppose tasted every chicken (for we know ministers have a remarkable capacity for chicken) Whether any of them had a familiar taste we have not yet learned.

BUTLER.

Little Florence Campbell is visiting her grandma, near Angola.

Mrs Kline, an aged lady living on West Oak street, died last Sunday.

J. A. Campbell made a trip on his wheel last Monday to Hudson, Ashley and Salem Center.

The county Sunday school convention is having a series of interesting and profitable meetings here this week.

J. R. Byers, who recently removed from Butler to Ashley, had a narrow escape from fire last week. Mrs. Byers was carelessly handling some gasolene, when from some cause it ignited, burning her hands and her clothing, but not seriously injuring her, or doing much damage to their property.

The republican caucus of Wilmington township was held here last Saturday. It was very harmonious. The earnest workings of one of its citizens in the south end of the township, who aspires to some position of honor and profit, at the disposal of the people of the county, provoked some smiles, but who can tell what pranks may be played in politics.

Last Sunday morning about nine o'clock our people were startled from their Sunday morning services by the ominous sound of the fire whistle, and in less time than it takes to write this, the street was lined with excited people, and the fire company were clanging over the stony street with fire appliances. The fire was located in Mutzfeldt's harness shop, and had caught from carelessly running a stove pipe alongside and actually in contact with a partition. It was soon under control and the damage proven small. Insured in the "Springfield," in J. A. Campbell's company.

Who has not a Mission?

The question which is agitating the minds of the rising generation is, "What shall we do to best employ our time?" It is a question, too, which should be considered with the utmost care and attention. It is two often the case, when we are trying to determine what shall be our future business, that there are so many who are not pleased with their callings or their work to which they have begun to devote their time. It is true that our time in some way should be employed, but just in what direction is the all absorbing question. There are but very few of us who do not in some period of our lives, meditate upon our future mission, and wonder what the world has in store for us. It takes many different kinds of people to make up this vast world, and it is true that a great many seem to be indifferent as to their future, never allowing it to intrude upon their thoughts, or interfere with the pleasures of the present moment; while others aspire to tasks which their intellect is incompetent to accomplish. It is very clear that we cannot all be eminent, or fill positions which the world deems high in social standing. Yet our mission may be to engage in some grand and noble cause which has pleased the One above to connect with our lot. At some time in our life we feel a trembling—fearful longing to do some good thing. The life that has absorbed a tear drop from the cheek of sorrow, and touched the wildly throbbing heart with soothing sympathy, that in a word has made the world brighter, better and happier, has accomplished something that will be felt as long as eternity shall last. We were all created for some mission, and we should strive to apply all our time and energy to the discharge of the duties which fall in our pathway, whenever an opportunity presents itself, however small, in which we may confer a favor upon a fellow being, or gain a laurel of commendation from the world at large. We should avail ourselves of the present moments to do good. Our mission may not attain to anything high in the beginning, but by discharging the small duties we are qualifying ourselves for the performance of more essential ones, which are conferred only upon the gifted and the good. For

If you have not gold or silver
Ever ready at command,
If you cannot to the needy,
Reach an ever open hand,
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep,
You can be a true desciple
Sitting at the Savior's feet.

Do not then stand idly waiting
For some greater work to do;
Oh, improve each passing moment,
For these moments may be few.
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do or dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere.

When we look about us and see the many young men, and also women being led astray, we stand by and watch them at times but never offer to try and save them, for fear of being laughed at. But would it not be better to be laughed at by fools, as anyone who would do so should be termed, and try and save them, than to see them lost in sin and vice? Mason Long says: "Save the girls;" but I think the boys should be saved first and then there would be little fear of the girls being lost; for men are vile and women are weak. In many large towns and cities there are far more saloons than churches, and other wicked places where the young are led astray, and it is our duty to try and save them.

Let the fallen be friend or foe,
Male or female sinking low,
It will not disgrace our calling
If we try to lift the fallen.
Thus imitating the example of him who came
To save the world from sin and shame.
And when on earth our work is done
May we hear the plaudit, "thou hast well done."

Forty Barrels a Day.

Harris & Buquo, Erin, Tenn., manufacturers of the celebrated Erin Lime, say they have great faith in Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism. One of their principal coopers was laid up with Rheumatism until induced to take Drummond's Lightning Remedy. After taking two bottles he went to work, and has since been making Forty Barrels per day. If you want this remedy, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles—enough for one month's treatment. Agents Wanted. 22-23

Neenah, Wis.

Situated on Lake Winnebago, on the Wisconsin Central Lines, is a delightful place to spend a summer vacation. There is good boating and fishing and the hotels furnish good accommodations at very reasonable rates. 'Tis here that the famous "Roberts Resort" is located, overlooking the lake and containing all conveniences necessary to make an "outing" healthful and enjoyable.

Located along this popular route are numerous other summer resorts, and those contemplating a summer outing will do well to drop a line to Jas. C. Pond, Genl Pass. Agt., Milwaukee, Wis., and receive free copy of guide book, giving full information as to rates, hotel accommodations, etc.

The Poisonous Acids

In the blood should be taken up and removed by the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work—and the result is Rheumatism. There are a thousand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but there is but one cure for Rheumatism, and that is Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. If you have the disease, send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles—enough for one month's treatment. Any one who is having an argument with the Rheumatism will feel fully repaid by the first dose. Agents Wanted. 22-23

Something wrong when you tire too easily. Something wrong when the skin is not clear and smooth. Something wrong when the blood is impure. Everything right when you take DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

Distemper and Coughs

In horses, sheep and hogs positively prevented and quickly cured by using Craft's Distemper and Cough Cure. Safe to use under all conditions. One dose prevents, one bottle cures, in three to six days. Send for "Treatise" and testimonials from breeders who have used it for many years. Address the Wells Medicine Co., LaFayette, Ind. 35

Equal to Life Insurance

Are you insured? If not, now is the time to provide yourself and family with a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy as an insurance against any serious results from an attack of bowel complaint during the summer months. It is almost certain to be needed and should be procured at once. No other remedy can take its place or do its work. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

The Game of Golf.

Golf, the great national game of Scotland, has become both popular and fashionable in England, and is likely soon to be held in high favor in America, writes John Gilmer Speed in an illustrated article, under the title of "The Game of Golf for Women" in the June Ladies' Home Journal. Those who are ignorant of the game beyond that it is of Scottish origin, and who have only the vague idea that "shinney" sticks and balls and holes are employed in playing it, usually smile in a good-natured and superior way when it is mentioned, just as an accomplished gourmet would smile if he were told that haggis was good to eat. "Good for a Scotchman to eat," the gourmet's smile would say as plainly as uttered syllables. And so the ignorant sportsman would be apt to speak of the ancient and royal game of golf. But in reality there was never a more fascinating nor a more healthful game invented than golf, and the sooner it becomes podular in America the better it will be. In writing about the humors of the game Mr. Gladstone's Parliamentary adversary, Mr. Balfour, has said: "Consider, for instance, the fact that while the performers of other games are restricted within comparative narrow limits of age, golf is out of relation with no one of the seven ages of man. There is no reason why golf should not be begun as soon as one can walk, and continued as long as one can walk."

Pure blood means good health. Reinforce it with DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, cures eruptions, eczema, scrofula and all diseases arising from impure blood. It recommends itself.

CHIEF SIMON POKAGON.

The Last of the Pottawattamie Chiefs Speaks at Albiom.

The last Indian chief of any note in this section of the Union is Chief Pokagon, who with a remnant of this tribe has his home near Hartford in Van-Buren county Mich., attended the Old Settlers meeting at Albiom last Tuesday, and delivered an address. The Albion Democrat from which we take the following, has a fair likeness of the old gentleman. He is something of a literary character having published a small book. "The Red Man's Greeting" printed on birch bark. The Democrat says:

He was honored at the World's Columbia Fair by first ringing the new bell of liberty, on Chicago day, and speaking in behalf of his people in presence of the greatest crowd ever assembled at one place on the face of the earth. He is nearly seventy years old. His father was chief of the tribe forty-two years. In 1833 he sold the land where Chicago now lies for three cents an acre—a large portion of which is still unpaid.

This is the first time, we believe, on record, where an Indian chief has been invited to address an old settlers' meeting, or any similar occasion, and the reception given to Mr. Pokagon is one to be cheerfully remembered by him for the rest of his days.

HIS SPEECH.

Pioneers of Noble County:—I greet you one and all as the true nobility of this land. I am indeed glad to meet you at this important gathering of the fathers and mothers, who have reclaimed from an unbroken wilderness a paradise, if such there is on earth.

I would not have you think that I flatter myself. I have been invited here on account of my reputation or intelligence, as I most keenly realize, you have looked forward to my coming with a sort of novel pride, that you might point me out to your children and say "Behold a living specimen of the race with whom we once neighbored, a race that we once loved, and yet with that love was mingled distrust and fear."

Our people who sleep beneath your soil, came here from the coast of the Atlantic. They were pioneers in their time, as you are to day; when they first entered these beautiful woodland plains, they said in their hearts, "We are surely on the borderland of the happy hunting grounds beyond."

I pray you do not covet the narrow ground they occupy, and thereby desecrate and hide their last resting place; for the good of yourselves and your children, you had better erect some simple monument over their remains, and engrave thereon "An Unknown Redman Lies Buried Here."

Our fathers here found game in abundance; the buffalo and the deer had not yet learned to fear the face of man, and they started not at the twang of the bow. Here our people built their wigwams and their children played under the green pavilion of the mighty fores' as happy as your children now play in the open field or on your decorated lawns.

I speak of this not complaingly for I have always taught my people not to sigh for years long gone by, nor pass again over the bloody trails their fathers trod. I fully realize that as pioneers of this land you had mountains of difficulty to overcome of which our race knew not. The same forest that frowned upon you, smiled upon us; the same forest that was ague and death to you, was our bulwark and defense; the same forests you have cut down and destroyed, we loved, and our great fear was that the white man in his advance westward would mar or destroy it.

I realize fully, how hard you labored day in and day out; year in and year out; to reclaim your farms from the unbroken forests, until your labors were crowned with success, and the wilderness budded and blossomed as the rose.

Indeed you deserve great credit for what you have here accomplished, and pray your children may fully appreciate the goodly inheritance they have and will receive from your hands.

As I survey the face of this country, I cannot refrain from saying to your sons and daughters, "Do not forget the command 'Honor thy father and mother that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God (the Great Spirit) hath given thee.' To do them honor, you must be good to yourselves keep your mouth clean from all that can intoxicate, and as your parents cut down the mighty forests that covered this land; so may you push forward the great car of reform until all enemies that press down the right and uphold the wrong shall be overthrown."

Fathers and mothers! How dear those names, and while I have here stood among strangers, my heart has continually whispered in my ears, saying, "Pokagon, your father and mother a century ago, passed and repassed this very spot along their winding trails."

My parents once lived near Plymouth in this state. Mr. Prentiss, an honored citizen of this county, who has just gone into the world beyond, were he alive and here to-day, would tell you that when he was a young man, lost and starving, he found our wigwam home, and how he shared our simple meals and beds for many moons; we loved him dearly, and when he left us, we all wept. It rejoices my heart to feel that he and my father are in that great wigwam, where there are many rooms prepared by our heavenly Father. I am getting old and feeble and feel that one foot is lifted to step into the world beyond. I have stood all my life as a peacemaker between your people and my people, trying to soothe the prejudices of the two races towards each other. Yes, without bow or gun I have stood as one standing between two armies advancing towards each other for the fight, receiving a thousand wounds from your people and my own people.

In conclusion permit me to say, I rejoice with the joy of childhood, that you have granted a son of the forest a right to speak to you, and the prayer of my heart shall ever be so long as I live, that the Great Spirit will bless you and your children and that the generations yet unborn, may learn to know that we are all brothers and that God is the Father of all.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1894.

R. W. Cobb,

DEAR SIR: I find the "Chainless" the best wheel for easy riding that I have ever used. It is a good hill wheel, yet geared to 63; it runs the easiest up hill of any wheel I have ever used, and I have tested a number of late.

I am in favor of the whole wheel family, but the "Chainless" in my opinion surpasses all others, especially for business men and ladies. When a man can prepare himself with short pants and long stockings he does not mind the greasy chain, but for the business man the pants legs must be tied up, and this, in hot weather is uncomfortable, besides often impracticable and forgotten.

You can say to your friends that I am a "Chainless" convert.

Respectfully,

P. J. LOCKWOOD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

A Compromise Finally Effected, and the Great Coal Strike Will be a Thing of the Past—Uprising of Indians in Alaska—Giant Skeletons Found in Dakota.

IT'S SETTLED.

The Great Coal Strike Is Finally Declared Off.

Columbus (O.) special: The great strike of coal miners inaugurated May 1, has been settled and most of the miners will return to work Monday. Since the beginning of this movement to benefit organized labor thousands of miners have been idle, industries of all kinds have been compelled to reduce their running time and labor or suspend altogether, railroads abandoned many trains, and idleness has been forced on thousands of men outside of those employed in mining coal.

The conference which brought about this much-desired and long-sought-for result met in this city Saturday morning. Operators of mines in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Northern and Eastern Illinois were present as were also representatives of the United Mine Workers, headed by President McBride. All day Saturday they struggled with the problem of arbitration and finally adjourned without result until Monday morning. At 10 o'clock the conference again met, but the scale committee almost immediately asked for an adjournment until 3 o'clock, and the different committees acquiesced. When the miners and operators again met in the evening they found before them the proposition of Col. W. P. Rend of Chicago. Mr. Rend submitted the following:

The miners are to accept 60 and 69 cents per ton now, but after September 1, 1894, they are to receive 70 and 79 cents, the scale they are now demanding.

This was a step in the right direction, and the miners adopted Mr. Rend's suggestion, finally reaching an agreement founded on this basis, which shall continue in force until May 1, 1895.

John McBride says that while the settlement was not all he could wish it was all the miners could hope for under the circumstances. They were still the victors of the contest. "The miners were starving, industries were paralyzed and thousands of fellow workmen were being daily thrown out of employment by reason of the coal famine, while the interference with property rights, which were overdone, was blamed on the miners who were losing public sympathy." He thought the settlement would be at once ratified all over the district.

Secretary Brooks, according to instructions of the conference filed a copy of the agreement with Gov. McKinley as its custodian.

Gov. McKinley says that he was very glad to hear of the settlement. It was in his opinion the only way to promptly and permanently end the trouble in this and other States.

Forest Fires.

Iron Mountain (Mich.) special: This vicinity is being swept by forest fires. The flames are doing great damage in Wisconsin across the river. At Agola, in this State, McCormick's Hotel, Rahr's saloon and boarding-house and several residences and the warehouse of the Agola Lumber Company, were destroyed. The danger has not yet passed. At Sidnaw, Mich., the woods are on fire in all directions. A loss of $10,000 was caused by the burning of the Sidnaw and Ryan hotels. A store and five dwellings were burned at Rubicon.

Indian Uprising.

Advices received from Southern Alaska state that the settlers along the coast of North Prince of Wales Sound are alarmed over an Indian uprising. Two unknown white men, who were passing down the coast in an open boat were killed by natives, since which time there have been several outbreaks. The Governor has been requsted to send a revenue cutter to the scene.

Captured an Illicit Sealer.

Washington special: A telegram received in this city from Port Townsend reports that the United States steamship Mohican, had, after a chase that taxed her sailing qualities not a little, captured a sealing vessel, against whom the evidences of violation of laws and treaty were complete.

Pre-Historic Find.

A special from Egan, S. D., reports a valuable pre-historic find in a mound at that point. A tomb has been uncovered lined with cement. In the tomb compartments were twenty-two male skeletons, averaging eight feet in height. A rude altar and many bronze utensils were exposed.

Held Up a Train.

It is reported from Jordan, Ont., that five tramps held up a Grand Trunk passenger and shot and killed Conductor Turner, who resisted. The tramps were arrested.

Fatally Shot in a Gambling Row.

At Hanover, Ind., George Snyder shot Philip Stillhamer twice through the lungs fatally. The men gambled and became involved in a dispute.

Fire at Frankton.

An incendiary fire destroyed a business block in Frankton, Ind. Loss, $30,000. Two strangers were arrested.

A Wheat Famine Probable.

West Superior (Wis.) special: There are scarcely seven million bushels of wheat stored now and it is believed by the 1st of August there will not be wheat enough at the head of the lake to supply the mills.

Death of a Giant Horse.

King William, the largest horse in the world, being 27½ hands high and weighing 3,027 pounds, died at Chesterton, Ind. He was valued at $10,000.

SMALL GAINS.

Dun's Report Gives a Conservative Estimate of the Business of the Week.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The outlook for business is better on the whole, though the improvement is not great. Moreover, it is impossible to distinguish between the mere replacement of orders for want of fuel or other causes, and new business, for which the works are anxiously looking. It is somewhat encouraging that the decrease in payments through the clearing house is but 24.3 per cent. for the first week of June, 27.2 at New York, but only 19.4 elsewhere. The decrease in comparison with 1892 is about 30 per cent. Railroad tonnage is larger than a year ago in live stock, and moderate in cereals, considerable smaller in coal and iron products and other manufactured goods west bound. Speculation in products is turned toward higher prices and wheat has risen 5 cents with the official state report of injury in Kansas. With only 2,907 coke ovens working, and 14,576 idle, with the Cambria discharging half its force, and seven out of the nine Carnegie furnaces at Bessemer out of blast, the production and manufacture of iron and steel is smaller than at any other time for years. While it is believed the deferred work will cause heavy production after the strike terminates, the demand for products at present is much below general expectations even at the East. Other industries are less affected, but many textile mills even in New England are now closed for lack of fuel or orders, besides other concerns in great number between the Atlantic and Mississippi.

A TERRIBLE FATE.

Twenty Coxeyites Drowned at Denver.

Brighton (Col.) special: Twenty-five of the Coxeyites, who set sail from Denver, are missing as a result of the upsetting of their boat. It is thought that about twenty are drowned. Dead bodies can be seen on sand bars and lodged in trees, but cannot now be recovered. The numbers and names of the Coxeyites drowned in the attempt to navigate the Platte River cannot yet be told. The river was a raging torrent and many boats were wrecked at the bridges. Twenty-nine boats containing 185 men passed Henderson Island bridge. Only twenty, with less than 100 men, reached Brighton. Some boats were deserted, their occupants taking to the road. At the McKay bridge several men were drowned. At Henderson Island bridge twenty-one men were in the water at one time, but were rescued with ropes by Ralph Lee and Louis Branter.

The boat of one man from Utah known as "French," has been recovered. Of one boat containing eight, six are said to have been lost. Most of the bodies have been washed down stream. Many of the Coxeyites believe fourteen to twenty men were drowned. Many of the men are clinging to the trees along the river banks and an order has been telegraphed to Denver for skiffs to take them off.

DITCHED.

One Man Killed and Several Hurt in a Vandalia Wreck.

St. Louis special: The New York fast mail and express, of the Vandalia Line, was wrecked one mile east of Pocahontas, Ill. The train was running about 45 miles per hour, when, on a curve, with a twelve-foot embankment, the engineer, Thomas Manitee, felt something, supposed to be the forward truck on the engine, give way. In an instant the engine, tender, two mail cars, a combination car, and a coach were in the ditch.

The following is a list of dead and injured: Fireman, S. A. Paulson, Terre Haute, under wreck; dead. Injured: George N. Craft, Belleville, Ill., hurt in side; H. Albaugh, postal clerk, hurt in head, back, and chest, seriously; C. U. Niverson, postal clerk, hurt in head, hip, and knee; Miss Anna B. Acuheler, Indianapolis, badly scared, heart disease, dangerous; Samuel Richards, Denver, Colo., bruised in back; Oscar Vanhorn, postal clerk, hurt in shoulder, head and back; F. H. Riley, postal clerk, slight-injured on the head and back; I. M. Barnet, postal clerk, arm scalded, back hurt; S. Byron Humes, postal clerk, leg hurt; Miss Lizzie Riley, slightly hurt; Conductor Trimble, fingers cut; Engineer Menifee, one finger off.

A BAD SMASH-UP.

Attempt to Blockade a Railroad.

Wellington (Kan.) special: Trouble has been brewing between the citizens of Round Pond, O. T., and the Rock Island Road Company ever since the town of Pond Creek sprang up and the company placed its depot there and refused to stop at the former town. The other morning a farm wagon was placed on the track at Round Pond to stop the trains. A stock train cut right through it, but was ditched a little further on, where 150 yards of track had been torn up. Twelve cars of cattle were killed, but the trainmen escaped without fatal injury. Citizens of Round Pond are massing with Winchesters in opposition to the armed forces dispatched by the railroad from this division and also from the division south of Round Pond to repair the track. The road has been torn up all the way through the city. Governor Rentefrew of Oklahoma, has called out the United States troops stationed at Fort Reno to aid in quelling the riot. Thirty railroad men who were arrested and jailed at Round Pond are guarded by armed citizens. The railroad company is hurrying train loads of armed men to the scene.

The Old Banker Gets Six Years.

Theodore P. Haughey, President of the defunct Indianapolis National Bank, was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary for his part in the wrecking of that institution. Mr. Haughey appeared in court with his attorney to receive his sentence. Judge Baker expressed deep regret in pronouncing sentence, saying that it was unpleasant to sentence a man who had so long been respected for his uprightness and integrity as Mr. Haughey. After pronouncing sentence Judge Baker shook Mr. Haughey's hand. Mr. Haughey is 68 years of age. United States Marshal Hawkins immediately started with his prisoner for Michigan City.

The Iron Hall.

Indianapolis special: Judge Winters, of the Superior Court, has ordered Receiver Failey, of the Iron Hall, to distribute a second dividend of 10 per cent. This will require $350,000. The receiver was opposed to a dividend on account of litigated claims not determined, but the court said he did not want the money to lie in vaults when its owners needed it so badly. He said the securities held by the order would pay the claims. He announced that by the last of the month, he would give an order of exclusion of all states which had not accounted to the general receiver in this city. In his opinion the trust will pay from 60 to 65 per cent.

A Novel Decision.

Judge Ewing decided at Chicago that a citizen of the United States cannot acquire title to real estate by inheritance, when the inheritance has to be traced back through alien ancestry, for the reason that such alien ancestry is without inheritable blood, which is a necessity to transmit an inheritance from one person to another. The decision is the first rendered upon this point under the present statute of the State. It is doubtful if a parallel decision has been rendered in any State.

Hoosier Troops Recalled.

Indianapolis special: A committee of citizens from Shelburn waited upon the Governor with a request for the withdrawal of the troops. They brought pledges from the striking miners that there would be no further lawlessness. Governor Mathews replied that he had no desire to continue the troops at that point, and if the civil authorities would advise him to that effect the companies would be called home. Telegrams were forwarded to Judge Briggs of Sullivan, and orders were issued recalling the troops from Cannelburg. The Governor is confident that the war is over.

A Big Blaze.

Fire raged in the lumber district of Dubuque, Iowa, for five hours, destroying 25,000,000 feet of lumber and entailing a loss of $500,000. At one time the fire threatened the entire manufacturing district of the city and help was asked from Galena, Freeport, Clinton and several other neighboring towns. The fire started from sparks from a Chicago Great Western locomotive in the yards of the Lesure Lumber Company. A strong west wind caused the flames to spread rapidly and the whole district from Sixth to Eleventh streets was burned over.

Probably Murdered.

Perry Higman, who resides near the track of the Monon Railway, three miles north of Lafayette, Ind., discovered the body of a man lying beside the tracks of the road. The body proved to be that of Captain E. C. Beaman, for many years a passenger conductor on the Monon road, his run being from Lafayette to Chicago. The coroner thinks it is a clear case of murder. Beaman is known to have had a fine gold watch, a handsome gold stud and ring, all of which are missing.

Will Never Be Known.

Denver special: The number of Coxeyites who lost their lives in trying to navigate the Platte River will never be known. Coroner Martin says five bodies have been recovered. The only ones identified are Charles Duplessis of Denver, and John P. McQuoin of Utah. The coroner believes that at least sixteen were drowned.

Ohio Rebublicans.

The Republicans of Ohio met in State convention at Columbus, and nominated the following ticket: Secretary af State, C. M. Taylor of Champaign; Supreme Judge, John A. Shauck of Dayton; Member Board of of Public Works, Charles G. Groce of Pickway; Commissioner of Common Schools, O. J. Gruson of Guernsey.

Killed His Brother-in-Law.

A cowardly assassination occurred in Shelby County, Indiana. While on the road to Shelbyville, in company with his 10-year-old sister, John Dantsigen was fired upon by his brother-in-law, Alfred Jackson, from ambush. Jackson mounted a horse and escaped after the shooting.

Crushed by a Bowlder.

At Yankton, S. D., Henry Schorseman, aged 17, dug a pit into which he was going to roll a three-ton bowlder. Before he could climb out of the pit his father accidentally started the bowlder. It fell on the boy and killed him. The father is now a raving maniac.

The Bear Safe.

Secretary Carlisle has received a telegram from Captain Hooper, commanding the Revenue Cutter Rush, now at San Francisco, stating that there was no truth in the report that the Bear had been wrecked at the entrance to Sitka harbor.

Thinks It a Mistake.

No information has yet been received at the Navy or Treasury Departments in regard to the reported loss of the revenue steamer, Bear, and the impression prevails that a mistake has been made in the identity of the vessel lost.

Rich Gold Find.

The richest gold strike that has been made for many years, is that of Harry Burk in Dutch Tom Gulch, Wyoming. Some of the dirt was as high as $27 to the pan. There is great excitement over the find.

Ten Thousand Stolen.

The private banking house of I. J. Gould & Bro., at Uxbridge, Ontario, was entered by burglars and cash and securities to the value of $10,000 stolen. No description of the thieves can be given.

Shot by a Mob.

Isaac Kemp, a negro, who murdered Deputy Sheriff Ned Carver, in Westoyer, Md., was taken from the jail by a mob of about 400 men and shot to death.

Trouble Averted.

Chicago special: The trouble among the engineers and firemen on the Louisville, Albany, and Chicago Railroad over the wage schedule has been adjusted.

Accused of a Murder.

Grant Folkerth and William Antonadis, are in the County jail at Greenville, Ohio, charged with the murder of Mrs. Henry Wright, of near Jaysville.

Senator McPherson Quite Ill.

Senator McPherson of New Jersey, is quite ill. His ailment is said to be some affection of the stomach or the nerves.

TRYING TO STARVE EACH OTHER OUT.

Why do not these two citizens display less stubbornness and more common sense?—Chicago Record.

CAUSE OF THE STRIKE

COAL-MINERS SAY IT IS STARVATION WAGES.

The Desire of the United Mine-Workers of America to Enforce General Instead of Local or District Settlements Precipitated the Trouble.

A Momentous Contest.

The great bituminous coal strike has reached the eighth week of its existence. It is the most momentous contest ever fought in this country between the forces of labor and capital. Fully 175,000 miners are affected, and these are scattered over the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Arkansas, and Indian Territory and New Mexico. The strike has now reached the stage where vast business interests are crippled. The service of many railroads is paralyzed, the wheels of many mills are motionless; ships tug idly at their anchors, unable for want of coal to continue their voyages, and in some cities the supply of water and electric light is shut off. In Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Alabama and Pennsylvania bloodshed has been rife and violence still impends: the militia of five States are in service, and in others are held in readiness to suppress riot and protect life; fatalities, unfortunately, have been numerous, especially in the coke regions of Pennsylvania, and only a pretext is awaited in other States to precipitate more violence and bloodshed.

Among the miners and those dependent on them there is much suffering, thousands being on the verge of starvation. Especially is this so in Alabama where the workers were in no fit condition to strike and where soup houses at the present time are a necessity.

Miserable Condition of the Miners.

The cause of the strike which has resulted in such widespread stagnation of business is twofold. The first, of course, is the low wages paid in the bituminous coal fields. No other class of workers than the bituminous coal miners have been so harshly treated, so cruelly imposed upon, so wronged, so miserable. As a rule the cost of mining bituminous coal is from 61 to 66 cents a ton, of which the miner received from 40 to 45 cents. Out of this miserable sum he must pay a helper and he is "docked" for slate and dust, the latter being deducted from the weight. His loss of wage on the latter account depends on the honesty of his employer, or rather of his employer's superintendent. At the ordinary mine great injustice and wrong are complained of on this account. The miner also usually rents his cottage, or hut, from the mine-owner, usually a corporation, and the rent is often exorbitant. The company also sharpens his tools for him at a generous price and sells him his food, clothes and blasting powder, charging on the average 25 per cent. more than the prices charged at the neighborhood stores kept by private persons. In this way the company frequently receives back or holds back on the store and rent accounts of its men nearly all the wages that have been earned during the month.

Starvation Wages.

The average daily earning of a miner is less than 80 cents, and to add to his burdens and the hardships of his lot his employment is irregular. Scant as the miners' wage has been, serious reductions have been made since the end of last summer. First there was a cut of 5 cents a ton, and then in some mines of 10 cents. What this means may be judged from the fact that in the Pocahontas region of West Virginia the men were receiving only 37 cents a ton in 1890. Assuming that the average pay was 45 cents a ton, the last cut brought it down to 35 cents. This means earnings of about 70 cents a day, which, with irregular employment, "dockage," and the incrdinate prices charged by the company stores brought the miners' wages to the starvation point.

While this cut in wages was in effect in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, central and southern Illinois and parts of Kentucky and Tennessee reductions in other fields were threatened so as to make wages correspond.

Another Cause of the Strike.

The second cause of the strike was the desire of the United Mine Workers of America to enfore general instead of local or district settlements. A general settlement would mean protection to the miners, to the operators and the public during the time covered by the settlement. Local or district settlements were a source of considerable annoyance and less to both operators and miners, for, while some operators and miners were bound by agreement, others were not so bound, and thus a guerrilla warfare was waged on the trade. This is well illustrated in the operations of the last few years. In 1886, under the old arrangement, Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, part of West Virginia and Northern Illinois were recognized as a competition district, and this field was covered by a settlement at the time. The next year the Northern Illinois operators withdrew from the interstate convention, assigning as a reason for their action their inability to pay the price agreed upon by the operators and miners jointly in the interstate conference, because of the low prices prevailing in Central and Southern Illinois, which were not a part of the convention and were not bound in its agreements. In 1889 the Indiana operators withdrew from the interstate movement, assigning as a reason their inability to maintain prices because of the low prices prevailing in Illinois. That practically ended the interstate arrangement. In 1890 and 1891 Ohio and Pennsylvania were together, but in 1892 they separated.

The present aim of the miners is, thus, to enforce an increase of wages and to effect a general agreement among all the operators who compete in the same markets. The object is one that necessarily commends itself and one, too, which the bulk of the operators regard as just and desirable. But there are operators who refuse to bind themselves and these have been the cause of the failure of the convention held in Cleveland between the miners and the well-disposed operators.

The present condition of affairs in some of the mining regions is critical in the extreme. Armed deputies and armed miners are confronting one another, and with the memories of past scenes of bloodshed between them, but little is wanting to precipitate other battles, more bloody and fatal than any which have preceded them. Suffering and want have made the miners desperate, and unless the difficulty is settled within a short time both sides will perhaps have grave reasons for regret. The summary of the press dispatches which we have given from week to week, furnish a fairly complete view of the situation.

MOBS IN CONTROL.

Thousands of Men Break Into the McKeesport, Pa., Tube Works Plant.

Never has McKeesport, Pa., witnessed such scenes of defiance of law and the inability of the authorities to cope with the law-breakers to the extent of repressing lawlessness as were enacted Tuesday and Tuesday night. At midnight the strikers were practically in command of the situation. A dispatch says: The trouble grows out of the strike at the National Tube Works and the strikers have since nightfall outwitted the police, broken into the millyards, and are making systematic tours of the works and their surroundings, of which they now have full control. The plant resumed in two departments Tuesday and about twenty-five men went to work. The news quickly spread and by noon a mob of nearly 10,000 had assembled at the gates awaiting the appearance of the workmen. Most of the men remained inside, but a few attempted to go to their homes and were caught by the mob and terribly beaten. They were finally rescued, however, by the police and taken back into the inclosure. The mob then dispersed in part, but toward evening reassembled, and by 6 o'clock probably 5,000 men were massed in front of the entrance on Fourth avenue and it was said fully three-fourths of the number were foreigners. They were disappointed. At 6 o'clock the day turn did not come out and the night turn did not go in. There was a great load of provisions taken into the mill by the company. The mob surged around the entrance until 7 o'clock in the evening, when a rush was made and they broke into the yards. The men inside were panic-stricken, and it was every man for himself. Hundreds of the mob were equipped with clubs or weapons of some description, and they began a wild chase and pursuit of the workmen inside. Several workers took to the river and made their escape to Mifflin township, pursued by crowds of strikers, and finally were chased off into the darkness toward Duquesne. The strikers were in complete possession of the place. They ranged over the grounds, and finally routed ten hidden workmen. The poor fellows made a dash for freedom, but were cut off and surrounded. With no compunction the mob set upon these men in swarms and beat them shockingly. In the crush to get at the prostrate men one fellow was badly stabbed. It was the Homestead fight over again, with variations.

UNDER THE MUZZLES OF RIFLES.

Miners at Clark's Station Stop a Train While the Soldiers Look On.

Washington, Ind.—At dusk this evening freight No. 99, consisting of cars loaded with coal, was held up at Clark's Station under the very muzzles of the rifles of two companies of militia and a Gatling gun, and the miners refused to allow the train to proceed. The troops could do nothing, because no official was present to give them authority. The miners knew this and were very obstinate. Deputy Sheriff Ray Hill was dispatched to the scene.

Terre Haute, Ind.—The strikers at Shelburn have burned five cars of coal captured from the Evansville and Terre Haute Railroad freight train and also burned the cars. The militia came up to the burning cars on their march to Alum Cave. The troops completely surrounded the mining town of Alum Cave this afternoon, but found it practically deserted. Many arrests of leaders were made. A detachment of the troops is guarding the bridges to-night, as there are fears that they may be fired by the strikers.

FIRE ON A TRAIN.

Strikers Make Demonstration in Carterville—Troops Called.

Springfield, Ill.—The situation in Williamson County with rioting coal miners was such that Gov. Altgeld wired Col. Kelly M. Smith, commander of the Fourth Infantry at Greenup, to at once send companies C of Carbondale, D of Belleville, and M of Marion to Carterville and report for duty to Sheriff Dowell. Ordnance and supplies from here were sent by special train for Carterville. The order for placing troops was done in response to telegrams from Sheriff Dowell, who wired that regular trains were being fired into; that great danger was imminent, and that nothing but the State troops would stop bloodshed.

ELKIN FARMER, 1149 Park avenue, New York City, retired from business, has dropped $14,000 to two clever swindlers, "Dudley & Spaulding," on mining stock bunco scheme. The police of New York and Chicago are at work on the case.

THE Dubuque & Wisconsin Bridge Company was organized at Dubuque, Iowa. The object is to construct a high bridge from Eagle Point to the Wisconsin shore.

MILITIA STOPS RIOTS.

THREATENED TROUBLE AT PANA, ILL., AVERTED BY SOLDIERS.

The Presence of Nearly 700 State Troops Awes the Strikers Into Quieter Ways—Golden Jubilee of the Y. M. C. A. Closes in London.

Srikers Calming Down.

The presence at Pana, Ill., of the First Regiment from Chicago has undoubtedly accomplished good. There has been no attempt on the part of the invading strikers to attack the few men working in the neighboring mines and Sheriff H. W. Johnson is firmly convinced that the splendid showing of military order and the grim appearance of the rifles, cartridge belts and Gatling gun has had its effect and the gathering mobs of Springfield miners lounging about on Pope's farm and that vicinity will soon disperse. There are over 687 men in camp.

The authorities have abandoned the idea that the invading strikers will attack either Camp Orendorff or the outer lines, says a Pana dispatch. The mobs, however, are growing larger, and a lounger who strolled into the Big Four depot from Pope's farm says the men are determined to compel any miners who begin work to stop immediately. The ringleaders of the mobs who affect indifference over the well-established military post within easy call say they will close the Pana mines if they have to stay six months. That they are largely braggarts was shown by their non-interference with a large party of miners who re-enforced the small number at work in the Penwell mine. Col. Hugh E. Fayle, Assistant Adjutant General, made a tour of the mines in the immediate vicinity of the city and reported that seventy men out of a possible eight hundred are at work. A conference of the mine operators held in a hotel near the Illinois Central depot decided that an attempt should be made to resume operations in all the mines. Sheriff Johnson thinks that if the sheriff of Peoria County can quell any uprising in his district with a force of deputies armed by the thirty stands of small arms that General Orendorff sent from Springfield, his men can certainly take care of the mobs in Pana.

STRIKERS SHOT DEAD.

Mob of Coke-Workers at Lemont, Pa., Fight with Deputies.

The bloody and riotous scenes, of a few weeks ago are being repeated throughout the coke region, and terror reigns on every hand. A fierce battle occurred Sunday forenoon between deputies and strikers at the Lemont mines of the McClure Coke Company, located three miles north of Uniontown, Pa., in which one man was shot dead and three others fatally injured, two of whom have died since and another will die within the next twenty-four hours. All are Slavs and strikers from the Lemont plant, where the conflict occurred.

The battle was one of the fiercest in the history of the strike, about fifty volleys being fired. The strikers had assembled, nearly 300 in number, and had in their possession four workmen from the Valley plant of the H. C. Fricke Coke Company, whom they had captured on Saturday afternoon, and were holding prisoners at the company houses. A posse of deputy sheriffs under Matt Allen attempted to rescue the workmen and were fired on by the strikers, who were well armed with revolvers, clubs, and stones. This precipitated the battle, which lasted fifteen minutes. Volley after volley was fired at a range of only seventy-five feet, and the shots were fired to kill. The deputies were all armed with Winchesters and revolvers, while the strikers were equipped with nearly fifty revolvers. In addition to those killed and wounded by bullets from the Winchesters the clothes of the deputies were shot full of holes and several of them were badly injured with stones and clubs.

COL. RICHARD W. THOMPSON.

Indiana Recently Celebrated His Birthday.

The citizens of Terre Haute, Ind., recently celebrated the 85th birthday of one of the most distinguished of their number, Hon. Richard W. Thompson. Hon. R. W. Thompson has played quite a part in the history of the country and has known all the public men in the land for years. The only two Presidents he has not seen are Washington and John Adams, but from Monroe down he has personally known them all. He was a friend of Lafayette and met him many times.

R. W. THOMPSON.

Col. Thompson began his political career in 1840, when he was elected to Congress. He served that term and again in 1846, at which time Abraham Lincoln was in that body. Though not opposed to slavery as an institution, after Fort Sumter was fired on Col. Thompson devoted all his energies in putting down disaffection in the South and used his eloquence most successfully to urge Northern men to enlist. He is known as Col. Thompson from having held that rank on the staff of Gov. Noble, of Indiana. When Rutherford B. Hayes became President Col. Thompson was made Secretary of the Navy. He finally resigned that office to accept the Presidency of the American branch of the Panama Canal Company, which he held for six years. Col. Thompson occupies his time in writing and studying and, though retired from active life, his influence is still strong and is exercised over a wide sphere.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

The Senate and House.

A resolution providing for the payment of the expenses of the bribery and other investigating committees out of the contingent fund was adopted by the Senate Monday. At 10:30 the tariff bill was taken up, the sugar schedule then pending. The galleries of the House were unusually well filled, and on the floor was a goodly array of occupied desks during the early part of the day. As the afternoon wore on the attendance thinned out, and when the adjournment came there were not a half-hundred members on the floor. Two Senate bridge bills were passed, one to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company, and the other extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Calumet River. The Brawley State bank tax bill was discussed by Representatives Dalzell and Rayner for the opposition and by Representatives Cobb and Oates in favor of it, and then the House agreed to a Senate joint resolution appropriating $10,000 to defray the expenses of the sugar investigating committee.

Compromise amendments to the sugar schedule in the tariff bill were all adopted in the Senate Tuesday, insuring its passage at an early date. While in executive session the Senate, for the second time within three days, confirmed the nomination of Jerry Donahue to be postmaster at Decatur, Ill. He was first confirmed on the 2d inst., but at the instance of Senator Cullom the matter was reopened, and, after some discussion of the merits of the case between Senators Cullom and Palmer, the Senate decided to stand by its former action and reconfirmed Mr. Donohue. In the House a resolution was adopted to vote on the Brawley bill after the call of the committees. Mr. Cox offered his amendment providing for the total unconditional repeal of the tax on State banks. Mr. Bryan said he would propose a bill which would provide a larger circulation of paper money under the exclusive control of the Federal Government.

Before entering upon the discussion of the tariff Wednesday the Senate passed seven bills, one of them being a House bill and the others Senate bills. Mr. Blackburn reported favorably a resolution from the committee on rules for the appointment of a special committee of five Senators on the existing public distress, to whom should be referred the petitions of Morrison I. Swift and others bearing upon this subject. It was adopted without division. The Cox amendment for the total repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on State banks was defeated in the House by 162 to 176. A viva voce vote on the Brawley bill was then taken and the bill defeated. Mr. Turner, of Georgia, addressed the House in favor of repeal, and brief speeches in opposition to the bill were made by Representative Meikeljohn of Nebraska, Bingham of Pennsylvania, Robinson of Pennsylvania, Cockran of New York, Hicks of Pennsylvania, and Quigg of New York. The House went into committee of the whole to consider the Indian appropriation bill, and a filibuster was carried as a result of Mr. Holman's request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Hay, of New York, objecting. A motion to adjourn was adopted, 104 to 98, and at 3:23 the House adjourned.

The action of the Attorney General in claiming $15,000,000 from the estate of the late Leland Stanford occupied the attention of the Senate until the tariff bill was taken up, on Thursday. Mr. Hopkins' bill for a new public building at Elgin, Ill., was reported to the House. The original bill carried an appropriation of $100,000, but the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds cut down the amount to $75,000. With this amendment the measure was favorably reported and was placed upon the calendar. The House Committee on Railways and Canals agreed to report the compromise bill drawn by Representative Ryan, of New York, for the survey of a ship canal route from the Ohio River to Lake Erie. The bill places the matter in the hands of a board of engineers to be appointed by the Secretary of War, who are to select the most practicable route and for which work $20,000 is to be appropriated.

The Senate did nothing of importance Friday. The tariff and the Stanford claim were the only matters discussed. The day's proceedings in the House were enlivened by Mr. Walker's complaint of the poor ventilation of the House and the incapacity of the architect of the Capitol, and by Mr. Weadock's reply to the attack of Mr. Linton on the Catholic church. The business transacted in the morning hour was the passage of a bill for the registry or enrollment of the bark Skudenaes and of a bill to define the present units of electrical measurements. The conference report on the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railway bridge bill was adopted, and a resolution authorizing the Maryland State courts to occupy for five years the old United States courthouse in Baltimore was agreed to. At 4:50 o'clock the House took a recess until 8. The evening session was devoted to pension bill.

In the Senate Saturday bills were passed as follows: To extend the time limit for the construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, and to fix the salaries of railway postal clerks. It provides that they shall be divided into seven classes. The salaries for each class shall not exceed the following amounts annually: First class, $800; second class, $1,000; third class, $1,200; fourth class, $1,300; fifth class, $1,500; sixth class, $1,600; seventh class, $1,800. The Postmaster General is authorized to fix salaries in the different classes according to the hours of work. Senator Walsh, of Georgia, introduced a bill for the permanent location for the exposition to be established for the display of the products and resources of the several States and Territories, and creating a commission to consist of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, to report a plan for the proposed exposition to Congress. His idea is that the exposition should be permanent and free to the public. The House held a short session and practically no business was transacted.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

From that time Constance Sinclair put aside all outward token of her grief. She wrote to the gayest and most pleasure-loving of her acquaintances—young married women, whose chief delight was to dress more expensively than their dearest friends, and to be seen at three parties on the same evening, and a few who were still spinsters, from no fault or foolishness of their own, since they had neglected neither plans nor art in the endeavor to secure an eligible partner for the dance of life. To these Constance wrote her letters of invitation, and the first sentence in each letter was sufficient to insure acceptance.

"Dearest Ida—My husband is filling the house with men for the hunting season. Do come, and save me from being bored to death by their sporting talk. Be sure to bring your hunting habit. Gilbert can give you a good mount," etc., etc.

Whereupon, dearest Ida, twisting about the little note, meditatively remarked to her last bosom friend and confidante, "Odd that they should ask people so soon after the death of Mrs. Sinclair's baby—drowned, too—it was in all the papers. Davenant is a sweet house to stay at, quite liberty hall. Yet, I think I shall go, and if there are plenty of people I can finish out my ball dresses in the evenings."

Before another Sunday came Davenant was full of people, the attics noisy with strange ladies-maids, the stables and harness rooms full of life and bustle, not an empty stall or an unoccupied loose box in the long range of buildings, the billiard-room and smoking-room resonant with masculine laughter, unknown dogs pervading the outbuildings and chained up in every available corner.

Constance Sinclair had put away her somber robes of crape and cashmere, and met her friends with welcoming smiles, radiant in black silk and lace, her graceful figure set off by the latest Parisian fashion, which, being the newest, was, of course, the best.

"I thought she would have been in deeper mourning," said one of Mrs. Sinclair's dearest friends to another during a whispered chat in a dusky corner at afternoon tea. "The men were so noisy with their haw-haw talk, one could say what one liked," remarked Mrs. Millamount afterward to Lady Loveall.

"Looks rather heartless, doesn't it?—an only child, too. She might at least wear paramatta instead of that black silk—not even mourning silk. I suppose that black net trimmed with jet she wore last night was from Worth."

"My dear, you couldn't have looked at it properly. Worth wouldn't have made her such a thing if she had gone down on her knees to him. The sleeve was positively antediluvian. Nice house, isn't it? Everything in good style. What matches all these Clanyardes have made."

"Is it true that she was engaged to Sir Cyprian Davenant?"

"They say so. How sorry she must be! He has just come into quite a heap of money. Some old man down in the Lincolnshire fens left it to him—quite a character, I believe. Never spent anything except on black-letter books, and those have been sold for a fortune at Sotheby's. Ah, Mr. Wyatt, how d'ye do?" as the solicitor, newly arrived that afternoon, threaded his way toward the quiet corner; "do come and sit here. Is it true that Sir Cyprian Davenant has come into a fortune?"

"Nothing can be more true, unless it is that Mrs. Millamount looks younger and lovelier every season."

"You horrid flatterer. You are worse than a French milliner. And is it true that Mrs. Sinclair and Sir Cyprian were engaged? But no, it would hardly be fair to ask you about that. You are a friend of the family."

"As a friend of the family, I am bound to inform you that rumor is false on that point. There was no engagement."

"Really, now?"

"But Sir Cyprian was madly in love with Miss Clanyarde."

"And she——"

"I was not in the lady's confidence; but I believe that it was only my friend's poverty which prevented their marriage."

"How horridly mercenary!" cried Mrs. Millamount, who came of an ancient Irish family, proud as Lucifer and poor as Lazarus, and had been sacrificed in the blossom of her days, like Iphigenia, to raise the wind—not to Diana, but to a rich stock-broker. Perhaps as that was a long time ago she may have forgotten how much more Plutus had to do with her marriage than Cupid.

CHAPTER XII.

THE SHACKLES OF AN OLD LOVE STRAITENED HIM.

Cyprian Davenant had inherited a fortune. Common rumor had not greatly exaggerated the amount of his wealth, though there was the usual disposition to expatiate upon the truth. Needy men looked at him with envy as he went in and out of his club, or sat in a quiet corner reading the last "Quarterly" or "Edinburgh," and almost wondered that he was so well able to contain his spirits, and was not tempted to perform a savage dance of Choctaw character, or to give expression to his rapture in a war-whoop.

"Hang it all, you know," remarked an impecunious younger son, "it aggravates a fellow to see Davenant take things so quietly. He doesn't even look cheerful. He does not invite the confidence of his necessitous friends. Such a knight of the rueful countenance would hardly stand a pony. And he won't play whist, or touch a billiard-cue—quite an unapproachable beast."

A man cannot be lucky in all things. Sir Cyprian had set his life upon a cast, and the fortune of the game had been against him. The inheritance of this unexpected wealth seemed to him almost a useless and trivial stroke of fate. What could it avail him now? It could not give him Constance Clanyarde, or even restore the good old house in which his father and mother had lived and died. Time had set a gulf between him and happiness, and the fortune that came too late seemed rather the stroke of some mocking and ironical Fate than the gift of a benevolent destiny. He came back from Africa like a man who lives a charmed life, escaping all manner of perils, from the grip of marsh fever to the jaws of crocodiles; while men who had valued existence a great deal more than he had done had succumbed and left their bones to bleach upon the sands of the Gold Coast or to rot in a stagnant swamp. Cyprian Davenant had returned to find the girl he loved the wife of the man he most disliked. He heard of her marriage more in sorrow than in anger. He had not expected to find her free. His knowledge of Lord Clanyarde's character had assured him that his lordship's beautiful daughter would be made to marry well. No fair Circassian, reared by admiring and expectant relatives in the seclusion of her Caucasian home, fattened upon milk and almonds to the standard of Oriental beauty, and in due course to be carried to the slave-market, had ever been brought up with a more specific intention than that which had ruled Lord Clanyarde in the education of his daughters. They had all done well. He spent very little of his time at Marchbrooke nowadays, his wife having died shortly after Constance's marriage, but dawdled away his life agreeably at his daughters' winter houses out of the season, and felt that his mission had been accomplished. No father had ever done more for his children, and they had cost him very little. What a comfort to have been blessed with lovely marriageable daughters instead of lubberly sons, squatting on a father's shoulders like the old man of the mountain, thought Lord Clanyarde, when he had leisure to reflect upon his lot.

After that one visit in Park Lane, Sir Cyprian Davenant had studiously avoided Mrs. Sinclair. He had very little inclination for society, and although his friends were ready to make a fashionable lion of him upon the strength of his African explorations, he had strength of mind enough to refuse all manner of flattering invitations, and innumerable introductions to people who were dying to know him.

He took a set of chambers in one of the streets between the Strand and the river, surrounded himself with the books he loved, and set about writing the history of his travels. He had no desire to achieve fame by book-making, but a man must do something with his life. Sir Cyprian felt himself too old or too unambitious to enter one of the learned professions, and he felt himself without motive for sustained industry. He had an income that sufficed for all his desires. He would write his book, tell the world the wonders he had seen, and then go back to Africa and see more wonders, and perhaps leave his bones along the road, as some of his fellow-travelers had done.

He heard of Constance Sinclair—heard of her as one of the lights in Fashion's sidereal system—holding her own against all competitors. He saw her once or twice, between five and six on a June afternoon, when the carriages were creeping along the Lady's Mile, and the high-mettled horses champing their bits and tugging at their bearing-reins in sheer desperation at being compelled to this snail's pace. He saw her looking her loveliest, and concluded that she was happy. She had all things that were reckoned good in her world. Why should he suppose there was anything wanting to her content?

The lawyer's letter, which had told him of old Colonel Gryffin's death, and the will which bequeathed to him the bulk of the old man's fortune, found Sir Cyprian in his quiet chambers near the river, smoking the cigar of peace over the last treatise on metaphysics by a German philosopher. Lady Davenant had been a Miss Gryffin, and the favorite niece of this ancient Anglo-Indian, Colonel Gryffin, who had lived and died a bachelor. Sir Cyprian had a faint recollection of seeing a testy old gentleman with a yellow complexion at Davenant in his nursery days, and having been told to call the old gentleman "uncle," whereupon he had revolted openly, and had declined to confer that honor upon such a wizened and tawny-complexioned anatomy as the little old gentleman in question.

"My uncles are big," he said. "You're too little for an uncle."

Soon afterward the queer old figure had melted out of the home picture. Colonel Gryffin had gone back to the Lincolnshire fens and his ancient missals and incunabula, and had lived so remote an existence that the chief feeling caused by his death was astonishment at the discovery that he had been so long alive.

Messrs. Dott & Gownnn, a respectable firm of family solicitors in Lincoln's Inn, begged to inform Sir Cyprian Davenant that his great uncle, on the maternal side, Colonel Gryffin, of Hobart Hall, near Hammerfield, Lincolnshire, had appointed him residuary legatee and sole executor to his will. Sir Cyprian was quite unmoved by the announcement. Residuary legatee might mean a great deal, or it might mean very little. He had a misty recollection of being told that Colonel Gryffin was rich, and was supposed to squander untold sums on Gutenberg bibles and other amiable eccentricities of a bookish man. He had never been taught to expect any inheritance from this ancient bachelor, and he supposed him for many years laid at rest under the daisies of his parish church-yard.

The residuary legateeship turned out to be a very handsome fortune. The missals and bibles and antique Books of Hours, the Decameron, and the fine old Shakspeare were put up at auction—by desire of the testator—and were sold for twice and three times the sums the old Colonel had paid for them. In a word, Sir Cyprian Davenant, who had esteemed himself passing rich upon four hundred a year, stood possessed of a hundred and twenty thousand pounds.

It came too late to buy him the desire of his heart, and, not being able to win for him this one blessing, it seemed almost useless.

James Wyatt was one of the first to congratulate Sir Cyprian upon this change of fortune.

"A pity the old gentleman did not die before you went to Africa," he said, sympathetically. "It would have squared things for you and Miss Clanyarde."

"Miss Clanyarde made a very good marriage," answered Cyprian, too proud to bare his old wound to friendly James Wyatt. "She is happy."

Mr. Wyatt shrugged his shoulders dubiously.

"Who knows?" he said. "We see our friends' lives from the outside, and, like a show at a fair, the outside is always the best of the performance."

This happened while Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair were at Schoenesthel. Soon came the tidings of Baby Christabel's fate, briefly told in a newspaper paragraph, and Cyprian Davenant's heart bled for the woman he had once loved.

He was not a little surprised when James Wyatt called upon him one day in November, and told him he was going down to Davenant, where there was to be a houseful of company.

"Soon after the little girl's death," exclaimed Sir Cyprian.

"Yes, it is rather soon, no doubt. But they would be moped to death at Davenant without people. Sack-cloth and ashes are quite out of the fashion, you see. People don't go in for intense mourning nowadays."

"People have hearts, I suppose, even in the nineteenth century," said Sir Cyprian, somewhat bitterly. "I should have thought Mrs. Sinclair would have felt the loss of her little girl very deeply."

"We don't know what she may feel," returned Wyatt. "Gilbert likes his own way."

"You don't mean to say that he ill-uses his wife?" asked Sir Cyprian, alarmed.

"Ill-usage is a big word. We don't employ it nowadays," replied Mr. Wyatt, with an imperturbable smile. "Gilbert Sinclair is my client, and an excellent one, as you know. It would ill become me to disparage him, but I must admit that he and Mrs. Sinclair are not the happiest couple whose domestic hearth I have ever sat by. She had some secret grief even before the death of her child and made up for being very brilliant in society by being exceedingly dull at home. I don't expect to find her very lively, now that she has lost the only being she really cared for. She absolutely worshiped that child."

This conversation gave Sir Cyprian Davenant material for much sad thought. To know that Constance was unhappy seemed to bring her nearer to him. It brought back the thought of the old days when those innocent eyes had looked into his, eloquent with unconscious love; when Constance Clanyarde had given him her heart without thought of to-morrow, happy in the knowledge that she was loved, believing her lover strong to conquer fate and fortune. And he had brought the chilly light of worldly wisdom to bear on this dream of Arcady. He had been strong, self-denying, and had renounced his own happiness in the hope of securing hers. And now fate laughed him to scorn with this gift of vain riches, and he found that his worldly wisdom had been supreme folly.

"What a self-sufficient fool, what an idiot, I have been!" he said to himself, in an agony of remorse. "And now what atonement can I make to her for my folly? Can I defend her from the purse-proud snob she has been sold to? Can I save her wounded heart one pang? Can I be near her in the hour of misery, or offer one drop of comfort from a soul overflowing with tenderness and pity? No; to approach her is to do her a wrong. But I can watch at a distance, perhaps. I must use other eyes. My money may be of some use in buying her faithful service from others. God bless her! I consecrate my days to her service; distant or near, I will be her friend and her defender."

Two days later Sir Cyprian met Lord Clanyarde at the nobleman's club. It was a club which Cyprian rarely used, although he had been a member ever since his majority, and it may be that he went out out of his beaten track in the hope of encountering Constance Sinclair's father.

Lord Clanyarde was very cordial and complimentary upon his friend's altered fortune.

"You must feel sorry for having parted with Davenant," he said, "when you might so easily have kept it."

"Davenant is rather too big for a confirmed bachelor."

"True, it would have been a white elephant, I dare say. Sinclair has improved the place considerably. You ought to come down and have a look at it. I'm going to Marchbrook to shoot next week. Come and stay with me," added Lord Clanyarde, with heartiness, not at all prepared to be taken at his word.

"I shall be charmed," said Sir Cyprian, to his lordship's infinite astonishment.

People generally took his invitations for what they were worth, and declined them. But here was a man just from the center of Africa, who hardly understood the language of polite society.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

RODE ON THE FIRST ENGINE.

Which Was Ever Run in the United States.

By the death of John Torry, in Honesdale, Pa., recently, Otis Avery becomes the sole survivor of those who rode on America's first locomotive on the first day it ran, Aug. 8, 1829. Mr. Avery was born Aug. 19, 1808, in Oneida County, New York. He removed to Bethany, Pa., when he was 20 years of age. Later he removed to Chenango County, New York, and still later to New York City, where he learned the profession of dentistry. Then he removed to Honesdale. He was Associate Justice for eleven years, retiring from the bench about ten years ago.

Mr. Avery says that Horatio Allen, a civil engineer and the agent of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, who had gone to England to superintend the construction of the first locomotive, the "Stourbridge Lion," was the only man to ride on the engine upon its first run, because it was not known whether the road was strong enough to bear the weight of the locomotive. Mr. Allen ran the engine about a mile and then returned to the place of starting. Immediately after its return several of those assembled made short trips on it, but Mr. Avery says that there was little inclination among those present to risk their lives on board, especially as part of the distance traversed was over a risky-looking trestle.

The track of this first railroad was constructed with hemlock stringers keyed to the top of "bents," with a flat rail spiked to the inner edge. This was pressed by the weight of the engine completely into the wood. Anthracite coal was the fuel used. The engine had no cab and no place to sit down. He was wholly unprotected from the weather.

GOWNS AND GOWNING.

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading May Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

MAY brought no lessening in the width of sleeves, and there are no indications at present of an immediate or approaching decrease in their size. The sleeves which are at present most fashionable give to the waist an appearance of slenderness, a result produced by the highly exaggerated shoulder width. A feature which makes the sleeves seem even larger than ever before is the fact that they do not droop over the elbow, but are often stiffened to stick out from it. Height, of course, is not permissible, and the more the fullness can be made to spread out from the arm, the more fashionable they appear. To attain this result lining fabrics are used which will stiffen them sufficiently to keep them distended, but care must be taken that no appearance of blockiness results. With so much attention given to the one consideration of size, there have been few new sorts of sleeves offered. A stylish sleeve is in Queen Anne shape and a bow of six long loops being arranged in groups of three, separated by a small ribbon strap run through a fancy buckle. These loops fall over the sleeve and lend the desired shoulder slope and the equally necessary volume at the same time. This device is applicable to sleeves which are somewhat out of date.

As has been indicated, there has been little encouragement for designers of novelties in sleeve shapes, but one which has just been put forward is sketched in the initial picture. These sleeves are of the full width, though their size is somewhat concealed by their being draped at the top to attain an epaulette effect, and by their being again caught in the center a little below the epaulette. That results in a drooping sleeve, beneath which there is a tight sleeve to a little above the elbow, which is finished at the wrist with a band of embroidery. Striped mode colored cloth is combined in this toilet with black silk. The underskirt is of plain silk and panels of pleated silk are let in at both sides. The drapery is piped with black and opens to show the panels. The bodice is draped over a fitted lining, and is alike both back and front. It should be apparent that this model is only suitable for an extremely slender figure.

OF PLAID DUCK.

Last season saw a few dresses of striped duck. While women were inclined to dislike the looks of these gowns, they must have on the whole made a favorable impression, for this summer finds them plentiful, and even plaids are attempted. The writer heard two young women comparing the latter sorts, and they decided to accept a large plaid, "so that it would not look like the jumper of our ash-cart man." The dress of the second picture is made of duck in, about the largest plaid which is yet offered. Its skirt is moderately wide and quite plain. The jacket is lined with heavy white pique, both sides turning back in big revers, and beneath there is a double-breasted belt of pique finished by a narrow black belt fastening with a jet buckle. A bow of white silk mull is worn at the throat, and a jaunty sailor hat, trimmed with a bow of white ribbon at the left side, and with its edge of fancy straw, accompanies the get-up. The parasol is of white silk, with a deep ruffle falling from its edge.

The coaching parasol of last year which is a little faded may this year be freshened up by covering it all over with little lawn ruffles of figured goods showing a color to match or harmonize with the color of the parasol. From a scarlet parasol a delightful one may be made by having the ruffles of lawn figured with scarlet carnations, each little ruffle edged with several rows of narrow ribbon, one row scarlet, one row pale green like the foliage in the figure and the third row brown for the stems. Chiffon covered parasols that have been kept over from season to season may be stripped of the messy chiffon and beautified by fresh frills of wash blonde edged with ribbon or with little ribbon frills.

Of course, the duck suits are mostly tailor-made, and the unusual variety of the material is accounted for by the prevalence of the tailor-made girl. Between the severity of the tailor cut and the great elaboration of the many overskirt styles there is a vast difference, and it sometimes happens that each fashion makes so strong an appeal to a young woman that she will endeavor to combine the two. In ordinary hands this process will not result in anything at all attractive, but in this third picture is shown a costume furnished with the popular pointed apron overskirt, and at the same time fitted with a jacket bodice and a double-breasted vest. The whole is so nearly half way between the two widely different modes that it is difficult to say of which it partakes the most. If, however, the carriage of the maid herself is taken into consideration, there can be no denying that there is in the squared shoulders and in the way that the head is held a strong likeness to the genuine tailor girl. The costume is made of a moss-green suiting, combined with mode-colored cloth and trimmed with green passementerie. The gored skirt is of the green suiting and the overskirt is trimmed with the passementerie. The vest is of the mode cloth, as are the sleeves. Two huge buttons ornament each front of the jacket, and the lace jabot is put at the throat.

As an offset to so much that is entirely plain, there is often a high degree of fancifulness shown when elaboration is attempted. Isn't the thought of a gown covered with quilled ribbon from foot to waist enough to thrill a woman's heart? Some of the imported street dresses are just that, and, for fear that some economic-minded dame may accomplish such a gown when ribbon is cheap, the gown must not be made of ribbon, but of a material that has all these little quilled frills in the weave. This is a good gown to select for description to the man of family. He will be glad the describer is such a sensible little thing and never spends her money so foolishly. Then possibly he can be brought to consent to a rainbow chiffon garden cloak. This consists of a long round cloak that reaches in Red Riding Hood shape well below the waist, and is made of delicate China silk. A series of frills cover it all over, and they are all of different shades of chiffon. Besides this there are a lot of little bows and ends of different colors, a bit of hood that is a lovely crumple of color and frills, and that, for all it seems so small, comes down about the face when the hood is drawn. This hood gives a shade for every pet point of your lips, cheeks, hair, and eyes, and makes your face look like the queen rose of a bouquet. If ever a rain should come up—but if you are going to indulge in a rainbow chiffon cloak you want to be above thinking of rain.

NO TRACE OF TAILOR HERE.

Of fanciful device is the young woman's toilet next presented. Made of figured suiting, its draped skirt is looped up by a large bow, from over a plain cloth underskirt. The bodice is made of silk and the lining hooks in the middle, while the odd plastron laps over and is apparently fastened to the small lace yoke by two fancy buttons. Over the bodice is worn a tiny jacket of dark silk which has large revers and turned down collar. The sleeves are made of the same material as the bodice and have lace epaulettes. They are trimmed with full watered ribbon bows at the elbows.

THEATER SEATS NEED BE WIDE.

The time was not long ago when moire was not a stuff that had any charms for any but the stately and queenly matron of at least middle age. Then it was a fabric of so rich a pattern and so great brilliance as to seemingly unfit it for youth. Now it has become a thing of the daintiest shades, and in the many new varieties put forth since its use became so general there are found the most delicate designs. Beauteous blossoms are scattered over its changeable ground, shot effects abound, it is dotted with satin, and flowered and striped sorts are without end. Its coloring are even more varied, and it has been so transformed that it is now as suitable for the young as the old. Silk and woolen fabrics are very stylishly combined and gowns so made are more acceptable than those solely of silk, unless the silk be of the very best. A particularly rich combination is a dress of crocodile crepon made up with watered silk sleeves, waistcoat and revers and supplied with a moire ribbon sash. In the theater toilet of the last illustration the black watered silk is used with rose pink cloth. Besides the sleeves there is a deep yoke of the silk to which the sitting is gathered with a small head. Over the shoulders are straps of gold and pink embroidery and a pointed belt finishes the bottom. The skirt is gored, the side gores being laid over the front breadth to imitate a panel, and is untrimmed.

Small Pox at Ashley.

Last Saturday, Dr. Spooner, who is now the Wabash railway surgeon at Ashley, came down and brought word that George Murray, a conductor on the new Wabash line, and whose home is at Ashley, was down with small pox. Sunday, Dr. Hines went to Ashley to look into the case. All are decided in pronouncing it a genuine case of small pox. W. H. May, principal of the Ashley Schools, came down to Auburn on Monday and reported the same thing. He had been obliged to close the schools there nearly a month before the time, and they will not have the graduating exercises there June 21, as had been reported. But there is for the case has been isolated and is guarded so no one can approach if he wanted to. A small pox flag is also hung out and the town has given everything over into the hands of the board of health. So there is no possibility of the disease spreading, unless it may be from some case that has been exposed before Mr. Murray's case was brought to notice. People may rest easy on the matter. Our laws are very strict, and it is well known that it is a rare thing for any such disease to spread after its existence has been clearly found out. About ten years ago Auburn had a case that broke out almost in the business part of town on Main street where Dr. Swarts' brick office and house now stand. It was Hallam's boarding house. But the boarders and all were shut up and made to stay in doors, and they were not let out till the danger was over. The sick one was taken to a temporary pest house outside of town, and no one else got the disease. So, don't feel alarmed.

Two Philadelphia ladies recently rode on bicycles from Philadelphia to Boston, a distance of 410 miles.

REPUBLICAN judicial convention at Rushville, Ind., had several meetings and balloted 813 times without making a choice. But on convening again last week, they took another ballot and nominated for judge, Judge Miller, of Greensburg.

CONGRESS is getting along as well as could be expected, with all the republican members making all the dilatory motions they can think of and for no other purpose than to cause delay. They admit that the tariff bill will pass as soon as a vote is had.

REPUBLICAN papers in this county, and several in surrounding counties, have adopted the plan so long pursued by the COURIER of publishing a full list of the names of the delegates to the county conventions. It is an advantage to any community to have a live newspaper to set the pace for the slower ones.

NORTH FAIRFIELD in Huron county, Ohio, has the last of the Wyandottes, a once powerful as well as energetic and unusually intelligent tribe of Indians. His name is James Williams, and he draws a pension on account of the death of his son in the rebellion. He is believed to be the only person who can speak the Wyandotte language, and is 90 years old.

THE Island Park Assembly begins at Rome City July 25 and closes August 8. Among the noted singers who will assist, is Miss Maude Thorley, well known to a number of Auburn people. She is a friend of Mrs. David Hodge formerly Miss Mabel Hartman, the two having become acquainted at the school of oratory and music that Miss. Hartman attended in Ohio.

PRESIDENT Cleveland attended Decoration Day services this year, spending the whole day with them. We believe every republican paper in the land is very, very anxious, to publish this fact, only that innate modesty keeps them mute. It was different, however, a few few years ago, when he went fishing on that day. They have had him off on a fishing trip May 30 every year since.

The Coal Trouble.

The trouble in various coal mining districts grew worse last week instead of better. In this state the people and the governor generally sympathized with the cause of the strikers, but not with the lawless acts of violence with which they carried out their plans. The governor at once took the most active measures, as was noted last week, and it was at first hoped that lawless acts would cease. However, as mentioned last week, the strikers at Alum Cave, found a coal train they could capture, and they did so. They later, burned it. In every way they defied the law. Tuesday troops were sent to capture the ringleaders of the mob that burned the train. They reached Alum Cave after a hard march through the woods in a rain, and found the place deserted. They got but a few of those they wanted. Wednesday a train of coal was going through Knightstown, in Clay county, not far from Brazil, when a crowd of miners along the track kept throwing stones at the cab in which were the engineer and fireman. The men dodged the stones for a time, but finally, as the engineer raised up, after dodging one stone, he was hit by another on the temple, and fell back dead. The windows of the caboose were also smashed in. Up to this time railroad employes had generally sympathized with the miners, but this needless murder of a popular employe who had run a train on the road for twenty years, set the railroad men against the miners. The next day five men were captured, who were believed to be the men who threw the stone that killed the engineer.

At other points the trouble continued. In Alabama the miners had serious trouble. At some important mines near Pekin, Ill., the men were at work and satisfied with their wages. But men from other mines were determined to make them stop, and brought a large force, many with guns, to drive them from work. A battle followed, and one man was killed and several wounded. The miners were driven from their work, and the entire plant, worth $30,000 was burned, leaving nothing of value but the mine itself. In the gold mining regions in Colorado, especially the new mines about Cripple Creek, the troubles of the past few weeks have been made worse by the fact that the governor would not do anything. The miners got arms, and fortified a hill near the mines and bid defiance to the local authorities. There was great danger of a serious fight and much bloodshed, but the authorities not being strong enough to attack the hill, the miners had everything their own way, and all work at the mines has been stopped for some time. Business came to a standstill, and many citizens fled from the town. Last Thursday there was a lively fight between the deputies called out by the sheriff, and the miners, and several were hurt on both sides.

There is a prospect now that the coal troubles will be settled, as most of the miners have agreed to a scale of prices ranging from 35 cents a ton to 60 in summer, and 50 to 70 in winter. The difference in price is for difference in miner, some having wide coal veins and some narrow or thin veins. The latest news is that some of the miners refuse to agree. Coal is scarce, many factories use wood, and railroads reduce the number of trains.

Court News.

We left off last week with the bastardy case of Mabus vs Geo. Renton. It was given to the jury Thursday forehoon, and at 2:30 they had agreed to a verdict for the plaintiff, Miss Mabus. The amount of damages will be decided by the judge. While this jury was out another was picked up to try the Greenwood case, and after being got ready for work, they went out awhile to give the regular jury a chance to come in with the Mabus verdict. After this the regular jury took a rest, and the picked up jury started in on the Greenwood case The facts in this were that Ben. Stiefel who keeps a saloon at Butler, had missed some bottles of wine, and on May 29 found one of them hid away back of the saloon. He watched, and caught Elmer Greenwood, the older of the Greenwood brothers, putting another bottle into his pocket. This is the substance of what Stiefel swore to, and he was corroborated to a great extent by his bar tender. But a brother of the Greenwoods, went on the stand and swore that both Elmer and George were at home at the hour Stiefel claimed he saw the wine stolen. Both the Greenwoods also went on the stand and denied under oath all that Stiefel had said. So the jury let the prisoners off, though many believe they are guilty. Elmer is the man who, with Dick Abrams, was before the court last winter for stealing pork. They were then acquitted also. It is claimed that much suspicion rests on these two Greenwood brothers, because they seem to get along and not do much work. The long fought Kennedy ditch case is over, though Judge Powers has taken time to think the matter over before giving in his decision. The next case was that of Aldrich, administrator of the estate of Joseph Nichols against A. J. Baxter. Aldrich claimed Baxter had been given a power of attorney to collect money due the estate, and after collecting some, had not paid all of it over. Baxter on the stand said he had collected some money, and had paid over all he should pay after keeping out his own expenses, and a reasonable fee for various cases. He had also paid some taxes for the estate. The case called out a good deal of interest. Penfield and J. E. Rose were attorneys for the plaintiff, and J. W. Baxter and Judge McClellan for the defense. The jury brought in a special verdict, the substance of which is, that Baxter had about 1892, been given notes and accounts to collect that said defendant had collected $200, and that his fees for same should be $60, leaving $140 not paid over. That on this was due $14 interest since accrued, making $154, and that said defendant has not paid this over to the plantiff. From this we suppose the Judge will have to give judgment against Baxter for this amount. Baxter claims he has paid over the money but has no receipt.

Judge VanFleet of the Goshen Circuit was here yesterday and day before, trying some of the J. L. Davis mortgage cases.

Castoria is truly a marvelous thing for children. Doctors prescribe it, medical journals recommend it and more than a million mothers are using it in place of Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, so-called soothing syrups and other narcotics and stupefying remedies. Castoria is the quickest thing to regulate the stomach and bowels and give healthy sleep the world has ever seen. It is pleasant to the taste and absolutely harmless. It relieves constipation, quiets pain, cures diarrhœa and wind colic, allays feverishness, destroys worms and prevents convulsions, soothes the child and gives it refreshing and natural sleep. Castoria is the children's panacea—the mother's friend. Castoria is put up in one size bottles only. It is not sold in bulk. Don't allow anyone to sell you anything else on the plea or promise that it is "just as good" and "will answer every purpose." See that you get C-A-S-T-O-R-I-A.

The Christian Endeavor.

The annual conventions of 5th, District of C. E. societies met at Waterloo last Thursday and Friday, June 7 and 8 This was a very successful meeting not only in numbers but in interest and enthusiasm, a large number of delegates, and a great many visitors attending. The program was carried out nearly as arranged and proved very interesting. The evening sessions were so greatly attended that overflow meetings were held in the Christian and U. B. churches. The lectures of the two evenings were practical, and of great interest to every one That on Thursday evening by Rev. H. E. Riggs of Goshen was on the very practical subject "Good Citizenship," and left many good thoughts which should be well digested. That on Friday evening was given by a minister from Indianapolis. The subject was "Interdenominational Fellowship" The gentleman was a good speaker and the subject received good attention as it was in line with the C. E. movement. Auburn was well represented both in numbers and on the program. Miss Flora Hoffman led the devotional exercises on Thursday and on Friday afternoon, at the Junior C. E. Rally, Laura Rose read a paper on "What the Junior can do for the Home." Maggie Sherlock gave a recitation very nicely, and Aileen Garwood sang a song which brought out an encore when she sang very sweetly, "Sliding Down the Cellar Door." The delegates from Auburn were, Flora Hoffman, Edna Davis, Minnie McDowell, Lila Baker, Inez Rose, Gertie Willson, Will Coffinberry, Paul Davenport. Those on the program for work were, Flora Huffman, Minnie McDowell. Others attending from here were Mr. Colvin, Mrs. Barns, Laura Ober, Lydia Teeters, Tommy Husselman. The Auburn people speak most highly of the Waterloo people during their stay.

The Graveyard of American Shipping.

BY GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH.

From Home and Country (New York) for June.

* * * * *

Every ocean steamer carries a large crew, varying from a score or more to several hundred, and in the event of a disaster at sea the loss of life would be large, even though no passengers were on board. The wreck of the White Star freighter Naronic, with all her crew, carried mourning into scores of humble homes, while the Alvo of more recent date was no more merciful in its final plunge beneath the waves.

Enormous sums have to be paid as salvage money to the rescuers of ocean steamers when they are disabled at sea, and probably this is a more fruitful source of expense to the large companies than any other. On her first voyage the City of New York (as she was then called) ran ashore off Sandy Hook, and it cost the company $100,000 to get her off. In 1890 her sister ship, the City of Paris, broke her engines off the Irish coast, and was towed into port at an expense of $30,000 as salvage money. The City of Boston broke her shaft in 1882, and it cost the company $46,500 to get her into port, and the Venezuela, of the Red D line, stuck on the Brigantine shoals off New Jersey, in 1889, so that the company had to spend $40,000 to get her off. The City of Richmond was towed into Halifax Harbor, in 1882, at an expense of $35,000. The list could be largely extended, showing that the amount of salvage money paid for rendering services to disabled steamers at sea is so enormous that it almost equals the loss entailed by injuries to our wooden vessels. The loss of life is less. It is quite rare that an ocean steamer is submerged beneath the waves so that the crew and the passengers are lost, but when such an accident does transpire the destruction is appalling. It excites the interest and sympathy of two continents, and warns the world again of the danger that comes to those who sail upon the high sea.

Resolution of Thanks.

DeLong Post of Auburn G. A. R., in their meetieg of June 11, passed the following resolution, to-wit:

That is the desire of the Post to thank all those who participated in the commemoration of Memorial and Decoration Day exercises, especially the Male Quartet and tee Musicale Society of Auburn, for their beautiful vocal music rendered on both occasions.

BY ORDER OF THE POST.

In June there will be many

WEDDING BELLS.

Many wedding belles in June have placed so much confidence in this store that their entire outfits have been bought of us.

The Silks Suit Them

The Gray and Tan woolen stuffs suit them. The Fans, Gloves, Handkerchiefs, Millinery, Hosiery, Underwear, and Little Things

Are here in plenty. No need to go farther away to find what is wanted.

Young Housekeepers

Are Knowing People. They know what suits a new home. They know of

Our Lace Curtains, our Opaque Curtains, our Silkoline and Madras Cloths, our Bed Spreads, Table Cloths, Napkins, Towels, Rugs and New Carpets.

This store is known all over DeKalb County as a Truth-Telling store. This is the way our business is carried on here. If any article bought of us is not as represented, your money goes back. It goes back without hard feelings. A pleasure with this Dry Goods Store is to please people. The prices are the lowest, the goods are the best the world can produce.

MARKED REDUCTIONS THIS WEEK.

Festival at Corunna.

The ladies of the Christian church will give an ice cream and strawberry festival at Hartman's Hall, at Corunna Saturday evening of this week, June 16. No pains will be spared to make the occasion pleasant. All are invited to come.

They Fit an' Fit.

Ed. Romeiss, the telegraph operator at the Lake Shore station, had to lick a fellow Tuesday evening right on the street or stand an insult that no man cares to stand. He was talking with Charley Weaver in front of the express office, when a young man, Ed. Bartlett, who is a painter at the Zimmerman factory came along and, without a word, struck him. Romeiss at once went for him, and soon had him down and hammering him in fine shape. Those who saw how it started were willing to let him punish his assailant properly, but others who did not understand it, took Romeiss off. Bartlett was arrested by the Marshal. Then Baker took Romeiss in charge, and while holding him, the other fellow, in a cowardly way struck Romeiss again, while he could not resist. The marshal then let Romeiss go and took the other fellow to the calaboose. A bystander, Homer Powers, of Garrett, witnessing the struggle Baker had in securing Bartlett, thought it was another fight, and getting demonstrative in his desire to see fair play, was also arrested and placed in the calaboose. He was tried that evening and let off with a sensible lecture by 'Squire Walborn. Next morning Bartlett was fined $5 and costs by Justice Walborn, which was about the proper thing.

LOST:—On the road between Auburn and Waterloo, on Saturday, June 9, a silver headed cane. Finder will be liberally rewarded by leaving it at this office.

Word came here Monday that Charlie Calkin, now in Chicago, had been taken down with small pox, and is in the hospital. The news came in a telegram to his brother.

Every photo right at Clapp's.

Those fine large shade trees in front of the Kruger building have been removed, and a wide cement walk is being put down in the place of the old wooden one. It is a much needed improvement, and will help the looks of that beautiful building.

Kutzner & Myers have a first-class livery establishment at their barn on West Sixth street. They are always prepared to fit out their patrons with a good rig of any sort, and at fair rates. Don't forget them when you need a rig to go anywhere.

Coal famine affects even Auburn. Last Thursday the authorities had to buy a load of wood for use in the heater at the jail. It is an ill wind that blows nobody good. The coal famine will make a better sale for some of the numerous stacks of wood that we see cut and corded up at various places over the county.

RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY:—"Mystic Cure" for rheumatism and neuralgia, radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action pon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappears. The first dose greatly benefits. 75 cts. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. tf

"Give me a Receipt." "Han't got it; but did you ever smoke Blank's Best?" "Don't want 'em. I smoke only cigars I have tested and proven good, and Kessler Bros.' brands fill the bill.

We are informed by The N. G. Hamilton Pub. Co., of Cleveland, O., whose advertisement appears in this paper, that agents have made over $75,000 on the sale of "Samantha at the World's Fair," Josiah Allen's Wife's latest book. DeKalb county seems to be behind the times, for there has been no canvassing done in this county. There is a good field open for hustlers, for at the lowest estimate $250 can be made in DeKalb county by two or three good agents. 25

The Ft. Wayne Daily Journal of Tuesday morning, has the following items of interest to Auburn: Ab Kelly, ex-postmaster of Waterloo, was in the city yesterday.....R. W. Cobb, manager of the Auburn Cyclery, rode to Fort Wayne yesterday on his wheel.....Mr. Sam Hanna, of Auburn, and a party of friends spent Sunday at Clear Lake, the guests of the Grand View hotel.....Mr. Will Covey and a friend, of this city, spent last week fishing at Clear Lake. They were guests of the Grand View hotel.

Laporte Argus—State Senator Abbott of the Ohio legislature is a digusted republican because his party failed to pass any laws for the taxation of corporations. He openly declares that "the corporations control Gov. McKinley and McKinley has complete control of the legislature." It has taken this man a long time to discover that "the corporations control Gov. McKinley." Most people have known that for years, and McKinley practically admits it nearly every time he opens his mouth. Ohio will be fortunate in having an early opportunity of getting rid of Gov. McKinley.

Hoeffler, the man who was second in command in Randall's army when it was here, was in Goshen last week looking for something to do to make a decent living. The Democrat says he reports the bulk of the commonweal army are tramps who have made no effort to work for years, and who would not work were they given the opportunity, and it adds that "it is high time the people along the route were convinced that they are aiding a lot of worthless dogs who, had they their just deserts, would be serving the state in the penitentiary. Hoeffler wearied of the march and deserted the army at Lima, Ohio"

The republican state convention of 1892, the New Albany Ledger says, "arraigned the democratic party of Indiana for enacting an unequal and unjust tax law," and denounced the present law in unqualified terms, encouraging resistance to it in the courts. The railroad, telegraph, telephone, sleeping car and other corporations acting upon this advice and encouragement from the republican press platform, did resist this law in the courts and have for two years past kept the state and the counties out of millions of dollars of justly owed taxes. But the supreme court of the United States decides the democratic tax law constitutional and therefore just, and that these corporations must pay their full share of taxation, with interest and penalties on the delinquency that has occurred while they have been following republican advice in fighting the law. It will, of course, be but natural and in keeping with the policy of the party for the repulican press and platforms to hereafter denounce the supreme court of the United States as "infamous and unjust," and they will doubtless do so, notwithstanding a majority of the judges of this court are republicans."

J. R. Burniston was in town last Wednesday. He is one of the "old reliables" of the B. & O. shops at Garrett.

All Chicago extra papers will be sold and delivered at regular price of 2 cents per copy. Harry Trentman, agent, at the Glazier News stand.

Phil. Gibson reached home Monday, having waited for the closing exercises at the Fayette college where he has been so long. We believe he graduated.

Why pay a membership fee and three monthly payments, perhaps longer, and then not get the money, when you can get a loan of Rickel & Sprott without taking any chances. 21-24

A good cigar, well made, seldom breaks in the pocket. Such are the Young Americas, made by Kessler Bros.

Schaab Brothers have a new advt. this week, to call attention to their large stock of seasonable goods. It takes a different quality to be comfortable now, from that needed a week or two back.

Wm. Ettinger, of Waterloo, has received his new hearse, a full stock of caskets and undertakers' goods of all kinds and is ready for business. Don't forget the place; J. S. Bowers' old room.

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of Mystic Cure, and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, Auburn, Ind.

FARMERS. Before you buy, you should see the light, low Elevator Binder and the Osborne all steel Hay Rake and Tedder, for sale by S. F. Morr. Call at the W. H. Mader buggy room, west of the Davis hardware. 20tf

"There goes a man of sense and good judgment." "Why so?" "He smokes the best 5c cigar in town—Kessler Bros.' Bill Head."

Follow the crowd to Clapp's.

Uncle Henry Willis and wife, of Waterloo, were here last week to attend the wedding of their granddaughter, Nettie Willis. It was on the same day just one year before, that they witnessed the wedding of another granddaughter, Gertrude Willis.

W. H. Mader will be in the buggy business this year, selling Kiblinger buggies, road wagons and carriages. He will be found at the Kiblinger factory, his room being on 8th St. west of the Davis hardware store. Come and see me before you buy. tf

No home can be happy where the mother suffers from terrible headaches or nervous troubles. Inclose stamp for Mrs. Lena Cooper, 1534 Loraine St., Cleveland, O., to tell you how Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cured her after had given up all hope of cure. It is sold by F. E. Davenport.

Eleven persons united with the Presbyterian church Sunday forenoon. They are, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Coffinberry, and their son Willie Coffinberry, James Simon, H. P. Reed, Richard A. York, Paul Davenport, Thomas Husselman, Mrs. Annice Leas, Mrs. Mary E. Barnes, Mrs. Luella A. Richland. After services there was communion.

Mrs. S. B. Amstutz, of Omaha, Neb., made this office a call last Friday. She reached the old home in Richland May 29 with her little daughter Hazel and they expect to remain till about the first of July. She was Miss Amy Treesh, a sister of Levi Treesh. Mr. Amstutz is and has been for some time, in the employ of the Union Pacific.

Bowers and Eldridge, have again set the pattern for beautiful and well kept grass plats. They have made Eleventh street look so lovely that those residing west of them have also taken pains to keep the grass neat and clean, and we think it now the prettiest street in town. And there are hundreds of others who are following in their footsteps.

Laporte Argus: A farmer was in this office Monday and told us that the year before the McKinley bill he sold his wool for 27 cents a pound. Last year he sold it for 18 cents a pound. This year the best offer he could get in the city for the wool from the same flock was 12 cents a pound. If protection protects the farmer he would like to know where it comes in.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

Mr. Colvin, pastor of the Presbyterian church here is wining golden opinions wherever he goes. Last week, he was at Ft. Wayne to assist in ordaining a pastor for the new congregation there, the Bethany church. The Ft. Wayne Daily Journal says of this: "In the evening at Bethany church, the Rev. F. C. Colvin, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Auburn, preached a powerful and eloquent sermon."

James Draggoo and Treasure Sawyer are putting down new cement walks in front of their residences. Also J. W. McKay, C. M. Merica and and all in front of the block in which Kruger's grocery is situated. A few years more of such improvements and this part of our expense will be over, as these cement walks will last a lifetime. A new wooden crossing has been put in at the M. E. church, and Sheriff Ralston will put down a walk.

Nellie Willis and Will Eckhart were married at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Willis, last Wednesday evening June 6. There were only a few of the near relatives present to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. A. S. Wooton. The young couple are among Auburn's most popular people, the bride being one of the M. E. church choir and the groom a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eckhart. They went to housekeeping at once in their own home.

J. R. Cosper, and his daughter, Mrs. W. H. McIntosh, started Monday for a two week's visit with relatives at Grand Rapids.

Mr. Harrison expects to spend a few weeks camping out at Windsor Park, Chicago. Their two fine cottages are rented to satisfactory parties.

Mrs. A. B. Richards visited her father, Wm. Buss, in Fairfied, Tuesday. People all talk small pox up that way, and Hudson has quarantined against Ashley.

Willie and Addie Lamport are here, the guests in the family of A. B. Richard's. Mrs. Lamport is visiting Rev. A. L. Lamport at Garrett. They reside in Mishawaka.

Buy your buggies of Kutzner & Myers at their feed barn on West Sixth street, Auburn Come and see us and we will convince you that we sell at prices to suit the times.

Farmers report a great deal of damage to early potatoes on low ground by the frosts last Wednesday and Thursday mornings. Corn was not hurt so much, but the cool weather retarded its growth.

W. H. Kuhn sold two sewing machines on Monday, which shows that business is opening up briskly. He is now permanently located here and has been for some time. He has room at F. J. Yesbera's and is doing well.

The makers of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer offer all nervous sufferers advice and consultation of the Doctor, free of charge. Inclose stamp to The J. W. Brant Co., Albion, Mich., or 42 Dey St., New York. Ask F. E. Davenport.

Treasurer Jones says the net town debt June 4, consisted of 11 road orders amounting to $342.85; 175 municipal orders amounting to $6,164.38; and of bonds, old and new, $11,331.91. Total town debt, $17,496.43. This is not so bad as has been pictured frequently just before election.

Charles Pommert took a 45 mile ride on his bicycle Sunday. He went up near Orland and then to Mongo, where he staid over night with his mother, who is in poor health. A little after 4 Monday morning he started back to Auburn reaching here about 8. It was a pretty long trip, but he was all right after a few hours rest.

John Wycoff one of the best known and most popular of the Wabash freight conductors was hurt here yesterday. He was helping to couple some cars they were taking from the switch by the band sawmill, and got squeezed between the cars and some lumber at the side, rolling him along between the two. Dr. Swarts was called and helped to get him right, and thinks no bones broken. Wycoff was kept till the noon train and sent to the hospital at Peru. He thinks he will soon get back to his home in Montpelier. He was formerly a teacher in the schools near Butler.

Dr. Matheny had a telegram Saturday from California, saying that his son, Brown Matheny had been fully acquitted of the crime charged against him. It will be remembered he was arrested in Oakland on charge of burglary and murder. A burglar was discovered robbing a store. Two policemen went in to get him, and he ran between them as they fired at him. One of the policemen was shot and died a day or so later. It now turns out that, firing towards one another, the policeman was hit by the other policeman as the bullet would not fit the pistol dropped by the burglar. The other evidence against young Matheny, was a suit of wet clothes found at his boarding house, the night of the murder being rainy. But he could not get these clothes on. This let him free.

A Convenient Thing.

R. A. York has invented an ingenious device for the use of famlies that buy milk of the milkman. It is an iron post on which is adjusted an arm that may be turned out or in, and on the end of this is a neat tin can that can be removed easily. The milkman comes along, sees the can hanging out, and knows milk is wanted. He unscrews the top of the can and there finds a ticket. Then takes off the cover, puts in the milk, turns the arm back towards the house and goes on. It saves him time, and the lady of the house considerable trouble. We believe he will sell a great many.

Union Chapel Quarterly Meeting.

The Union Chapel U. B. church, five miles east of Auburn, will hold its quarterly meeting June 16 and 17. The meeting will be conducted by Rev. Mr. Sheldon, pastor, and Elder Klotz. Services will be held in the Hoodlemire grove just east of the church. Saturday evening there will be services in the church. All are invited to attend.

Notice.

Having made a change in my business, all those knowing themselves indebted to me on book account, will please call and settle up and oblige.

There will be a meeting at the Sugar Grove school house, southwest of the Junction, June 19, by Elder J. H. Palmer, of the Progressive Dunker church.

Fourth of July.

It is a poor season when Auburn does not have something going on July 4. The eagle feels at home here it would seem, and screams its best at the slightest notice. This year we are a little slow about getting started, but there is ample time yet. Our local horse fanciers have hit on the idea of having some fun out of the good trotting horses owned here and at several places in the county. So they are getting up a set of races for that day. For a few days they have been putting heads together, and the thing is about settled. Whether there will be any other amusements except those at the fair ground, we are not yet informed.

ORGANDI
PARISIEN LAWNS,

8 Cents a Yard.

A STRONG POINT.

Look at the Smallness of the price, that's one of the strong points of these sightly, 31 inch wide, Summer Fabrics, each yard of which is worth 15c.

A STRONGER POINT.

Yet this fact would have little weight if these lovely Figured and Striped Lawns were ostracised by Dame Fashion.

THE STRONGEST POINT.

The strongest argument, however, why you should purchase a dress of this desirable material with white and tinted ground is advanced by the fact that they wash like a linen handkerchief.

The pictures are as fine as any sold, and have a description of each view. The name of this series is "Beautiful scenes of the White City." It has much valuable information, besides the pictures. This 100 embraces "Part 1" only, but it contains 16 lovely views.

Normal at Waterloo.

H. E. Coe, of the Auburn High School, and H. H. Keep, principal of the Waterloo School, will open a normal school in Waterloo Monday, June 11, to continue eight weeks. Terms for the full term, $2 00. This school, under these two able teachers, will be entirely devoted to normal school work and all needed preparatory drill for teachers and those preparing for that work. Call on or write to either Mr. Coe or Mr. Keep. Remember the term begins next Monday.

Old Settlers' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Old Settlers of DeKalb county will be held at Auburn, Thursday, June 21, 1894. The meeting will be called to order at 10 o'clock a. m., by Hon. Freeman Kelley, president of the association. This will be followed by the annual address by Hon. E. D. Hartman, after which there will be short speeches by the pioneers. The crowd will be entertained with songs, dog races, bicycle parade, military drill by the Auburn Rifles, etc. Everybody come with baskets and make this the best meeting ever held in the county.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL evidence has added another to its long list of suffering victims. A prisoner serving a life sentence for the murder of a man some years ago is soon to be liberated because the man he was found guilty of murdering is alive and well and has only found out that he had been "murdered." Judges, juries, and witnesses should be more careful in sifting circumstantial evidence and less eager to give confessed murderers the benefit of legal technicalities.

IT is stated that an American committee has been engaged for five years in preparing a memorial to the poet Keats, and that "the details have been kept absolutely secret even in the United States." This is overstraining the matter a little. Contributions were freely requested in Chicago, as elsewhere, and there was no secrecy about it. Why should there have been? Keats, like Browning, is far more read and appreciated in this country than in England, and it was perfectly natural that the memorial should be placed where it was most appropriate—in his own country, which failed to understand him.

ABOUT once a month some Canadian patriot gets drunk, and finds it necessary to work off his enthusiasm by tearing down the flag over a United States consulate. It would be interesting to know what ingredients in Canadian whisky produce this state of mind. Old sea-faring men are wont to couple rum and true religion as the two great requisites for a virtuous and happy life, but the connection between malt whisky and aggressive patriotism is not at all clear. The Canadian war department—if there is such an institution—might do worse than investigate the phenomenon. The last flag-tearing episode at St. Thomas was the work of members of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto. It may be remembered that the organization distinguished itself at the time of the Fenian raids by running forty miles from a red cow which the shivering sentry mistook for the invading Irish host. If these timorous militiamen can be rendered bellicose and bloodthirsty by allopathic doses of whisky Lord Aberdeen ought to quarter them in a distillery. The results to be attained would justify the expense incurred.

MUCH senseless prejudice has been aroused against a certain New York society which protects little children from cruelty, but some of the recent developments indicate that it is at least a blessing to some babies. It appears that when a poor mother is neglectful of her babe the fact is made public, but the society officers complain that their work among the rich is never made known. For instance, how many New-Yorkers heard of the case of a society woman who was in the habit of tying her babe to the chain which controlled her pug dog, until the society put an end to the arrangement? Nor does anyone hear of the society's efforts to put an end to the traffic in various patented devices used by well-to-do mothers and which are designed to help a baby to jump or to walk. The devices are sold because too many mothers in New York are only too glad to get rid of their babies and yet will not pay for a competent nurse. One patented tool was meant to strap a baby in its bed and to prevent it from kicking the clothes off by binding the legs together. Another contrivance was meant to keep a baby's mouth open by force.

ONE result of the coal miners' strike is likely to be the greater use of liquid fuel in the industries in which heat forms an important factor. Owing to the abundance and cheapness of coal, comparatively little attention has been given to the possibilities of petroleum, tar and oils of other kinds as fuels. Since Mr. McBride's followers laid down their picks, however, large users of fuel have been investigating, and the discovery has been made that liquid fuel is not only better but cheaper than coal or wood. In this country the experiments with oil have been few and not altogether satisfactory. But in Europe the results have been highly profitable. On the Caspian Sea all the steamships use liquid fuel, the saving over coal being estimated at $5 a mile for the larger vessels. English railways have also used oil with success, and in Russia petroleum is gradually superseding other fuels. Considering the low price of crude petroleum in this country and the inexhaustible supply available, it will be singular if that combustible shall not soon come into favor as a fuel. Its small bulk, perfect consumption and economy in the matter of firemen certainly entitle it to a trial. Another advantage is the fact that when properly burned it is absolutely smokeless.

CHICAGO HERALD: In Massachusetts, where the abolition of the death penalty is under consideration, the case of Prendergast is being cited against the advocates of capital punishment. It is argued, with reason, that Mayor Harrison's murderer, if he had been sentenced to life imprisonment, would have been taken to the penitentiary without any more ado, and society would have been rid forever of a dangerous criminal; whereas, having been condemned to death, all sorts of influences have been set to work to save him, and he may go free altogether. It must be admitted that this line of argument is a strong one. Aside from the moral right of society to inflict the death penalty, it is pretty certain that capital punishment does not exercise much influence in preventing murders. A death sentence arouses all the maudlin sentiment in the community, and hysterical philanthropists work night and day to save the neck of the condemned man. A sentence of life imprisonment evokes no such sympathy, and in nineteen cases out of twenty the criminal accepts his fate, thankful that it is no worse. If capital sentences were always executed, the infliction of the death penalty would prove a powerful deterrent. As not one in ten is executed, however, it is a question whether it would not be better to do away with the system altogether and rely upon life imprisonment, which is pretty sure to be enforced in every case.

Legal Brevity and Wit.

A refreshing sample of brevity by bench and bar occurs in a case where the great Erskine appeared for the plaintiff, who sought to recover ten guineas lent to him by his lady love before they parted to meet in court. Erskine began by remarking that when love was over, the laconic style of letter-writing was most fitting. He then read the following letter from the defendant: "SIR: When convenient you shall have your ten guineas. I despise you. CATHARINE KEELING." Said Erskine: "I shall prove the handwriting, and that is my case." Asked Bearcroft, counsel for the defense: "Is that all?" "Aye," quoth Erskine. "Then I despise you," said Bearcroft; and Mr. Justice Buller nonsuited the plaintiff. After this, one does not much marvel at this judge's notion of Paradise: "Playing whist all night, and trying nisi prius cases all day." Those, by the by, were the days of short opinions as well as short speeches. Taunton would sometimes advise: "The question is worth trying." Erskine once wrote: "The action will lie if the witnesses do."

BOOBY PRIZE IN SIGHT

DEMOCRATS HANDICAPPED FOR THE POLITICAL RACE.

All Duty on Sugar, Coal, Iron and Trust Products Should Be Abolished—Popularity of the Income Tax with the Masses—Political Notes.

Pledges Must Be Redeemed.

From present appearances the Democratic party intends to lose the political race in which it expects to engage next fall. In fact, some of its representatives in the Senate are coaching it for the "booby" prize by loading it up with the some ism that broke the back of the McKinley party in 1890 and 1892. It is no use for Democrats to deny it. The present Senate tariff bill differs from the odious McKinley bill only in degree. Both are full of protection to trusts which dictated them. The Gorman bill has the advantage in that it makes free one or two important raw materials that were heavily taxed by McKinley, and in that its protective duties are usually not so high—though often just as protective. The McKinley bill has the advantage in that it (being entirely in the hands of its protectionist friends) got through Congress with less scandalous exposure of its liaisons with trusts, and in that it is not the result of hypocrisy—it having never been intended as a purely revenue bill.

As regards the tariff features of the two bills it now seems quite certain that the genuine McKinley bill will put up the best race. Honest men hate hypocrites. The Democratic bill which promised so much and realizes so little has so disgusted hundreds of thousands of free traders that they will stay at home or vote for some third party rather than stultify their principles by sanctioning the hypocritical Senate surrender bill. The non-compromising and honest tariff reform and free trade Democrats, such as were the most of those who fought the hard battles of 1890 and 1892, prefer McKinleyism straight if they must accept protection, to the milk and water mixture prepared by Gorman, Brice & Co. They say "rather than have another protective bill, let the McKinley bill continue to work out its own damnation."

But there is one feature of the Senate bill that will go far toward saving the party responsible for the bill. The income tax attached to the bill will popularize it in all parts of the country. The masses of the voters undoubtedly favor this method of collecting a revenue from those who now escape their fair share of taxes. If the voters of New York City could have an opportunity to express themselves on this question they would declare with an overwhelming majority in favor of an income tax. And this in spite of the fact that New York has about 1,200 millionaires and multi-millionaires and that the income tax is repressed by every New York daily except the World. This fact has become evident from several mass meetings held in New York. One was called under the auspices of the Reform Club, to ask for the immediate passage of a tariff reform bill "with or without an income tax." Some of the speakers spoke for, and others against, an income tax. The audience demonstrated that it was strongly in favor of this kind of taxation. Another meeting, called by the Manhattan Single Tax Club, to express indignation at the delay in tariff reform legislation and to ask for a radical tariff bill, declared unanimously (except for four votes) in favor of resolutions declaring against all tariff taxation and in favor of an income tax or some other better form of direct taxation.

But it is not too late yet for the Democratic party to redeem some of its pledges to the people. It can never make amends for its tardy action, but it can wipe out the more obnoxious and disgraceful features of the bill. It can do this in two ways: 1. By so amending the bill that it will give us free sugar, free coal and free ores, by replacing and increasing the number of ad valorem duties, and by greatly reducing such highly protective duties as those on collars, cuffs and shirts, on woolens, glass, etc. 2. By accomplishing this same result by separate bills passed as soon as this dicker contrivance is out of the way. Either of these plans, if carried out, would give the Democrats a good fighting chance this fall, with excellent prospects for 1896. If, in addition, it could pass a separate bill making the products of many of the leading trusts absolutely free, its prospects of success would be much brighter. Many duties upon such products produce no revenue and are retained for the sole purpose of protection to offensive trusts and combines. Some of these are the Steel Rail, Steel Beam, Linseed Oil, Borax, Standard Oil, Match, and Agricultural Implement Trusts. Often these trusts sell their products cheaper abroad than at home and depend upon the otherwise useless duties to prevent the reimportation of their products. Remove these obnoxious duties and put Americans on a par with foreigners in our markets. It will be a most popular move.

Protection is becoming more and more unpopular. It is on its last legs. It is only by a combination of circumstances such as can be brought about only by greed and corruption that protection can possibly hold out a few years longer. The people have already branded it as unconstitutional robbery and their decision will not be reversed except by those who misrepresent and betray them. If the Democratic legislators will stand by the people in this fight, the people will not desert the Democratic party. If not—there is likely to be a shaking up of parties, and it may be some time before the Democratic party will come back to its own.—Byron W. Holt.

Misleading Comparisons.

The Senate Finance Committee must, indeed, think we are a nation of chumps, says a writer in the New York Evening Post. Do they hope to delude the people by "official" comparison between the duties of the McKinley act and the Senate and House bills into believing that the average duty in the Senate bill is 36.75 against 35.52 per cent. in the House bill? Do they expect this comparison table will be accepted as fair and just, and that it will make their bill acceptable to the people? While perhaps technically accurate, the comparison is unjust. The figures published do not begin to represent the great difference, from the standpoint of protection, between the House and the Senate bills. They are grossly misleading in at least two respects:

1. In the Senate bill duties are included on very important articles which are free in the House bill. Here are three of the articles, and the value of the imports of each in 1893:

Sugar and molasses	$116,952,222.55
Iron ores	1,244,333.75
Coal and coke	3,701,642.36
Total	$121,898,208.66

The average of 35.52 per cent. for the House bill is computed upon imports valued at about $360,000,000, while the 36.75 per cent. average for the Senate bill is computed upon imports valued at about $300,000,000. To the people who asked for relief from burdensome tariff taxes, this difference is about $65,000,000—$5 per family. A fairer comparison would include the same articles in both averages. Thus, if we include in the dutiable lists of both bills all articles that are dutiable under either bill, we will have about $500,000,000 of dutiable imports. Under the House bill we would get about $129,000,000 of revenue and under the Senate bill about $184,000,000. The average ad-valorem duty under the House bill would be about 25¾ per cent., against 36¾ per cent. in the Senate bill. The Senate bill duties on articles actually imported are therefore 44 per cent. greater than the House bill duties.

2. Many duties that produce no revenue are higher in the Senate than in the House bill. The protective features of such duties have been greatly increased, but no effect has been produced upon the average of duties. Thus the House duty of 20 per cent. on steel rails, equal to less than $4 per ton, has been increased to seven-twentieths of a cent per pound, equal to $7.84 per ton. Either of these duties will be as prohibitive of importations as is the McKinley duty of $13.44. The Steel Rail Trust in either case will fix prices below the importing point. The Senate bill simply gives 100 per cent. more protection, and will enable the Trust to fix prices $4 per ton higher than would be possible under the House bill.

In the same way the House duty of 30 per cent. on structural iron and steel is increased about 80 per cent. in the Senate bill. The duty on starch is increased from 1 to 2 cents per pound; the duty on linseed or flaxseed oil, from 15 to 20 cents per gallon. The duties on boracic acid, wash blue, vermilion red, strychnine, and on many other chemicals have been increased, though they were already prohibitive.

In fact, the majority of the 400 increases in the Senate over the House bill are increases of protective and non-revenue-producing duties, which would produce a scarcely perceptible effect upon the "average" ad-valorem duties on all schedules.

The unfairness is conspicuous in the comparison of the rates in the sugar schedule. The rate in the House bill is given as 28.43 per cent.; in the Senate bill as 39.59 per cent. As is well known, the House bill makes all cane and beet sugar free. The 28.43 per cent. represents only the duty on confectionery and on glucose, or grape sugar. The total value of these imports in 1893 was $53,019. The Senate duty of 59.39 per cent. represents the duty on the total imports of all kinds of sugars. These in 1893 were valued at $118,285,047. The House duty would produce $15,073, while the Senate duty would produce $46,839,050 in revenue. It will be observed that the discriminating duties of one-eighth and one-tenth cent per pound on refined sugars cut no figure even in bringing up the average rate of duty in the sugar schedule.

Will Gorman Explain This?

The assertion that any trust or trusts have dictated any part of any schedule of this bill I pronounce unqualifiedly false. They have received the same attention, although not as much consideration, as individuals engaged in the business of manufacture—no more, no less. We felt the necessity of dealing all such combinations a death blow.—Gorman.

Is that the reason why the sugar trust is given six months in which to import the growing sugar crop free of duty, and a goodly degree of protection after the expiration of that time, as well as during the interval? Is that why the specific rate on raw sugars was changed to ad valorem, thus giving the trust the benefit of 40 per cent. on the difference between the foreign price of raw and the foreign price of refined sugar?

In addition to the 40 per cent. on all sugars the bill puts one-eighth of a cent a pound on all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard, and one-tenth of a cent more on such sugars imported from countries which pay bounties. That means about $8,000,000 for the benefit of the trust. But that is not all. It was recently brought out in debate in the Senate that there is an average difference of about one cent per pound in the foreign price of raw and refined sugar. The refiners get protection under the amended bill equal to 40 per cent. on this difference, or four-tenths of a cent per pound.

Mr. Allison stated that this protection was equal to three-tenths of a cent per pound at least. Calling it that, instead of the higher figure, and adding the two specific rates allowed for protection, and we have a total protection equal to 0.525 of 1 cent per pound, or 52½ cents per 100 pounds. That is equal to nearly $19,000,000 a year for the trust, assuming that its output will be 3,600,000,000 pounds a year. And on top of this is all that the trust can make by importing raw sugar free for six months and then selling the refined product at full tariff made prices.

Does this look as though "the assertion that any trust or trusts have dictated any part of any schedule" was "unqualifiedly false?" It certainly looks much as though somebody had been taking good care of the interests of the sugar trust, whether anyone connected with the trust dictated any part of the schedule or not.

As Mr. Gorman is a "business-like" sort of man, perhaps he can tell who dictated this schedule. Perhaps, too, he can demonstrate the truth of his remarkable statement that "we have reduced the duty on lead 50 per cent., on steel rails 56 per cent., and on refined sugar 75 per cent. more than on the product of any other trust or any other article."—Chicago Herald.

Steel Rail Trust in Clover.

There is a marked difference between the attitude of the House and that of the Senate toward the tariff on steel rails. In the House seventy-nine votes were cast in favor of putting steel rails on the free list, although the duty reported by the Ways and Means Committee was only 25 per cent., equivalent at present prices to $4.40 per ton. It is noticeable, moreover, that so many votes were cast against any duty whatever, in spite of Chairman Wilson's earnest plea that the rate reported in the bill should not be disturbed. The duty was afterward reduced in the House to 20 per cent., or $3.52 per ton. On the other hand, in the Senate, the revisers reported a duty of seven-twentieths of a cent per pound, or $7.84 per ton, and this was quietly accepted on Wednesday, no attempt having been made to reduce it. In the course of the brief remarks in the Senate upon the proposition, no reference to the existence and the exactions of the steel-rail combination was made. It appears that neither side cared to direct attention to the facts which had been so earnestly discussed in the House. The Senate duty, as we have shown, will permit the combination to maintain its ring price of $24 in the East and $25 in the West, for it will prevent the importation of foreign rails at this port for less than $27.75, as foreign prices now stand. Whose influence caused the revisers to increase the duty from 22½ per cent. ($3.96), as originally reported, to $7.84? There is a rumor that it was the influence of the Republican Senator Quay, but that seems almost incredible. Still, Mr. Quay has discontinued his serial speech, which at one time promised to be endless.—New York Times.

Going for Gorman.

THE Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Republic (Dem.) says that at the conclusion of Senator Gorman's tariff speech, "one Senator, a strong and earnest tariff-reformer, shook hands with him and said: 'Gorman, it was a mighty good speech, but it won't condone all the —— rascality you have been guilty of for the past two months.' Gorman smiled at this sharp thrust. He considered it merely a joke. That is Gorman's way."

"THE most of Gorman's speech on the tariff bill might have been made by Aldrich, or any other well-known advocate of protection," says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Rep.). "Aside from the fact that the speaker pretends to be a Democrat," says the Chicago Times (Dem.), referring to the same speech, "it was such an effort as might, with more appropriateness, have been delivered by that bloated knight of protection, William McKinley, or by that other plutocratic mouthpiece, the elephantine Reed of Maine.

McKinleyized Democrats.

Senator Hill's pronounced stand for free raw material, evidenced by his votes for free ore and free lead, will deceive no Democrat any more than they were fooled by the recent speech of Senator Gorman. These Senators, with two or three other McKinleyized Democrats as to their own particular local or political interests, are responsible for the delay of the Senate in passing the tariff bill, and for the emasculated and unsatisfactory condition of the bill as it now stands. Their coming forward at the eleventh hour and professing to be the most orthodox and sincere of tariff reformers is simply the old Blaine performance of casting an anchor to the windward.—Pittsburg Post (Dem.).

McKinleyites Importing Coal.

By a curious freak of fate it happens that Nova Scotia coal is being imported to the United States, not by the influence of a free trade law, but under the operations of McKinley's sky-high protection. These blatant frauds precipitated the coal strike by cutting down wages already reduced by McKinleyism to the starvation point, and now, in furtherance of their war upon American wages, they are doing the very thing which for a generation they have declared would ruin them—namely, importing foreign coal.—Chicago Times.

ESTIMATES made by wheat growers of Spencer, Warrick, and Perry Counties show that the crop has been cut short at least 30 per cent. by the recent freezes.

AT Shelbyville, Joseph Williams, aged 64 years, retired in his usual good health and was found dead next morning. Rheumatism of the heart was pronounced the cause.

DR. J. M. DINNEN of Fort Wayne, announces that he will bring $25,000 damage suit for libel against the Allen County Medical Society. He alleges the society made false statements that injured his practice.

BY a gas explosion at the electric light station, Kokomo, Mart Symons, the engineer; J. Q. Symons Marshal of Walton, and John Knote, proprietor of the Jerome Flouring Mills, were terribly burned, and the building was badly damaged. It is thought the injured men will recover.

ALLEN T. DEWITT, aged 40, died at the home of his mother east of Shelbyville. The cause of death is said to have been inanition. He was afflicted with some trouble of the throat and unable to swallow food for several days. He leaves a widow and, an estate valued at $10,000.

AT Shelbyville while engaged in blowing stumps out with dynamite James Young, known as "Dynamite Jim," was fatally hurt. The stuff exploded tearing off one arm and the hand on the other. His nose was removed from his face, one eye was blown from its socket, and the other one was badly injured.

R. T. McDONALD, general manager and a heavy stockholder in the Fort Wayne Electric Company, applied to the court at Fort Wayne for a receiver for the plant, which is valued at $500,000. H. J. Miller of Fort Wayne, and L. J. Hawthorne of Boston, were appointed receivers. Articles of incorporation of the Fort Wayne Electric Corporation, with a capital of $1,500,000, were immediately filed, with McDonald as President. This is the culmination of the contest between the Fort Wayne Company and the General Electric Company of New York, and the move is believed to have been made by McDonald to prevent the electric trust from getting control of the original company.

JOHN WILHELM, sent to the Prison North in May, 1893, for stealing some tools out of the Big Four shops in Haughville, has been paroled by Governor Matthews. Wilhelm is nearly 60 years old and has been a "trusty" in the Northern prison, where he attracted the attention of the Governor on the occasion of the last visit of the executive to the prison. He was formerly employed by the Big Four, and while intoxicated committed the theft for which he was sent up. His family in Haughville has been in a distressing condition. The wife is now sick at the City Hospital, and the children are a charge on the county. Wilhelm's time would have been out in a few months more, and it was deemed a case worthy of executive clemency.

ONE of the largest deals of the State has just come to light, in which a Mr. H. Norton Beach of Raleigh, is concerned. It has been known for some time that Mr. Beach had invented a hydrocarbonate gas generator, but until lately nothing has been known of it. It is now learned that Mr. Beach sold one-half interest to Eastern men for $100,000. Mr. Beach is a bright but poor young man, not more than 30 years old, and one of Rush County's promising men. He has spent most of his life on a farm and teaching school.

WM. HUFF, next to the oldest man in Clay County, is dead.

R. T. McDONALD, general manager of the new Fort Wayne Electric Company, states that arrangements will be made at once for the erection of large buildings, near the electric light works, for the construction of electric street car appliances. He expects to employ in this new industry fully as many men as are now employed in the electric works. This will be quite a boom for Fort Wayne, as fully 500 skilled mechanics will find employment when these works are completed. Meantime the old works will be run to their full extent to meet orders for dynamos and electric supplies that are coming in from all parts of the United States.

Remarkably Considerate.

A Cincinnati newspaper reports a striking manifestation of amiability on the part of a little maiden of that city.

A beautiful new doll had just been given her, and as she sat holding it and singing to it, her mother noticed that the old one was not in sight.

"What have you done with Beatrice?" asked the mother.

"I've put her away," answered the little girl. "If she saw me loving my new baby it might hurt her feelings."

Fast Time by Oxen.

Dwight Platt of Milford, Conn., hitched his ox team, loaded with lumber, to some fright cars standing on a side track near the Milford Railway Station, one day recently, and went into a neighboring hostelry to recuperate. A freight train came along about that time and, coupling on the cars without noticing the team, started up. The oxen never went so fast in their lives as they did during the next few seconds, and their path was strewn with lumber for some distance. The team was discovered by a brakeman before the oxen were injured, however, and Mr. Platt now uses ordinary hitching posts.—Hartford Courant.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Purifies the Blood and Heals the Sores

"My father, James H. Chapman, has had a running sore on his leg for seven years, caused by a rubber boot rubbing the skin off his ankle bone. The sore spread until it reached around his leg three times and extended half way to his knee. He tried different doctors and many kinds of salve, but it grew worse. Last spring it became so bad that he or attend to his work on the farm. My mother and myself persuaded him to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Before the third bottle was taken the sores had entirely healed and disappeared, leaving his limb as sound as ever. For some weeks past he has been able to work hard about the farm. All praise is due to Hood's Sarsaparilla." DALLIE G. CHAPMAN, Franklin, Neb.

Illustrated Fairy Stories.

Illustrated fairy stories are a pretty novelty for simple entertainments given by children. "The Three Bears" was lately successfully given by three boys, 7, 10 and 13 years old, who personated the bears that were hungry and fed on soup, and who were turned out of their beds and cheated of their dinner by that pretty little maiden, Curly Locks. The bears were clothed in skins of brown canton flannel, made like children's night drawers, with the arms and legs lengthened so as to cover hands and feet, and with the faces covered by masks representing bear's faces. The bears are father, mother and cub, and the baby bear wears a cap. The first scene shows the family just before dinner, the mother knitting, the father reading a newspaper, and the child looking at an immense picture book. When the family sit down to their supper of porridge, they all complain that it is too hot and start out for a walk. Then Curly Locks arrives, and she is found by the bears when they return from their walk. There are many other simple fairy stories that children could do very nicely without elaborate stage setting. They make very charming little home plays and give much pleasure without the elaboration and magnificence that we have seen lately in that nice old story of "Cinderella."

Glad He Obeyed.

I have a little story to tell you, boys. One day—a long, hot day it had been, too—I met my father on the road to town. "I wish you would take this package to the village for me, Jim," he said, hesitating.

Now, I was a boy of 12, not fond of work, and just out of the hayfield where I had been since daybreak. I was tired, dusty and hungry. It was two miles to town: I wanted to get my supper and dress for singing class. My first impulse was to refuse, and to do it harshly; for I was vexed that he should ask me after my long day's work. If I refused he would go himself. He was a gentle, patient old man. But something stopped me—one of God's good angels, I think. "Of course, father, I'll take it," I said, heartily, giving my scythe to one of the men. He gave me the package. "Thank you, Jim," he said. "I was going myself, but somehow I don't feel very strong today."

He walked with me to the road that turned off to the town, and as he left me he put his hand on my arm, saying again: "Thank you, my son. You have always been a good boy to me, Jim."

I hurried to town and back again. When I came near the house I saw a crowd of farm hands at the door. One of them came to me, the tears rolling down his face. "Your father," he said, "he fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you."

I am an old man now, but I have thanked God over and over again, all the years that have passed since that hour, that those last words were: "You've always been a good boy to me, Jim." No human being ever yet was sorry for love or kindness shown to others. But there is no pang of remorse so keen as the bitterness with which we remember neglect or coldness which we have shown to loved ones who are dead.—New York Journal.

The Charms of Stamp-Collecting.

One of the best things about stamps is that so many of them, having great value for other reasons and in other ways, can be obtained at small cost. Fine collections of coins or expensive bric-a-brac can be made by the wealthy only. Many very fine stamp collections are the property of boys or girls or of older people, in moderate circumstances. This small cost, combined with the great value of stamps as a means of giving wholesome and profitable pleasure, accounts for the great and growing popularity of stamp collecting in this country and Europe. The craving for knowledge is one of our strongest and certainly most worthy desires. Stamp-collecting ministers directly to this; its educational value is great already, and is constantly increasing. The knowledge of modern historical events in a concise and definite form is one of the possessions of the thoughtful stamp collector. We have, in Spanish history, the futile insurrection of Don Carlos, 1873–75, clearly marked by the issue of stamps which he caused during those years, and the face of the pretender in our albums keeps the fact definitely in our minds. The change from King Alfono XII. to the Regency and the baby King Alfonso XIII., born in 1886, no boy collector will forget. Nor will the girls fail to remember that in 1891, soon after the death of the old King William III., a charming girlish face made its appearance on the stamps of the Netherlands.

These are but two instances showing how recent historical events are recorded by stamps. There is scarcely a stamp-issuing country which does not exhibit on its stamps the changes of government since it began their issue. Fathers and mothers who have lived through these changes of government, but who may have forgotten the dates, will appreciate the means which their children have in stamps for preserving the knowledge in a definite and suggestive form.

It would not require much argument to prove the value of a collection of stamps as a means of education had they been in use as long as coins, for example. Think of having the portraits of all the emperors of Rome, from Augustus to the fall of the empire, upon a series of stamps like our own United States issues, engraved by ancient workmen as skillful as our modern engravers! The simple and worn designs upon ancient coins would have small value as historical relics in comparison with such stamps. Had the invention of printing and the use of steam been events of 2,000 years ago, says St. Nicholas, we might have had such priceless relics. Now it is reserved for future generations of stamp collectors to glory in the rare and beautiful issues of the great American republic, beside which Rome in her palmiest days was no larger than the pygmy to the giant. Stamps as teachers of history will be more appreciated in the future than they can be in the present.

DANCES ON HORSEBACK.

Feat of a Paris Girl That Eclipses That of Loie Fuller.

The Parisians are enjoying an innovation in the way of serpentine dancing that has proved an immense attraction. Mlle. Helene Gerard, an equestrienne of great renown, is the originator of this feature, which consists of dancing on horseback. Miss Gerard is an extremely graceful and pretty young woman, and is said to give a performance of this dance on horseback which puts the stage dance of Loie Fuller in the shade. All Paris has taken up Miss Gerard for the moment, and the papers are loud in the praise of her unique act. While she dances as the horse gallops around the arena, the auditorium is darkened and a strong electric light is thrown on the performer through various shades of colored glass. The costume worn by the rider is exquisite both in design and color, and the whole affair is strikingly novel as well as very graceful. It is said that the fair dancer has had several offers from American managers.

DANCING ON HORSEBACK.

CURE FOR INEBRIETY.

Oranges Said to Be Very Effective in Creating a Distaste for Alcohol.

It is now universally acknowledged by competent authorities that inebriety is a disease, physical as well as mental and moral, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, and to give the pledge of total abstinence to the inveterate drunkard without specific instructions what to do next, and expect him to keep it, is to look for a stupendous effort which only the man of sound mental energy and bodily vigor can perform. An expert writing on this subject says that the first step in the progress of true temperance reform must be the recognition of the fact that the irresistable craving for strong drink is the effect of causes which must be got rid of before the drunkard can be regarded as safe from temptation. The various patent remedies can in no sense be regarded as a cure, for the only cure in the real sense of the word is to get the whole man in better condition, his body purified, and his will strengthened. Diet is of extreme importance, and if skillfully directed will wean away the craving naturally and without danger to the individual. All salted and heavy food stuffs should be avoided. To cultivate a distaste for alcohol oranges are more effective than almost anything else known. They should be taken, one at a time, before breakfast, at 11 a. m., at 1 p. m., at 3 p. m., at 6 p. m., and the last thing on retiring. Apples and lemon juice are also excellent.

The Tower at Wembley Park Makes Eiffel a Dwarf.

Unlike the latter tower, which gazes down on the houses and roofs of the crowded city, the Wembley Tower crowns an eminence of the beautiful Wembley Park, affording a lovely view of the surrounding country.

Sure He Was In.

A certain prominent and excellent lawyer of Chicago, but one of the quietest and most unobstrusive of men, steals around noiselessly, with his hands meekly clasped on his breast and a seraphic and perpetual smile. A bon mot at his expense is told of the late Emery Storrs, of Chicago, a brilliant advocate and an exquisite wit. He went to the lawyer's office and inquired for him, but was informed that he was out. "Oh, no, he isn't," he replied; "I know he is in." "But I assure you, Mr. Storrs, he is not in." "Now," responded Mr. Storrs, "I know better; he must be in, it is so still in there!"

SUGAR TRUST WINS.

The Compromise Schedule Is Passed by the Senate.

The compromise amendments to the sugar schedule were all adopted in the Senate Tuesday and the pivotal schedule on which the fate of the tariff measure depended went through without change. On the vital amendment to place all sugars on the free list the Democratic line was drawn, Mr. Hill voting in favor of it and Mr. Irby being paired the same way. But the Republicans were unable to hold their own forces intact, Messrs. Manderson and Perkins voting against the amendment and Mr. Quay being paired against it, while Mr. Sherman, who was present, did not vote at all. Only one of the Populists, Mr. Peffer, voted for free sugar. Messrs. Kyle and Allen in the final issue joined with the majority against it. If all the Republicans, with the three Populists and the two disaffected Democrats, had joined hands sugar, raw and refined, would have gone on the free list. On all the other amendments offered by the Republicans the majority against them ranged from three to ten.

A Washington correspondent says that the adoption of the sugar schedule practically insures the passage of the bill at an early date, although it is intimated that the Republicans will make a final stand on this schedule when the bill is reported and considered in the Senate.

As adopted, the schedule imposes a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem on all sugars raw and refined, with a differential of one-eighth of a cent a pound on sugars above 16 Dutch standard and an additional one-tenth of a cent against sugars imported from countries paying an export bounty. It continues the Hawaiian treaty admitting sugars from the Sandwich islands free of duty, and places a duty of 2 cents a gallon on molasses testing above 40 degrees by the polariscope. The schedule goes into effect Jan. 1, 1895, and the bounty is continued up to that date.

Compromise Amendment Passed.

Mr. Jones offered the "compromise" amendment fixing the duty on raw and refined sugar at 40 per cent. ad valorem, with a differential of one-eighth of 1 cent on sugars above 16 Dutch standard and an additional one-tenth on sugars imported from countries giving an export bounty, continuing the Hawaiian treaty in force and imposing a duty of 2 cents a gallon on molasses. It was carried, 35—27. The vote in detail was as follows:

Stewart was absent and not paired. Perkins was present, but is not recorded as either voting or paired. The Jones amendments increasing the duty on sugar candy from 30 to 35 per cent., and making the duty on saccharine 25 per cent., were agreed to. This completed the sugar schedule and the Senate went into executive session.

MOVING ON BULL HILL.

Armed Deputies Advance on the Cripple Creek Strikers.

Every hour adds to the gravity of the situation at Cripple Creek, and, a dispatch says, a terrible conflict is impending. Under Sheriff Mullins and County Commissioner Boynton are in charge of the army of 1,200 deputies camped within sight of Bull Hill. Mullins declares it is their intention to storm Bull Hill regardless of consequences. Commissioner Boynton is even more emphatic. He declares that Gov. Waite nor any other man had no right to arbitrate out of the law. There were men on Bull Hill guilty of grave crimes for whose arrest they had warrants. These men would be arrested at all hazards. He allowed that in doing this many lives would be placed in jeopardy. Nevertheless, the county had gone to great expense in massing a great force to vindicate the law, and this is not the time for hesitation.

This declaration is called out by the fact that Governor Waite has instructed General Brooks to use the troops to prevent wholesale arrests of strikers. He says that Sheriff Bowers may pass through the lines to serve papers, but can not take a posse with him. The situation is extremely critical.

Brisk Skirmish at Shelburn.

A special from Shelburn, Ind., says: "About 1 o clock this morning several drunken men approached the picket line around the ninety militiamen stationed at Farmersburg and taunted the guards. One man attempted to pass through the line and was brought to a halt. The intruder hurled a brick at the guard and the latter opened fire. This was the signal for a general fusillade of stones and firing by the guards. Forty or fifty shots were fired in quick succession. Colonel Ebel, of Terre Haute, in command of the three companies, called to arms all his men, but they were unable to run down the attacking party, not one being found. The firing caused great excitement. A general alarm was sounded, and Companies D of Washington, A of Indianapolis, and the Second Regiment of Independence, under Col. Rose, were ordered to Farmersburg on the double-quick."

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food. The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Certain protection from alum baking powders can be had by declining to accept any substitute for the Royal, which is absolutely pure.

Revolving Houses.

Many very queer dwellings have undoubtedly been constructed in this country. Circular houses, with rooms shaped somewhat like pieces of pie, have been built several times, and octagonal houses are to be found, probably, in every state. But it is extremely doubtful whether any such house was ever constructed as is described in a Paris journal as being exceedingly popular in the United States "on account of the cyclones."

This house, in behalf of which the Paris paper informs us that a patent has been taken out, is the maison revolver, or revolving house, and is described as follows:

"The model represents a house mounted on an axis or pivot, and at its two extremities are an immense and powerful weather-vane and a cannon. When a gale comes, the house turns on its pivot, obeying the movements of the weather-vane.

"This movement points the cannon in the direction from which the gale is blowing, and at the same time automatically discharges the gun."

As it is well known, the effect of a cannon-shot on a cyclone is to produce such a concussion in the atmosphere as instantly to break the force of the wind, and even to change its course."

The inhabitant of the "cyclone region" of America is able, according to this Parisian account, to sleep in peace in his revolving house, confident that, no matter how suddenly the tempest may come, his weather-vane and pivot cannon will take care of him and his family.

The absurdity of this statement, which does more credit to the inventiveness of the French editor than it does to his trustworthiness as a chronicler of the times, justifies the wisdom of the proverb about the necessity of going from home to hear the news.

What Can Be Done?

The poet Tennyson could take a worthless sheet of paper and by writing a poem on it make it worth $65,000—that's genius. Vanderbilt can write a few words on a sheet of paper and make it worth $5,000,000—that's capital. The United States can take an ounce and a quarter of gold and stamp upon it an "eagle bird" and make it worth $20—that's money. The mechanic can take material worth $5 and make it into a watch worth $100—that's skill. A merchant can take an article worth 75 cents and sell it for $1—that's business. A lady can purchase a very comfortable bonnet for $3.75, but she prefers one that costs $27—that's foolishness. The ditch-digger works ten hours a day and shovels three or four tons of earth for $2—that's labor. The editor of this paper can write a check for $80,000,000, but it wouldn't be worth a dime—that's rough.—Young Lutheran.

A Japanese Goddess.

In the Japanese capital there is a gigantic image of a woman made of wood, iron, and plaster. The time of its erection and the name of the designer are in dispute, but it is known to have been dedicated to Hachiman, the god of war. In height it measured fifty-four feet, the head alone, which is reached by a winding stairway in the interior of the figure, being capable of holding a company of twenty persons. The goddess holds a sword in her right hand and a huge painted wooden ball in the left. Internally the statue is the finest anatomical model in existence, every bone, joint, and ligament being represented on a gigantic scale in proportion to the height and general size of the huge figure itself. The large eyes are magnifying glasses, through which a fine view of the surrounding country may be had.

Keep Your Temper.

If you want to live to be 100, keep your temper. Never mind where you keep it, only don't let it see the light o' day, and the chances are longevity for you. Mrs. Charlotte Bell, who has just celebrated her 103d birthday, boasts that she has never been angry in her life, and, owing to this equability, her days are long in the land, though, unhappily for her, she is to end them in the almshouse. Some of us do not consider age worth the price. For there is a good deal of Greek in our compositions, in spite of the mixture of races, and we Americans would rather die young than never have a tantrum, or a "crise des nerfs," as they say in French. Righteous anger is a good thing. It generally purifies the atmosphere, even if it does take an hour or so off the allotted span.—Boston Herald.

Rose—I think I'll say yes. It is better to marry a man you respect than one you adore. Dolly—But it's so much easier to love men than to respect them.

Search Lights for Canals.

A very handy little portable plant is being used on vessels navagating the Manchester Ship Canal at night. The apparatus is practically a duplicate of that employed for lighting vessels through the Suez Canal during the last twelve months. It comprises a small engine and dynamo combined, a search-light projector of the Admiralty pattern, and a mast arc lamp and reflector. The projector barrel is twenty inches in diameter, rolled out of steel sheet, all the mountings being of gun-metal finished bright. The mirrow is twenty-inches in diameter, 10-inch focus, with a bayonet-socket attached to the barrel, so as to faciliate removal for cleaning, etc. The electrical connections are carried inside the projector, and an instrument similar to a camera is provided at one side of the projector for viewing the arc image thrown on glass.

Born, Not Made

Weak by imprudence, are many stomachs. Puny people have, invariably, weak digestion. The robust as a rule eat heartily and assimilate their food. A naturally weak stomach, or one that has become, although not so originally, derives needful aid from this thorough stomachic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. The restoration of vigor to the delicate is the prompt effect of a recourse to this professionally sanctioned and universally esteemed promoter of health. Nervousness—a symptom of chronic indigestion—is overcome by it. So are liver complaint and constipation. Incipient rheumatism and kidney trouble it defeats thoroughly, and it constitutes an efficient defense against malaria. But in order that the full benefit derivable from its use should be availed of, it should not be used in a haphazard way, but continually. The same suggestion holds good of all standard remedies.

Rapid Transit in Foreign Cities.

While New York has been laboriously discussing plans for underground electric rapid transit similar to that which London has enjoyed for two or three years past, the bustling, bright new city of Buda-Pesth, in Hungary, has been up and doing. Its municipal engineering department has authorized the construction of such a road, and the capital for it is put at $1,500,000. It is noteworthy that like schemes are being discussed for Boston and Paris, and that the latter city is anxious to get its road in operation in time to serve the necessities of the city when overwhelmed by the crowds attending its great Exposition in 1900.

How to Test a Diamond.

One of the easiest and most trustworthy modes of determining whether a supposed diamond is genuine or false is as follows: Pierce a hole in a card with a needle or pin, and then look at it, using the stone as a lens. If the supposed diamond is genuine you will see but one hole; if false, two will appear. With an imitation stone you may see the lines on the skin of your finger; with the true gem you cannot.

Largest Horse in the World.

King William, the largest horse in the world, died at Chesterton, Ind, this side of Chicago, last Tuesday. He was 27½ hands high and weighed 3,027 pounds. He was owned by Mr. Westlake, who exhibited him during the world's fair in Chicago. The big animal was taken with his fatal illness while on his way to Coney Island. He was insured for $1,000 but Mr. Westlake refused $10,000 for him in Chicago.

Specimen Cases.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

"When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

THE GREAT CONVENTION.

A Strong Ticket Nominated, and a Good Speech by Judge Zollars.

That is what it was. The democrats of DeKalb county came out in force last Saturday, June 9, to attend the democratic county convention, and see that a good ticket was nominated. They also wanted to hear Judge Allen Zollars discuss national questions. They also wanted to show the world, as the Courier had hinted they should, that the democratic party was alive and in a blooming condition. They succeeded in all these items. The day was the finest that could be, and the pleasant grove on the school grounds, was just the place for such a gathering. The local committee had fixed the grounds, the seats, the stands and the decorations in splendid shape, and all was ready long before the hour arrived. Nothing was wanting—even a well of good old democratic drink—water—was right at one side of the delegations, and was freely patronized all day. At 10:30, Chairman J. F. Shuman, called the meeting to order, and Phil. Plum, the county secretary, read the call. Then came the selection of a permanent chairman. Dr. Wood, of Garrett, nominated W. J. Frederick; Dr. Nusbaum nominated Willis Brown. Judge McClellan was also nominated, as were Hon. S. S. Shutt and Mike Kelley, the latter from Garrett. But these three declined. Then a ballot was started to determine whether it should be Frederick or Brown, when Frederick seeing there was likely to be some ill feeling engendered, patriotically withdrew, rather than to have anything unpleasant occur. This smoothed matters at once, and Brown got it by acclamation. On motion of John Picker, C. P. Urie, of Butler, was made secretary, and D. Y. Husselman by motion added the democratic editors of the county as assistants. The editors of the Review and Courier were already at work, and are the only ones that ever do this. Judge Zollars then spoke. It was a clear, logical, brainy, incisive and unanswerable argument, and no speech ever given in the county, at least for some time, had as good an effect. The stand contained several of the leading republican managers, and near by were their editors—all of them having been engaged for months in telling the people the plain lie, that the hard times were caused by a democratc administration. Judge Zollars punctured this bubble with neatness and dispatch, and as he drove home and clinched one fact after another in his unanswerable way, the promoters of the G. O. P. winced visibly, and those standing around the edges of the crowd gradually got out of range of the Judge's well aimed gatling gun, though a few who were ashamed to retreat staid till the close. They had come there to see some fun, and witness some sparring and quarreling. They got a different sort of entertainment. Like those who expected to have a little fun with Goldsmith's preacher:

Those who came to jeer,
Remained to pray

or got out of the crowd altogether. Judge Zollars was frequently greeted with hearty cheers. He closed with an eloquent appeal to the democrats, not to be discouraged. There was nothing discouraging in the outlook. Democratic principles are right, and even if obscured for a time, the light is sure to dawn.

At the close of his speech there was an adjournment till 1 p. m.

On convening after dinner, the president called on Chairman Shuman to state the rules that had been adopted at the last general committee meeting, for the guidance of the convention. There seemed to be some disagreement as to just what had been adopted, as no copy of the resolutions had been furnished to the Courier to be published. The matter was finally settled by an explanation by D. Y. Husselman who drafted the resolutions at the meeting named. Each township was to take a ballot and have its chairman collect the vote, and write a statement as to how many each candidate received and put this into an envelope and seal it and give it to the tellers. When all townships had thus given in their votes, the tellers open the envelopes, taking the townships in their order, and as each township is opened the vote is read aloud so all can hear. The secretaries at the same time copy the vote into a table, and when all have been given in, the total vote for each candidate is announced. This plan was strictly followed. On motion of Nusbaum, four tellers were appointed by the chair. Announcements came next. For commissioner in the North District, Solomon Reincehl, Fred Gfeller, Allen Shultz and Geo. Pierson; Southwest District, Jacob Walborn and R. S. S. Reed; Dr. Fred B. Wood and L. J. Gengler, both of Garrett, were announced for representative. For clerk, Dr. Sheffer announced Sol. Barney, and Wm. H. Leas was announced by a man in the Waterloo delegation. For auditor Dr. Nusbaum announced Frank A Borst; A. J. Baxter named Daniel Tomlinson, Willis Daniels named Wm. L. Blair, and Albert Hovarter announced Frank P. Seiler. For treasurer, D. D. Moody announced Henry Hines; A. W. Bair announced James O. Blake; James Kelham announced P. K. David. D. Y. Husselman announced Geo. C. Ralston for sheriff, and on motion by Frederick it was made unanimous. For, recorder Wm. J. Whetsel and John P. Crimmins were announced, but we did not see by whom. Ed. Koons nominated M. Kiplinger; J. D. Rowly named Henry L Houser; J. M. Hook announced L. C. Loveland; J. J. VanAuken named Geo. L. Lanning. Husselman announced C. E VanAuken for surveyor, and on motion by Frederick it was done by acclamation. Dr. D. A. Sebring and Charles Comesky were announced for Coroner. A motion was then made by J. J. VanAuken that we now proceed to ballot for the candidates for the several offices in the order named in the call. This was agreed to, and the voting began. The following shows the results of the various ballots:

COMMISSIONER—NORTH DISTRICT.

Allen Shultz	108¼
George Pierson	36¼
Frederick Gfeller	69¼
Solomon Reincehl	66¼
Total	275
Necessary to a choice	139

(Union and Keyser were each a vote short.)

SECOND BALLOT.

Shultz	126
Pierson	24
Gfeller	61
Reincehl	66
Total	277

(Pierson and Gfeller withdrew.)

THIRD BALLOT.

Shultz	156
Reincehl	121

And Mr. Shultz was declared the nominee. He made a neat speech, promising to save the county every dollar he could.

COMMISSIONER—SOUTHWEST DISTRICT.

Jacob Walborn	106
Robert S. S. Reed	171

And Reed was declared chosen. He, too, made a sensible speech in the same line with the one made by Mr. Shultz.

REPRESENTATIVE.

Lewis J. Gengler	120
Fred A. Wood	157

Which nominated Wood.

CLERK—FIRST BALLOT.

Solomon Barney	139½
Wm. H. Leas	135½
Total	275

(Keyser was two votes short.)

AUDITOR—FIRST BALLOT.

Frank A. Borst	111
Wm. L Blair	56
Daniel Tomlinson	55
Frank P. Seiler	55
Total	277

SECOND BALLOT.

Borst	134
Blair	38
Tomlinson	50
Seiler	55
Total	277

(Blair withdrew.)

THIRD BALLOT.

Borst	153
Tomlinson	50
Seiler	72
Total	275

(Keyser was short 2 votes.)

And Borst was declared the nominee.

TREASURER.

James O. Blake	112
P. K. David	53
Henry Hines	110
Total	275

(Keyser was 2 votes short.)

SECOND BALLOT.

Blake	125
David	39
Hines	112
Total	276

(Keyser was one vote short. David withdrew.)

THIRD BALLOT.

Blake	135
Hines	140
Total	275

(Keyser 2 votes short.)

And Hines was declared the nominee for county treasurer.

RECORDER—FIRST BALLOT.

John P. Crimmins	94⅔
Henry L. Houser	29⅔
Michael Kiplinger	30⅔
L. C. Loveland	22⅔
George L. Lanning	62⅔
Wm. J. Whetsel	32⅔
Total	273

(Union and Keyser each 2 short. Lanning and Loveland withdrew. The fractions came from Fairfield's dividing her vote into 6 equal parts.)

SECOND BALLOT.

Crimmins	128
Houser	30
Kiplinger	34
Whetsel	84
Total	276

(Union was one vote short. Houser withdrew; also Whetsel, who stood a strong second in the race.)

THIRD BALLOT.

Crimmins	169
Kiplinger	108
Total	277

And Crimmins was declared the nominee for recorder.

CORONER.

Charles Comesky	177
Dr. D. A. Sebring	85
Total	262

(Union was 15 short; at least 15 were not announced. They had voted for "Dr. Whitecloud" as a joke on I. M. Zent, agent of the Wabash road at Auburn, and Comeskey was declared nominated.

The county chairman announced that the county was entitled to two more delegates in the state convention, and it was at last decided to let him appoint two delegates at large at some convenient time. (The change is made by the state committee, who use 150 for a divisor. This would have given one more each to Keyser and Union, had it been so decided earlier.) The convention then adjourned.

Notes of the Convention.

Will Leas made a splendid fight and got right in sight of the promised land. But like Mr. Seiler, he was handicapped in several ways. He deserved a bigger vote.

Squire Hines had an up hill job but he got there against all the odds placed in his way. We know of no more deserving man.

Dr. Wood was a delegate, but as soon as the first nomination was over—his own for representative he got up and left for home. He was seen there no more. It created quite a laugh, and the Keyser delegation had to fill the vacancy with a new man.

John Duncan ought to have a chromo as big as the school grounds for his faithfulness in helping to preserve order. Same for John Koons.

Attorney Phillips is our authority, for the statement that several republican leaders came to town to make a desperate attempt to drink up all the whisky available. They got a part of it but not all, as was manifest in the condition of a couple of democrats. We think Phillips has the right idea. We noticed about the same state of things.

Ab. Kelley, John Shuman, H. K. Leas and a lot more we can't remember, did themselves proud in making arrangements and entertaining the visiting brethren.

The ladies of the Eastern Star, and those of the U. B. church set good tables, and worked very hard. They got a good patronage and deserved more.

Ab. Kelley has thanks of several friends for a sumptuous dinner. What Ab. and Mrs Ab. can't do in that line is not worth looking after.

At least two democrats, we are sorry to say, indulged in "two much of the platform" as used to be said of us, when we were rather in the lead in the matter of the consumption of that which maketh the nose red, and causeth to reel, same like Hank Little, of the Clipper. We say we were sorry to see this, for we believe honestly, that to-day, there is less consumption of liquor among the mass of democrats, than among either the republicans or the populists. The two parties last named, generally have a big temperance plank in their platform but they both take their share of red liquor without as much as a wink. In the case of the populists, when they adopted their temperance plank two years ago, we were present, and noted the absence of their leading spirits. But about fifteen minutes later, these "leading spirits" came dropping back into the hall, one by one—but each had a scent of cloves, and a little beer froth hanging to his mustache. And we know of two or three good temperance democrats who were caught by this trick.

Several republicans who had never voted any other ticket but that were present and showed great interest in the meeting, and some nodded assent to the words of wisdom that fell from Judge Zollars' lips. We are glad to see these signs of repentance, and hope to have more of them with us before the campaign closes.

There were in the various delegations, a great many cards, containing a finely excuted map of the county in colors, in every way as good as those heretofore got of Burford at Indianapolis. But they were all done by the printers in the Courier office and prove that our county officers need not to go away from home to get the county work done. It would be just as sensible to go away from home to get the votes that are needed to elect them.

Of course there is some dissatisfaction with the ticket as made. There always is. But it should be remembered that the 277 delegates came from all parts of the county, and ought to represent the the sentiments of all the people. If they do not represent the people, then the system should be abolished.

George Lanning and Frank Seiler each made an excellent canvass. But both were handicapped by adverse interests, that could not possibly be overcome. They are among our worthiest young democrats, and deserver better luck. That they should have received the votes they did under such circumstances, proves the high opinion the people at large have of them.

The whole list of candidates, as announced last week in the Courier showed the names of good men. As to their personal character and deserts, no mistake would have been made by taking any of them.

Now, boys let us go to work for the whole ticket, and not permit any of them to "fall by the wayside."

Republicans who are standing around chuckling about the "dissatisfaction" will wear a different kind of expression after the Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

W. L. Blair and Daniel Tomlinson have been wheel horses among the democracy for years. We feel a pang of regret, that their services for the party have never been rewarded. They are men of sterling ability, and we could gladly vote for them for the place they had chosen to ask for. But in a strong contest like this, some one must go down. Both of them went down with honor.

P. K. David is another of the candidates whose situation was unfavorable and he had no chance. He is a man of excellent ability and would have made a splendid officer.

Jacob Walborn would have made an excellent commissioner, but he did not care to run and only came out at a late day at the urgent request of friends. The same may be said of Mr. Reincehl, Mr. Gfeller and Mr. Pierson.

There was a list of good names among those wanting to be recorder, Mr. Loveland, Mr. Kiplinger, Mr. Whetsel and Mr. Houser. But like Lanning, when the rest of the ticket was selected, they had no show.

And the bands played well, both Garrett and Auburn, and made a nice appearance.

IN paint the best is the cheapest. Don't be misled by trying what is said to be "just as good," but when you paint insist upon having a genuine brand of

Strictly Pure White Lead

It costs no more per gallon than cheap paints, and lasts many times as long.

The Greatest Sight of a Great City.

Paris has her Arch Triomphale, London her Tower, Rome her St. Peter's, and New York her Old Trinity, but Chicago has her Masonic Temple—as great an architectual wonder as any above enumerated. In fact the Masonic Temple is more wondeful than any building in any great city of the world. Erected as a business building, with no direct reference to art, it is nevertheless unique as a structure considered from every standpoint. The frame of the building is of steel bolted together, 4,700 tons of steel having been used. The walls are of stone and pressed brick with marble and bronze trimmings and terra cotta partitions, 2,200 tons of the latter entering into to the work. There are 88 miles of electric wiring, and the plate glass used would, if laid flat on the ground, cover four acres. The pumping apparatus used in running the battery of fourteen elevators, would easily supply water for a city of 60,000 souls. The elevators run at a rate of nine miles an hour and each elevator runs every year 123,136 miles, equal to a journey around the earth five times. There are twenty-one stories in the huge edifice and on the top floor is being fitted up the finest Observatory and Roof Garden in the world, one entirely in keeping with the fact that the Temple has no parallel in the civilzed world. At a height of 302 feet up in the air visitors will see the finest panorama ever displayed to view. The blue waters of Lake Michigan, the World's Fair, the beautiful park system of the city and a thousand points of interest in and about the great city are unfolded to the view. The Observatory and Roof Garden is superbly fitted up for the entertainment of visitors. Two exquisite scenic theaters, each 17 x 52 feet, have complete stages and the finest conveniences known. In one will be exhibited, with a wealth of electric light effect, "A Day in the Alps," an improved edition of the wonderful scenic theater seen by over 200,000 people in the Electric Building of the World's Fair. The other theater will display in scenic form a wonderful reproduction of the famous Court of Honor and MacMonnies Fountain, the master piece of the Columbian Exposition. This feature will be given electric effects, real water and prismatic fountains. The theaters will be on the continuous performance style. Two thousand electric lights will transform night into day, and a well-arranged cafe will be in operation, serving mild and cooling drinks and other refreshments. No addition has been made to the price of admission, even in view of the many thousands of dollars expended, and it will remain at twenty-five cents. It can already be seen that the Masonic Temple Observatory and Roof Garden is going to be one of the most attractive resorts in Chicago. It is the greatest sight of a great city.

Degree of Honor Picnic.

The following verses are so appropriate to the occasion that we borrow them and fix up a little to suit the A. O. U. W. picnic that is given here on Old Settlers' Day. Read them carefully, then patronize the A. O. U. W.

It's June agin, an' in my soul I feel the fillin' joy
That's sure to come this time o' year to every little boy;
For every June the Sunday schools at picnics may be seen,
Where "fields beyont the swellin' floods stan' dressed in livin' green";
Where little girls are skeered to death with spiders, bugs an' ants,
An' little boys get grass-stains on their go-to-meetin' pants.
It's June agin, an' with it all what happiness is mine—
There's goin' to be a picnic an' I'm goin' to jine!
One year I jined the baptists, an' goodness! how it rained!
(But gramps says that that's the way "baptizo" is explained.)
And once I jined the 'piscopils an' had a heap o' fun—
But the boss of all the picnics was the presbyterian!
They had so many puddin's, sallids, sandwidges an' pies,
That a feller wisht his stummick was as hungry as his eyes!
Oh, yes, the eatin' presbyterians give yer is so fine
That when they have a picnic you bet I'm goin' to jine!
But at this time the Workmen have special claims on me,
For they're goin' to give a picnic on the 21st D V.
Why should a liberal universalist ever try to dodge,
To share the joys of fellowship with every friendly lodge?
However het'rodox their articles of faith elsewise may be,
Their doctrine of ham sandwidges is a savin' grace to me!
So on the 21st of June, the weather bein fine,
They're goin' to give a picnic, and I'm goin' to jine.

Family Reunion.

There was a regular family reunion at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson in Waterloo last Sunday. All the "boys" were at home and several fatted calves were killed, to use the well known illustration. The sons, except O. C. Dickinson are scattered far and wide and are likely to be still further separated. Oliver is the only one who still resides in the old home town. He is the station agent of the Lake Shore road at that place, and has been a faithful employe for several years. Charles is a resident of Tecumseh, Mich., where he is engaged in the meat market and butchering business. His old friends in DeKalb may feel interested in hearing from him. He has lately built a two story brick building two rooms wide and in a very fine location. He occupies one of the first floor rooms with his meat market, and the other is profitably rented. Bird Dickinson, is a jeweler and has been lately employed as head jeweler in the establishment of Mr. V. B. Rowley at Hillsdale, Mich. Rowley is the watch inspector for all the divisions of the Lake Shore road at that point. Bird soon goes west, to join Robert McDougall at Denver, Colorado. His card will then read, "L. B. Dickinson, Optician, Jeweler and Fine Watchmaker, Denver, Colorado." Will Dickinson is at Elkhart, Ind., where he is in a good position in the large jewelry establishment of Mix & Co. Forrest is at Tecumseh, Mich., where he is head clerk in the store of Avery & Co. the leading grocery house of the place. The "boys" are seen to be flourishing. One point may be worth mentioning. At the reunion the other day the "group" was weighed the five lads pulling the scales to the extent of 976. But for the lacking 24 lbs charged against Charlie, they would stand at 200 each. This week, they are scattered again. Who can say when all will meet again?

Government Ownership of Railroads.

A short time ago we made a note of the fact that Dr. Parker, of the Kendallville News, had gone off after a strange god. He has taken up with the populist idea of having the government buy up and own and operate all the railroads, telegraphs, etc., in the country. We spoke slightingly of the idea and the Doctor replied that our "argument was not good." We beg to say we made no argument—attempted no argument. We thought the plan so ridiculous that the Doctor would need no argument if he would do as we suggested, "stop and think it over." But he didn't stop and think, but goes on again to say what a nice thing it would be. Let us all stop and think. Suppose the plan were to be accepted by our people and by the general government. The first thing to be done would be to buy the railroads, etc. Now, suppose they did not want to sell. That would block the game at once. Suppose a part of them would sell and a part would not, which would likely happen. What then? Confusion and trouble would be the result. But suppose all would sell. Then where would the government get the money to buy with? We are not now, thanks to a republican law, getting in money enough to pay our running expenses. Nor are we able to pay off our debt already made. How then could we raise several thousands of millions that it would take to buy the roads? But suppose we could get the money and the roads were willing to sell and we buy them. What then? Some roads pay and some do not, What the government made on one road would be lost on another. How then would we be better off? But railroads are better and more economically managed now than could possibly be done by the government, for now the employes are selected by merit. The government would select them for their political influence. This would get in a set of men who are incompetent or worse. But suppose all were good men. There would be nearly 1,000 of these government employes, right in these two small counties of DeKalb and Noble. Some one would have the appointing of all these men. This would be done in one of two ways. Either under the too frequently ridiculous plan of the "civil service commission," or else by the president, the heads of departments or by the senators or congressmen. Then we would have a delightful state of things. A president might be up for re-election as Harrison was in 1892, and he would have these 1,000 men all in his power. They would have to be "Harrison men," or resign, and the public would suffer at the hands of new men. Or, if a part of the old ones were retained. it would be the best and most abject politicians, but perhaps the poorest railroad men. And again, the service would suffer. Then, Harrison was defeated at the election. A few months later, Cleveland came into power, and here would be a chance to change 1,000 men in two counties at once. All the experienced men who had been opposed to Cleveland would have to give place to men of no experience and of no ability, except that they may have voted the right way. If the president did not make the change, the congressman would. And when we see the appalling blunders a congressman can make by appointing a dozen postmasters, we may well stand aghast at the prospect when he has the power to appoint 1,000 men, on some of whom will depend not the convenience alone, but the lives of tens of thousands of people. And then, the condition of labor and similar interests under such a system! Here are 1,000 men, many with dependent families, who every four years must give place to another 1,000, or take a risk of doing so. This would make, in the two counties, 2,000 laboring men, whose occupation would be all the time in an unsettled state. Besides, all these men would, from the start, lose their independence of character for they would be holding their places all the time at the will of a superior, or the uncertainties of party politics. From the president down to trackman, corruption and the abuse of power would be infused into every department and grade. There would be no responsibility, except to a political boss, and this boss would himself have no certain length of power, but be subject to be turned out by the people at large at stated or not stated times. All these are but the plainer items that such a condition would make not only possible but probable. We put this out merely as a starter, and a little study will make plain a larger path to greater evils.

Obituary.

Charles Calkin was born in Corunna, Ind., September 2, 1867; died in Chicago, Ill., June 19, 1894, aged 26 years, 9 months and 17 days. He was a bright, winsome boy, a true friend, a dutiful son and brother and was universally loved by all his acquaintances and friends. For some time he was deputy surveyor of DeKalb Co. For the past three years he made his home in Chicago, where he married Miss Etta Highland. He leaves a wife, mother, five brothers, two sisters, and a large number of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. Dying with that dread disease, smallpox, his wife and friends were not permitted to see him during his sickness or to bury him. The funeral services were held at Corunna on Monday afternoon at the Christian church, Rev. J. N. Wilson, of Auburn, officiating. Members of the Auburn and Garrett Cornet Bands were in attendance, playing several dirges, etc., the music of which was quite largely the arrangement of the deceased when a member of the band. Eloquent in its silence was the old cornet of the deceased, draped in black, carried at the head of the procession by Frank A. Borst, of Auburn, one of the oldest members of the band, and for years intimately associated with Mr. Calkin in its success.

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Fitzsimmons and Choynski Fight a Draw at Boston—A Crossing Horror at Patterson, N. J.—Escaping Convict Shot—Steamer Goes Down.

A DRAW.

Bob Fitzsimmons and Joe Choynski Meet in the Ring in Boston.

At the Boston Theater Bob Fitzsimmons, champion middle-weight of the world and challenger of Jim Corbett, turned almost certain defeat into victory. Had not the police interfered it was ten to one he would have finished Joe Choynski in another punch. The match was declared a draw. None present claim that Choynski was worthy to combat the Australian. Three thousand men enjoyed the battle, the like of which even Boston has never seen.

In the last round Fitz started to finish Choynski and made a terrific swing for Choynski's jaw with his left. It was a trifle high but struck the Californian on the ear felling him. He staggered to his feet but a push from Fitz sent him sprawling in his corner, clinging to the ropes, he pulled himself up and clinched the Antipodean. Daly parted them and Fitzsimmons again landed his left on Joe's jaw, flooring him for the last time. As he essayed to rise, Capt. Warren made his appearance and this time said that under no conditions would the battle continue.

According to the articles which read if both men were on their feet and willing to go on at the finish of the stipulated eight rounds, it should be declared a draw, there was but one decision for Daly to make and the fight was declared a draw.

Urge Some Changes.

Annapolis (Md.) special: The report of the board of visitors to the United States naval academy, now being prepared, will recommend several important changes, modifying in several particulars existing laws relating to the academy. The board will suggest that the course of instruction shall be for six years instead of four and a two-year cruise at sea, as at present. Occasional practice cruises of four months each are recommended. The course of studies is modified so that some of the elemetary branches will be taught during the first year. The age limit of entrance to the academy is fixed at from 15 to 17 and the entrance shall be in May only.

Hopkins Veto.

Chicago special: Mayor Hopkins has sent to the city council a veto of the Sunday closing ordinance which was passed by the aldermen at the last meeting of the council. He characterized the ordinance as class legislation, affecting certain lines of business only and therefore in conflict with the constitution. The veto undoes all the work of the labor unions and the Retail Clerks' association which have been agitating and organizing for Sunday rest for a long time.

A Conflict of Opinion.

Sullivan (Ind.) special: Throughout this county the miners generally assert their purpose not to accept the compromise adopted at Columbus. No mines are yet in operation in this county although it is the belief of many that work will gradually be resumed and that in a week or ten days most miners will be at work. This is the evident expectation of the operators and railroad officials as preparations are being made to resume traffic.

A Crossing Horror.

The Deckertown express on the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad, going at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour, ran into and demolished an electric car at the River street crossing, Patterson, N. J. There were eight passengers, a motorman, and a conductor on the electric car. Three of the passengers were fatally and five seriously injured.

Two Men Killed in a Wreck.

As an east-bound freight train on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis road was about one mile west of Batesville, Ind., a car jumped the track, taking nine more with it. Tommy Haley of Wheeling, Va., and Michael Cunningham of Plymouth, Pa., who were beating their way East, were in one of the wrecked cars and were killed.

American Whaler Lost.

Nanimo (B. C.) special: The steamer Willamete, from Dutch Harbor, brings a meager report of the loss of an American whaler bark, James Allen, off Atka Island, 200 miles west of Alaska, May 11. The steamer Dora picked up two of her crew on Bonen Island, June 7. The men were starving.

The Trestle Gave Way.

A trestle on the Bellaire, Zanesville & Cincinnati railroad gave way near Woodsfield, Ohio, precipitating the engine and tender to the bottom of the ravine. The fireman, Theo. Allen, was instantly killed, and the engineer and front brakeman were seriously injured.

Convict Shot.

Six convicts attempted to escape from the State penitentiary farm near Tchula, Miss., and in the fight with the guards George Nial, a life convict, was instantly killed. The mutiny was led by Brooks Story, the notorious train robber.

A Steamer Sinks.

The steamer, City of Madison, with 100 bicyclists on board ran on rocks and sunk in the Ohio River at Madison, Ind. All the passengers were saved with life boats.

Congressman Simpson Better.

Representative Jerry Simpson, writes from Berkley Springs, W. Va., that he is improving so rapidly that he expects to make a visit to the capitol soon.

May Reject It.

Brazil (Ind.) special: The miners have received the official report of the action of the Columbus convention. They are greatly dissatisfied, and a mass meeting is called to decide whether to accept or reject the scale. It is believed the scale will be rejected. Vice-President P. H. Penna is in the city and will be present at the meeting. Mr. Penna says that the scale was the very best that could be secured for the miners, as other laborers have been reduced about 40 per cent., while the miners have only been reduced 10 per cent. A miner residing at Newburg, overheard Mr. Penna's remarks and quickly assured the official that the miners in his locality were very indignant and would ask Dunkerly and Mr. McBride to resign. Mr. Penna promptly replied that it would be unnecessary, as the present officials had already instructed President McBride to tender their resignations.

THE TRADE REVIEW.

There Is Greater Activity and Demand in the West.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade says: The strike of the bituminous coal miners will end soon, wherever the authority and advice of their general organization can end it; there is little room to doubt that the coal famine will then begin to abate. Sometime must elapse before the supplies of fuel will enable all works to resume that have no other reason for suspending. The actual output of pig iron weekly, June 1, was only 82,517 tons against 126,732 April 1, and 174,029 a year ago, but a reduction of 248,552 tons in unsold stock indicates that a quantity nearly double the output has been taken for consumption. Many boot and shoe shops have stopped, but shipments from the East are 10 per cent. larger for June thus far than last year. The demand is mainly confined to low-priced goods and recently was narrower for women's shoes. Woolen mills are closing rapidly. It is asserted that scarcely any have orders to occupy them beyond July 1, in men's wear, but in the demand for dress goods a somewhat better tone is perceived. The sales of wool for two weeks have been 5,626,553 against 3,627,176 last year, and 11,520,100 in 1892. The New York and Philadelphia markets are dull and Boston shows a slight decline in prices. Western holders are expecting higher prices than can at present be realized in Eastern markets. Further concessions have not enlarged the demand for cotton goods and a recent report that the production was close to last year is said to be based upon returns from only the more fortunate mills. That goods are accumulating is evident, but sales are distinctly improved with the weather. Wheat is only a fraction higher, the exports and ordinary consumption for the year having already exceeded government estimates. Cotton yields a fraction. In liabilities the failures the first week of June only $2,507,228 were the aggregate liabilities thus far reported, and in failures in May, $13,514,760. Number of failures this week, 232 in the United States, against 313 last year, and forty in Canada, against thirty-four last year.

PANAMA ABLAZE.

Two Hundred and Twenty-five Buildings Already in Ruins.

Panama special: A fire which broke out Thursday afternoon has already destroyed 100 houses and is endangering fully a quarter of all the buildings in the city. A high wind is spreading the flames. At 6 o'clock the fire was not under control on any side. Families living near the burning quarter are panic stricken. Scores of them are trying to move their portable goods, but the confusion and excitement is so great that they can find no workingmen to help them.

More than a hundred houses were destroyed in the early evening. At 7 o'clock it was reported at the police station that about 225 buildings were in ruins and the public market was threatened. Thick showers of sparks and brands fell throughout the district where the fire started, and thousands of persons were at work on roofs clearing off combustible materials, and pouring water down the heated walls. The wind blows a gale. The streets leading from the burning district are choaked with crowds of workers and spectators, and with families trying to drag their household goods to places of safety. No full estimate of the loss is yet possible. A vast quantity of merchandise in shops and storage has been burned. The losses on private houses has been nearly as great. A million dollars worth of property has been totally ruined, and much more has been badly damaged. The present estimates of the loss vary between $1,250,000 and $1,500,000.

A BIG FIRE.

The Mammoth Abattoir at Jersey City Is a Total Loss.

The Central Stock Yard and Transit Company's big abattoir at the foot of Sixth Street, Jersey City, N. J., caught fire and despite the efforts of the firemen assisted by a dozen fire tugs on the river, the building, together with nearly everything it contained, was destroyed. It is estimated that the loss will be $1,500,000, which, it is believed to be covered by insurance. The fire broke out in the fat house, but its cause could not be ascertained. Frederick Nadin, the engineer in charge, and John Cahill, his assistant, say that a big volume of flame suddenly burst out at the south end of the building and spread so rapidly that they barely managed to escape with their lives. Nearly 6,000 sheep and a score of cattle in the building perished.

The principal losers are the members of the Central Stock Yards and Transit Company. The majority of stock is held by D. H. Sherman, John R. McPherson, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. They are all insured. Eight hundred men are thrown out of work.

RELEASED ON BOND.

Pending an Appeal of Their Cases to the Supreme Court.

Chicago special: Justice Harlan has granted a supersedeas in the case of Francis and Percival B. Coffin of Indianapolis.

The Coffins were charged with wrecking the National Bank of Indianapolis and are serving terms in the Michigan City Penitentiary, where they have been confined but a short time. The supersedeas will release the men pending the appeal. The Indianapolis court refused to grant a stay of the sentence pending an appeal and the two men were taken at once to prison. Ex-Attorney General Miller of Indianapolis, who is ex-President Harrison's law partner, made the application for a writ of error, and Justice Harlan heard it, sitting as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The petition attacked the jurisdiction of the lower court and alleged numerous errors. Special District Attorney J. W. Kern of Indianapolis, opposed the writ. Francis Coffin's bond was fixed at $25,000 and his brother's at $12,000.

DIED OF THE PLAGUE.

Seventeen Hundred Deaths at Hong Kong.

Hong Kong special: Seventeen hundred Chinese have died of the plague here since its outbreak on May 4. Despite previous reports to the contrary, the European population up to the present has not been attacked by the disease. The stringent precautionary measures taken by the Europeans are the cause of their immunity from sickness. The epidemic is now decreasing in severity. There has been a general exodus from the Chinese quarters. The condemned streets in the native quarter have been blockaded by the authorities. Placards have been posted in the streets of Canton, saying that if the Governor destroys the Chinese quarters of Hong Kong, the British quarters of Canton, on the island of Shah-Mien, which is also the principal European section of Canton, will be burned.

His Neck in Danger.

Chicago special: Unless Assessin Prendergast's attorneys are confident that Governor Altgeld will interpose his reprieve to save their client's neck, they will hasten to give him whatever chance he may have before a jury to decide as to his insanity. It seems certain that unless such a jury shall declare him to be insane, or the Governor interfere, Prendergast will be hanged July 2. Judge Payne will not again postpone the execution. He intimated as much when the case was before him on the hearing of the motion for a continuance. It was gossip in the court room that Judge Payne has spent many hours looking up the law in the case and that he finds no authority giving him the right to grant a stay of execution where the Supreme Court and the Governor have both declined to disturb the judgment of the lower court.

Sunday School Convention.

At the Indiana State Sunday School Convention held at Muncie, the following officers were elected: President, Charles F. Coffin of Indianapolis; Vice President, Judge J. S. Kirkpatrick of Kokomo; Secretary and Treasurer, Charles Weaver of Kokomo. Executive Committee, M. T. Reeves of Columbus; the Rev. T. U. Kuhn of Tipton; J. Morris of Rockville; the Rev. W. T. Scott of Franklin; S. W. Axtell of Bloomington; the Rev. A. Myers of Indianapolis; the Rev. J. A. Pollock of Lebanon, and Charles L. Weaver, John D. McNeely, and Charles F. Coffin of Indianapolis. In addition to these there were twenty-four vice-presidents selected. This was the most successful meeting in the history of the organization.

Fifty People Drowned.

Castle Bar Island (Ireland) special: A dispatch from Westport Quay, about eleven miles from this city, announces a terrible disaster to a party of harvesters who were on their way to Scotland. A passenger boat to Westport Quay from Achil Island, having on board eighty harvesters, who were to be shipped to Scotland from Westport, capsized. According to the first reports of the disaster, thirty out of the eighty passengers were drowned, but later advices say that it is believed that fifty of the harvesters lost their lives. The boat capsized off Annagh Head. Eighteen bodies have already been recovered but the exact number of persons saved is not known.

A Change Probable.

The sensation in political circles at Lexington, Ky., is the published statement that Gen. Basil Duke, Louisville, editor of the Southern Magazine and brother-in-law and chief of staff of Gen. John Morgan, the famous Confederate raider, has assured Major Henry Clay McDowell that he will stump the Ashland District for him and against Col. Breckenridge if the latter is re-nominated. Major McDowell resides at Ashland, Henry Clay's estate, his wife being a granddaughter of Clay, and he has practically consented to be the Republican candidate if Breckenridge is re-nominated. Gen. Duke is a stalwart Democrat.

Still in the Lead.

In a report on the production of gold and silver, which has been transmitted to Congress, E. E. Preston, director of the mint, estimates the approximate gold yield of the mines of the United States in 1893 at 1,739,323 fine ounces, of the value of $35,755,000, as compared with 1,597,100 fine ounces of the value of $33,014,981 in 1892, an increase in 1893 of 142,223 fine ounces of the value of $2,940,019. According to Mr. Preston the United States still holds the first place in the list of the gold-producing countries of the world.

Four Hundred Orphans.

Troppau special: The official estimates of the extent of the disaster caused by the explosions of fire damp in the coal mines at Karwin say that 204 miners are missing and that only twenty bodies have been recovered. Of the miners who met their death by these explosions, 100 were married men, and they leave 400 children to mourn their loss. Experts who have examined the pits declare that they were in a dangerous condition weeks ago.

Blown Half a Mile.

Evansville (Ill.) special: A terrific cyclone passed over the northern part of this county recently, totally destroying the house of James Merry, twisting trees eight inches in diameter into splinters and destroying other property. Henry Ferguson and son, who were driving in a wagon, were caught by the cyclone and carried nearly one-half mile, injuring both. The storm lasted about twenty minutes.

Small Cyclone.

A small cyclone struck Seward, O. T., doing considerable damage, the house of R. S. S. Richey being blown down and his 10-year-old child fatally hurt by falling timbers.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

OCCURRENCES DURING THE PAST WEEK.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes of the State.

Hoosier Happenings

HAZLEWOOD is to have a $4,000 school house.

JACK, the pairt thrower at Fort Wayne, still continues to ruin dresses.

ALEXANDRIA industries are nearly all running on full time and with full forces.

L. E. & W. HAD a freight wreck in Tippecanoe County. Seven cars demolished.

THE sawmill of Fernadid Nash, four miles from Windfall, was destroyed by fire. Loss $2,000, with no insurance.

SOUTH BEND surgeons have removed a bullet from Martin DeLange's head. He was shot in the Ecuador Revolutionary War many years ago.

HERMAN F. Wilkie, the absconding justice of the peace of Elwood, has been captured at Columbus, Miss. The extent of his deficit will reach $50,000.

EDWARD KUHN, near Shelbyville, died, with symptoms of strychina poisoning. Many people think that unknown persons administered the poison, while others say that he suicided.

FRANK MULLEN of Kokomo, aged 14, while attempting to creep up on some birds in a cherry tree, accidentally shot himself, the load of shot plowing through his face, tearing away the right cheek and eye. He may recover.

GEORGE MCCLISH, foreman of the Wabash bridge gang on the Michigan Division of the Big Four, who was badly hurt by the toppling over of a derrick at the Fall Creek bridge, obtained a verdict against the company for $2,500.

FIRE destroyed Shot's transfer barn at Frankfort. Three horses, one buggy, and a cab, besides considerable other property, was destroyed. Mr. Shot, in endeavoring to save his horses, was badly burned on his arms and face. Loss $2,000; no insurance.

J. A. PETERS of Swayzee, on June 11, received a Colt's revolver from Dr. Fravill of St. Louis, that had lain on the battlefield for over thirty-three years and is quite a war relic. The recipient was an old soldier and in the battle of Chickamauga.

EDITOR of a Northern Indiana paper, who is unmarried, recently advertised that he would send his paper for one year, free of charge, to every maiden who would send her address and a lock of her hair. He has now the largest circulation in the neighborhood and enough hair to stuff a mattress.

WILLIAM DEMOSS, a German plate-glass worker, employed at the Elwood Diamond Plate-glass Factory, was helping to carry a large plate when it broke and a piece fell across his arms, cutting them to the bone, severing muscles, ligaments, and arteries, from which he nearly bled to death.

LAWRENCE HOLBERT, a wealthy young farmer of Shoals, was accidentally killed by No. 3 westbound passenger on the B. & O. S. W. He was sitting on the end of the cross-ties and the engine struck him in the head, crushing his skull in a horrible manner. He was under the influence of liquor when the accident occurred.

PATENTS have been granted to Indiana inventors as follows: Theophilus M. Ressie, Indianapolis, trolley wire-finder; Charles E. Johnson, Mt. Jackson, ribbon-reversing mechanism for typewriting machine; Peter Kirchner, Fort Wayne, water alarm for steam boilers; Enoch Notion, Indianapolis, assignor to W. E. Notion, Kokomo, duster.

MRS. ORLANDO SHANDY, the wife of a prominent farmer and Justice of the Peace, living two miles northeast of Petersburg, was missed from her room and a search was made by her family and nearest neighbors, and two hours later her dead body was discovered floating in the cistern. It is thought that she was demented and committed suicide.

AN unusually sad affair occurred in Decatur. Just as the remains of the 2-year-old daughter of George Wertzberger were about to be conveyed from the residence to the church for the funeral little Blanche Wertzberger, the 7-year-old sister of the dead child, became suddenly distracted and died in a few minutes. The funeral was postponed and the two sisters were buried in the same grave.

BEN. CUNNINGHAM, Hugh Pursley, and Henry Hurt were arrested at Kokomo for freight car robbing. They broke open a car of groceries on the Clover Leaf siding and had removed a large amount of provisions when detected. They are all hard working men of families, and were driven to the act by starvation, having been idle many months because they could find no work.

A GANG of shrewd counterfeiters has been operating in Elwood for sometime, and the local officers are unable to discover who is doing the work. The money is of the denomination of dollars of 1882, halves of 1888 and nickels of a later date. The nickels are almost perfect, while the other coins are badly milled around the edges. The city is being flooded with the spurious coin, and suspicion points to several. About one year ago the city was flooded with counterfeit money, and certain people were suspected. Things got too hot for them, and they suddenly left the city. A few weeks ago they returned here, and almost at once the counterfeit money began to appear. Sensational developments are expected.

JAMES BAIRD, a union brickmaker at Terre Haute, has been dishonorably discharged from the brotherhood because he turned out with the militia to go to the coal regions.

WABASH COUNTY will have a fine soldiers' monument, the County Commissioners having acquiesced in the petition of members of James H. Emmet Post, G. A. R., and the other Grand Army Posts of the county to make an appropriation under the law. Plans and specifications for the monument will be ordered at once. The amount to be appropriated has not yet been determined.

THE first lady that ever took up photography as a profession in the United States lives in Middlebury and still follows that line of work.

MISS EMILEE of Rockport, died of consumption, caused by inhaling hair into her lungs. Miss Emilee was a hair dresser. About ten days ago she was taken seriously ill and a physician was called. She complained at first that she felt worm-like movements in her lungs. This was followed by severe coughing. Her lungs began sloughing away and she lived only ten days. Hair-like worms were found by the physician who treated her and he is preparing a written statement for the medical journals.

Y. M. C. A. GOLDEN JUBILEE.

A Great Organization's Fiftieth Birthday Appropriately Celebrated.

The most important international assemblage lately held in either hemisphere was that of the Young Men's Christian Association, which has just closed in London. This coming together celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the parent organization and the golden jubilee was ushered in not only with appropriate ceremonies but by the deliberation of a representative body composed of delegates from the whole world. The United States sent one of the strongest delegations, as a matter of course, but England also was impressively represented, while all the countries of Europe, excepting Turkey, had eminent men to speak for them. Over 1,000 delegates besides nearly 4,000 visitors, participated.

GEORGE WILLIAMS

The event had been anticipated in a series of advance preparations for the past two years. The preliminary call had been issued since last year by the International Committee, now located at Geneva, Switzerland. It is three years since the first steps were taken at Amsterdam, Holland, for the celebration by the appointment of Gustave Tophel, Chairman; Edward Barde, Vice Chairman; Jean Billon, Secretary; Frederick Binna, Treasurer and twenty-two other gentlemen, representing every civilized nation. Great as was the representation of the United States, it was but typical of every land. The American delegation of over one hundred, headed by John Wanamaker, Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, General Secretary Richard S. Moss of the National Committee, Secretary R. R. McBurney of New York, Rev. George A. Hall, New York's State Secretary; Luther D. Wishard, Secretary National Committee, G. N. Bierce and E. L. Shuey, representing Ohio, Geo. Taylor from California, Rev. Dr. A. H. Scott of Perth, Ont., and others as eminent in the work, went to bespeak this country's aims in the conference.

WHERE THE Y. M. C. A. WAS ORGANIZED.

The place of meeting was Exeter Hall, one of London's most imposing public edifices. The assemblage was in session over a week, and its deliberations included measures for the beginning of a crusade that is designed to spread the movement in every country. And not least among its historical features was the presence, as an honored delegate, of the man who founded, fifty years ago, the first Young Men's Christian Association, George Williams. He is now the wealthy head of the house in which he clerked at the time when he began his organizing propaganda in a little room in London with a few of his fellow clerks.

On the opening day of the conference the Committee on Credentials went into session and the certificates in all languages were duly approved. The following evening at 7 o'clock there was a reception of delegates at Exeter Hall proper, which was decorated with the emblems of all nationalities for the occasion. The official welcome came from 8 to 9 o'clock in the evening when the venerable George Williams received the tributes and courtesies of all the visitors.

THE "MODEL TOWN."

Deplorable Condition of Affairs at Pullman, Ill.

The condition of affairs in Pullman, Ill., is calling for investigation in all directions. Four thousand men are idle there, having struck against a reduction of wages to the starvation point. The entire town of Pullman is private property. The Pullman Company owns not only the lots and houses, but the streets and alleys, school-house sites and parks. Not a dollar's worth of what, in other towns, is public property has ever passed out of the ownership of Mr. Pullman's corporation. Not an acre in Pullman has been dedicated to the public use. The "model town" is not a town. It has no town organization nor officers. It is managed by the private corporation, and it is taxed as a farm or manufacturing plant is taxed. It is a peculiar institution in this respect. The officers of the private corporation can fence up the streets and alleys and evict the schools from the school buildings if they shall so determine.

BRECKINRIDGE'S OPPONENT.

He Is 44 Years Old, Unmarried, and Has Always Lived in Kentucky.

W. C. Owens, who is waging such a desperate fight against Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge in old Kentucky, and may defeat him for Congressman, is a native of Scott County, Ky. where he has always lived. He is 44 years old, unmarried, and a graduate of Columbia College Law School, New York City. In 1876 he was elected to the Kentucky Legislature, where he remained five terms. He was a delegate at large to the Democratic National Convention in 1892. He has for several years been looked upon as Breckinridge's successor.

W. C. OWENS.

Telegraphic Clicks.

HILL and Parker, in jail for murder at Colfax, Wash., were lynched by a mob.

H. R. WOODS, a Cripple Creek, Col., business man, was kidnaped by striking miners.

LIEUT. GEORGE S. HARRISON, Tenth Infantry, is dead at Fort Mary, N. M. He graduated in 1892.

MRS. BURCHARD has been released at Huron, S. D., on the ground that she was justified in shooting her husband.

THE resignation of E. Ellery Anderson as receiver of the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway has been accepted.

HORATIO F. LILLIBRIDGE, president of the American Biscuit Company, died suddenly at his residence in Minneapolis.

EX-JUDGE JOHN M. BROOMALL, whose speech in Congress on the civil rights bill has become a classic, died in Media, Pa.

THE farm and well machinery plant of R. R. Howell & Co., of Minneapolis, was completely gutted by fire, entailing a loss of $130,000. The insurance is small.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

The Senate and House.

The liquor and cotton schedules of the tariff bill were disposed of in the Senate Monday, the prompt passage of the latter being due to concessions to manufacturers. The trolley bill was not called up in the House. In the Senate Mr. Quay denied any interest in the scheme. Senator Caffery told the anti-trust investigators his meeting with Mr. Havemeyer was to secure information as to comparative merits of ad valorem and specific rates.

There was absolute blockade of the tariff bill in the Senate Tuesday. Not a cog was turned. The entire eight hours were devoted to set speeches preliminary to the consideration of the wool schedule. Mr. Quay resumed the delivery of his speech, which had already occupied four days, and after speaking four hours his manuscript seemed unappreciably diminished. Then he yielded from sheer exhaustion and Messrs. Pettigrew, Hoar, Power and Peffer made set speeches against free wool. Other set speeches will follow. During a lull in the debate Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, moved to lay the tariff bill on the table. The motion was defeated by a strict party vote. Two hours were consumed in the House over a bill reported by Mr. Outhwaite setting aside $100,000 from the fund belonging to the estates of deceased colored soldiers of the civil war for the purpose of erecting in the District of Columbia a national home for aged and infirm colored people. The bill was passed. The Indian appropriation bill was then taken up, but the House adjourned without completing its consideration.

The debate on the wool schedule made no visible progress in the Senate Wednesday. A bill to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the southern Ute Indians for their removal to the Territory of Utah and providing for settling them on lands under the severalty act was passed by the House. At 12:40 p. m. the Indian appropriation bill was taken up. Delegate Flynn, of Oklahoma, obtained the adoption of an amendment waiving the restrictions to the sale of lands owned in severalty by Indians over 21 years of age so far as applies to the citizen band of Pottawatomies except when such Indians are residents of Oklahoma. An amendment was offered by Mr. Holman increasing the appropriation for support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas and affiliated tribes on reservations from $90,000 to $100,000. Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, offered another amendment increasing the appropriation for Shoshone Indians in Wyoming from $10,000 to $15,000. At 4:35 the House adjourned.

The Senate resumed its alleged discussion of the tariff bill Thursday. Ten minutes after meeting the House went into committee of the whole on the Indian appropriation bill. An amendment by Mr. Pickler appropriating $5,000 for artesian wells at Pine Ridge, Rosebud and Standing Rock agencies was agreed to. An amendment by Mr. Johnson, of Indiana, raising the salary of the superintendent of Indian Schools from $2,500 to $3,000, was defeated by 88 to 94, after it had been the cause of hot words and almost a fight between Mr. Johnson and Mr. Maddox, of Georgia, who were kept apart by the Sergeant-at-arms. The old sectarian question in connection with the Indian schools was raised by Mr. Gear, who offered an amendment providing that "it is the purpose of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations to prevent the use of said funds in sectarian schools." A point of order was made against this amendment by Mr. Tracey on the ground that it changed existing law and the Chair sustained the point. The House at 4:55 adjourned.

Considerable progress was made in the tariff discussion in the Senate on Friday. The dullness of proceedings in the House was pronounced. An event somewhat out of the ordinary was a personal explanation by Mr. Richardson in reply to allegations made in a Washington newspaper that he had been using his position as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia to further the interest of an overhead trolley syndicate to whom he had sold real estate indirectly. He denied the charge in toto. The Indian appropriation bill was again considered and a rule adopted to bring it to a vote. The section of the bill providing for the sale of certain State bonds credited to the Indian trust funds was struck out on a point of order after a sharp debate. At five o'clock a recess was taken till eight o'clock. The night session was devoted to private pension bills.

The Senate, Saturday, continued its investigation of the sugar scandal and consideration of the tariff bill. The House decided that the Indian Warehouse should remain in New York, instead of being removed to Chicago. General sentiment was in favor of its removal, and on the score of economy that was a desirable measure. But the bill authorizing it was in the nature of new legislation, and under the rules of the House this was not permitted. The Indian appropriation bill was amended providing that the Pueblo and Jacarilla agencies, in New Mexico, should be abolished and consolidated with the Southern Ute agency in Colorado. An amendment was offered by Mr. Coffeen, of Wyoming, providing for the appointment of a commission to negotiate with the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians for the sale of certain of their lands. Agreed to. The Indian school at Mount Pleasant, Mich., 150 pupils at $150 a year, was provided for instead of 100 pupils at $167. The bill was passed, 157 yeas to 33 nays, and at 4:40 p. m. the House adjourned.

Juvenile Diplomacy.

The boy had applied for a job.

"We don't like lazy boys around here," said the boss; "are you fond of work?"

"No, sir," responded the boy, looking the boss straight in the face.

"Oh, you're not, ain't you? Well, we want a boy that is."

"They ain't any," said the boy, doggedly.

"Oh, yes, there are; we have had a half dozen of that kind here this morning to take the place we have."

"How do you know they are?" asked the boy.

"They told me so."

"So could I if I was like them; but I'm different: I ain't a liar," and the boy said it with such an air of convincing energy that he got the place.

This and That.

THE Queen is sometimes rather shaky in her spelling. When she is in doubt she writes the word so illegibly that the possible mistake is hidden.

WILLIAM CHAMBERS, of Chatham, Ont., who is claimed to be a survivor of the battle of Waterloo, is reputed to be well and hearty at the great age of 107 years.

IT is said the appointment of Editor Walsh as Senator from Georgia to succeed the late Mr. Colquitt, is largely due to Gov. Northen's wife, who used her influence in his favor.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S father was bandmaster of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst. As a boy he was made to learn every instrument in the band except the bassoon and the hautbois, and to this invaluable training Sir Arthur attributes all his power of orchestration.

THE Emperor of Germany drinks nothing but Mexican coffee, and a year's supply is sent to him regularly after every harvest from a plantation in the State of Michoacan, which lies on the Pacific coast of Mexico about midway between the United States and Central America. There is a large German colony there which has been cultivating coffee for many years.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Sugar in the Senate.

The Senate investigating committee is afraid of what it may find out.—Indianapolis News.

There is a certain disposition to lose sight of the fact that it is the Senate and not the press that is under investigation.—Washington Star.

Bribery is a very wicked and disgraceful thing. But inside information on which way sugar is going is different.—Washington Star.

The more the Senate shall incline to star-chamber methods the quicker popular resentment will compel it to see stars.—Philadelphia Record.

The die has been cast in the United States Senate on the issue of free sugar versus the sugar trust schedule. The sugar trust won.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The Senate vote on sugar extinguishes the last faint hope that the Senate investigation of the sugar trust will amount to anything.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The chances are that this will be the last time that a Senatorial committee will ever attempt to persecute newspaper correspondents.—Philadelphia Press.

It looks very much as if the sugar trust has "got nearly all it wants" in the Senate, but it is to be hoped that the House will not yield to its dictation.—New York Herald.

It is a mistake to say that the trusts are getting all the "clover" under this administration. Senators who stand in with the trusts are receiving a liberal share.—Kansas City Journal.

Airy, Fairy Lillian.

We are sincerely afraid that matrimony with Lillian Russell has become a habit.—Chicago Dispatch.

Lillian should really be more careful. The statistics show that husbands of any kind are getting very scarce.—Buffalo Express.

Lillian Russell reverses the usual proceedings. Her practice seems to be to marry whenever she has leisure and to repent in haste.—Boston Globe.

When Lillian Russell, the songbird, tries an opera and finds it unsuitable she drops it. The same wise rule she applies to misfit husbands.—New York Commercial.

Lillian Russell is getting along in years, but she experiences no abatement of marital ambition. There are fears that the demand will survive the supply.—Chicago Record.

Miss Lillian Russell ought to know a great deal about matrimony, and what she does not know a congress of her late husbands ought to be able to tell her.—Baltimore American.

Johnny Bull's Smiles and Kicks.

It was John Barleycorn rather than John Bull who was responsible for that insult to the American flag in St. Thomas.—Chicago Record.

Champagne in Great Britain is notorious ly sweet, warm and sticky, and criticism of speeches delivered under its influence must be tempered with indulgence.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

There are good and sufficient reasons why we are not altogether pleased with the conduct of the Canadians, but we do not want to make a cause of quarrel out of a trifle like this.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

It is awkward that the Queen's Own Rifles tore down the stars and stripes at St. Thomas, Ont., when the flag was flying in honor of the Queen's own birthday. The red coats had too much whisky. But the sincerity of the "Rifles" came out when they were drunk. They did not like the flag.

Mr. Coxey, the Martyr.

The Washington constabulary feared the Coxey army would have the hay fever by treading on the grass.—New Orleans Picayune.

Coxey went to Washington with a petition that "had boots on," but when he left Washington his petition was barefooted.—New York Tribune.

WHILE he is in jail Gen. Coxey will have a chance to repent of taking his army to a city where too many doubtful characters had already been sent in a more conventional way.—New York World.

Mr. Coxey writes glowing letters to his friends of the enjoyment that he finds in jail, but the army of hoboes in camp have not been doing any bragging over the fare they get.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

CHAPTER XIII.

"AT MERLIN'S FEET THE WILY VIVIEN LAY."

All went merrily at Davenant during the brief days of November and December, though the master of the house was not without his burden of secret care and care. That magnificent coal and iron producing estate in the north had not been yielding quite so much hard cash as its owner expected from it lately. Strikes and tradeunionism had told upon Mr. Sinclair's income. The coal market had fluctuated awkwardly. Belgium had been tapping the demand for iron. There was plenty of money coming in, of course, from Gilbert's large possessions; but unfortunately there was also a great deal going out. The Newmarket stables had cost a small fortune, the Newmarket horses had been unlucky, and Gilbert's book for the last three or four seasons had been a decided failure.

"The fact is, Wyatt," he remarked, to that confidential adviser, one dull afternoon, over a tete-a-tete game at billiards, "I'm spending too much money."

"Have you only just found that out?" asked the solicitor, with a calm sneer.

"The purchase of this confounded place took too much of my capital, and these strikes and lock-outs coming on the top of it——"

"Not to mention your vicious habit of plunging," remarked Mr. Wyatt, parenthetically, taking a careful aim at the distant red.

"Have very nearly stumped me."

"Why not sell Davenant? You don't want such a big barracks of a place, and—Mrs. Sinclair isn't happy here."

"No," said Gilbert, with a smothered oath, "the associations are too tender."

"I could get you a purchaser to-morrow."

"Yes, at a dead loss, no doubt. You fellows live by buying and selling, and you don't care how much your client loses by a transaction that brings grist to your mill."

"I can get you the money you gave for Davenant, timber and all."

"Who's your purchaser?"

"I'd rather not mention his name yet awhile. He is a quiet party and wouldn't like to be talked about."

"I understand. Some city cad who has made his money in the zoological line."

"How zoological?"

"Bulling and bearing. Well, if those beastly colliers hold out much longer, he may have Davenant and welcome. But he must take my new furniture at a valuation. I've paid no end of money for it."

"What did you do with the old Jacobean oak?"

"Oh, the old sticks are put away somewhere, I believe, in lofts and lumber-rooms and servants' bedrooms."

Some of Mr. Sinclair's other guests dropped into the billiard-room at this juncture, and there was no more said about the sale of Davenant.

Nobody—not even his worst enemy, and no doubt among his numerous friends he had several foes—could deny Mr. Wyatt's merits as a guest in a country house. He was just the kind of man to keep things going—a past-master in all social accomplishments—and Gilbert Sinclair graciously allowed him to take the burden of amusing everybody upon his shoulders, while the master of the house went his own way, and hunted or shot at his own pleasure. Mr. Sinclair liked to fill his house with people, but he had no idea of sacrificing his own inclination to their entertainment; he thought he did quite enough for them in giving them what he elegantly called "the run of their teeth," and the free use of his second-rate hunters.

On Mr. Wyatt, therefore, devolved the duty of keeping things going—devising the day's amusements, protecting the ladies of the party from the selfishness of neglectful and unappreciative mankind, arranging picnic luncheons in keepers' lodges, at which the fair sex might assist, finding safe mounts for those aspiring damsels who wanted to ride to hounds, planning private theatricals, and stimulating the musical members of the society to the performance of part songs in a business-like and creditable manner.

He had done all these things last winter and the winter before but on those occasions he had been aided in his task. Constance Sinclair had given him her hearty co-operation. She had played her part of hostess with grace and spirit—had allowed no cloud of thought or memory to obscure the brightness of the present moment. She had given herself up, heart and soul, to the duties of her position, and her friends had believed her to be the happiest of women, as well as the most fortunate. To seem thus had cost her many an effort, but she had deemed this one of her obligations as Gilbert Sinclair's wife.

Now all was changed. Her husband had been obeyed; but that obedience was all which Constance Sinclair's sense of duty could now compel. She sat like a beautiful statue at the head of her husband's table, she moved about among her guests with as little part in their pleasure and amusement as if she had been a picture on the wall—courteous to all, but familiar with none, she seemed to live apart from her surroundings—a strange and silent life, whose veil of shadow even sympathy failed to penetrate. Mrs. Millamount, not unkindly, despite her frivolity, had tried to get Constance to talk of her bereavement, but the wounded heart was galled by the gentlest touch.

"It's very kind of 'you," she said, divining her friend's motive, "but I'd rather not talk of her. Nothing can ever lessen my grief, and I like best to keep it quiet to myself."

"How you must hate us all for being here!" said Mrs. Millamount, moved with compunction at the incongruity between the houseful of company and the mother's desolate heart. "It seems quite abominable for us to be thinking of nothing but pleasure while you bear your burden alone."

"Nobody could divide it with me," answered Constance, gently. "Pray do not trouble yourself about my sorrows. If I could hide them better, I would. Gilbert likes to be surrounded with pleasant faces, and I am very glad that he should be pleased."

"She's quite too good to live," remarked the sprightly Mrs. Millamount to her friend, Lady Loveall, that evening. "But do you know that I'm afraid there's something a little wrong here," and Flora Millamount touched her ivory forehead suggestively with the tip of her Wateau fan.

James Wyatt was not a sportsman. He was an excellent judge of a horse, rode well, and knew as much about guns as the men who were continually handling them, but he neither shot nor hunted, and he had never been known to speculate upon the turf. These things were for his clients—a very pretty way of running through handsome fortunes and bringing their owners to the Jews—not for him. He could take his amusement out of other men's follies and remain wise himself. Life to him was an agreeable and instructive spectacle, which he assisted at as comfortably as he heard "Don Giovanni" from his stall in the third row; and when the foul fiend of insolvency whisked off one of his dearest friends to the infernal regions which bankrupts and outlaws inhabit, he felt what a nice thing it was to be only a spectator of the great drama.

Not being a sportsman, Mr. Wyatt had a good deal of time to himself at Davenant, despite his general usefulness. There were rainy mornings when the men were out shooting, and the 'bus had not yet started for the point of rendezvous with the ladies and the luncheon. These leisure hours Mr. Wyatt improved by strolling about the corridors, looking at the old pictures, for the most part in that meditative mood in which a man sees very little of the picture he seems to contemplate, and occasionally by a quiet flirtation with Melanie Duport. That young person had plenty of leisure for perambulating the corridors between breakfast and dinner. Mrs. Sinclair was by no means an exacting mistress, and Melanie's life at Davenant was one of comparative idleness. Her superiority of mind showed itself in a calm contempt for her fellow-servants, and she was rarely to be found in the servants' rooms. She preferred the retirement of her own bed-chamber, and a French novel lent her by that good-natured Mr. Wyatt, who had always a supply of the newest and worst Parisian literature in his portmanteau. On this dull December morning, a day of gray clouds and frequent showers, Mr. Wyatt stood before a doubtful Vandyck, smoking meditatively, and apparently absorbed in a critical examination of Prince Rupert's slouched beaver and ostrich plume, when Melanie's light, quick step and tripping French walk at the other end of the gallery caught his ear.

He turned slowly around to meet her, puffing lazily at his cigar.

"Eh, la belle," he exclaimed, "even an English December does not dim the luster of those Southern eyes."

"I was born in the Quartier Latin, and my parents were all that there is of the most Parisian," answered Melanie, scornfully.

"Then you must have stolen those eyes of yours from one of the Murillos in the Louvre. What news, little one?"

"Only that I find myself more and more weary of this great barrack."

"Come now, Melanie, you must confess you have a good time of it here."

"Oh, as for that, perhaps, I ought not to complain. My mistress is very gentle, too gentle; it gnaws me to the heart to see her silent grief. That preys upon my mind."

Here Melanie squeezed out a tear, which she removed from her pearl-powdered cheek—a very sallow cheek under the powder—daintily with the corner of a hem-stitched handkerchief.

"You are too compassionate, little one," said Mr. Wyatt, putting his arm around her waist consolingly. Perhaps he had gone a little too far with these leisure half hours of flirtation. He had an idea that the girl was going to be troublesome. Tears augured mischief.

"C'est dommage," murmured Melanie. "I have the heart too tender."

"Don't fret, my angel. See here, pretty one I have brought you another novel," taking a paper-covered book from his pocket.

"Belot?"

"No: Zola."

"I don't want it. I won't read it. Your novels are full of lies. They describe men who will make any sacrifice for the woman they love—men who will take a peasant girl from her hovel, or a grisette from her garret and make her a queen. There are no such men. I don't believe in them," cried the girl, passionately, her eyes flashing fire.

"Don't be angry, Melanie. Novels would be dull if they told only the truth."

"They wou'd be very amusing if they described men of your pattern," retorted Melanie. "Men who say sweet things without meaning them, who flatter every woman they talk to, who turn a foolish girl's head with their pretty speeches and caressing ways, and then laugh at her folly. Yes, and you are laughing at me," cried Melanie, exasperated by Mr. Wyatt's placid smile.

"No, my sweet, I am only admiring you," he replied, calmly. "What have I done to raise this tempest?"

"What have you done?" cried Melanie, and then burst into tears, real tears this time, which seriously damaged the pearl-powder. "I am sure I don't know why I should care so much for you. You are not handsome. You are not even young."

"Perhaps not, but I am very agreeable," said James Wyatt, complacently. "Don't cry, ma belle; only be patient and reasonable, and perhaps I shall be able to prove to you some day that there are men, real, living men, who are capable of any sacrifice for the woman they love."

Melaine allowed herself to be appeased by this rather vague speech, but she was only half convinced.

"Tell me only one thing," she said. "Who is that lady I saw at Schoenesthal? and why were you so anxious to please her?"

James Wyatt's smooth face clouded at this question.

"She is related to me, and I knew she had been used badly. Hush, my dear, walls have ears. There are things we musn't talk about here."

"What is the lady's real name?"

"Mad me Chose. She comes of the oldest branch of the family—altogether grande dame, I assure you."

"I wish she would take me into her service."

"Why, you are better off here than with her."

"I don't think so. I should see more of you if I lived with that lady."

"There you are wrong. I see Madame Chose very rarely."

"I don't believe you."

"Melanie, that's extremely rude."

"I believe that you are passionately in love with that lady, and that is why——"

"Not another word," exclaimed James Wyatt; "there's the luncheon bell, and I must be off. You'd better take Zola. You'll find him more amusing than the talk in the servants' hall."

Melanie took the volume sullenly, and walked away without a word.

"What a little spitfire," mused Mr. Wyatt, as he went slowly down the wide oak staircase. "She has taken my pretty speeches seriously and means to make herself obnoxious. This comes of putting one's self in the power of the inferior sex. If I had trusted a man—as I trusted that girl—it would have been a simple matter of business. He would have been extortionate, perhaps, and there an end. But Mademoiselle makes it an affair of the heart, and I dare say will worry my life out before I have done with her."

STARTING A FASHION.

How the Wearing of White Gloves Was Initiated in Gotham.

The other day a young man wanted a pair of evening gloves late at night, and had to go over to Sixth avenue to get them, says the New York Press. There was nothing of his size in stock but a pair of white gloves, while pearl alone are de rigueur. However, he was a dancing man and had to wear gloves, so he bought the gloves, and in due course of time led the cotillon wearing them. The chappies were astounded. Nobody could question this man's irreproachable taste, and in fact he was something of a leader of fashion. After supper a breathless deputation waited upon him to know whether or not white gloves had come back again.

"I'm wearing them myself, you see, dear boy," he said jokingly, but with a slightly superior smile. "I haven't really heard whether the Prince has found it out yet or not."

Now your true dude is not susceptible to the influence of irony. Besides, the deputation was flustered at the innovation. The result was that they mixed those speeches up, and in half an hour everybody in the room was saying that the Prince of Wales had taken to wearing white gloves in the evening, and that Tom Blank was the first man in New York to hear of it. So white gloves and not pearl are now the proper thing to wear in New York City on dress occasions, and when our man of fashion strolled into the Metropolitan Opera House the other night and looked around the circle he smiled grimly. Half the men in the boxes looked as if they were carrying snowballs.

Booth as a Bill-Poster.

One story of Booth's trip to the Sandwich Islands remains with me. He had gone there in 1854, in company with his comrade, Mr. David C. Anderson, en route to Australia, and they were to play in the Royal Hawaiian Theater.

They had hired a native to paste up the bills announcing the performance; this had to be done with a preparation name "poe-poe," made from a vegetable called "tara-tara," which is a favorite food in Honolulu; but the poor man was so hungry that, yielding to temptation, he incontinently ate up the paste, and to their surprise no bills appeared, writes William Bispham, in the Century.

When the reason was ascertained they feared to trust another native, and it was therefore agreed that, as Booth was the younger, he should act as bill-poster, and it came to pass that every night after the performance, Edwin went about the city with his play-bills and bucket of paste, and put up with his own hands the posters announcing that the company would play on the following night. He assured me that he did this honestly and did not eat the paste.

The Original Ossified Man.

In the Museum of Natural History in Dublin is the skeleton of a man, a native of the South of Ireland, who was called the ossified man. His body became ossified during his lifetime. He lived in that condition for years. Previous to the change he had been a healthy young fellow of superior strength and agility. One night he slept out in a field after a debauch, and some time later he felt the first symptoms of the strange transformation. The doctors could do nothing to avert the progress of his malady. His joints stiffened. When he wanted to lie down or rise up he required assistance. He could not bend his body, and when placed upright he resembled a statue of stone. He could stand, but not move in the least. His teeth were joined and became an entire bone. The doctors, in order to administer nourishment, had to make a hole through them. He lost the use of his tongue, and his sight left him before he died.

He Didn't Relish the Bill of Fare.

The guest at the hotel table laid the menu down and gazed up at the waiter.

"Have you any corned beef and cabbage?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Got any sauerkraut and sausage?"

"No, sir."

"Got any crackling bread?"

"No, sir."

The guest was becoming uneasy.

"Well," he said, in an unpleasant way, "have you got anything to eat here at all?"

"There's the bill of fare, sir," replied the waiter, nodding toward it.

The guest picked it up and examined it carefully.

"Um," he said, after a thorough inspection, "I can't eat that. At least, not raw. Take it out to the kitchen and have it broiled a bit, will you?"

Buying Titles Abroad.

In Portugal, where all hereditary titles have been abolished, and where they are held only for life, it is possible to become duke, marquis, count, or baron by the payment of relatively small sums of money into the national treasury. There are any number of English and other foreign merchants engaged in Portuguese trade who have acquired high-sounding titles in this manner. In Italy, too, any title can be obtained by the payment of money. There is a regular fixed tariff, the cash paid being described as "registration dues." Thus everybody who does not happen to be a notorious criminal can buy an hereditary title of count either from the Pope or from King Humbert for the sum of £1,000.

An Incident of Life in Texas.

In some Texas towns it is impossible to ascertain when any particular train leaves without going to the depot and inquiring of the agent how many hours behind time the train is. Col. Yerger, who lives in Austin, wished to go to San Antonio on the 1 o'clock train, so he said to his colored servant:

"Sam, go down to the depot and see what time the 1 o'clock train leaves."

It was 3 o'clock when Sam returned.

"Well, when does the train leave?"

"Hit's dun lef', boss. Hit's lef' at half past 2, sah!"

"What!"

"I did jes whut yer tole me. Yer tole me ter see when de train lef', an' I watched till it was plain outer sight on de udder side ob de Colorado Ribber."

GOWNS AND GOWNING.

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading May Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

New York correspondence:

WHAT extravagant affairs these neck bows are, too! They are made of all materials, from stiff moire, which, when once arranged in the right directoire bow, prevents the wearer from even moving her tongue in her mouth for fear of mussing it, to soft crepe affairs, which tie gracefully, using up yards and yards of stuff, and yet taking up very little room. There are also pretty little affairs made of wash lawns, daintily finished with lace. The white lawn tie of some time ago is revived, but much elaborated. It may be in pink, pale green, or yellow. It must be said that the ties are becoming to most faces, and that they give a look of daintiness to a toilet that is especially fetching in these days of tailor-made severities. Sometimes it seems as if the wearer had forgotten that it was possible to have them too large, but exaggerations will creep into any mode. The initial picture shows how prettily a face may be set off by one of these bows. Here the dainty chin is poised above a medium sized bow of mousseline de soie, frills of the same finishing the sleeves at the wrists. The gown itself is made of gray suiting trimmed with white. The skirt opens at the right front to show a white panel, and is there ornamented with large gray satin bows that apparently hold the gray parts together. The jacket bodice has a white vest which hooks in the center of the front, and a white pocket flap on each side. The large revers as well as the cuffs are of the white stuff, and are garnished with small ivory buttons, and the loose fronts are confined by two gray straps, as shown.

Striking costumes which are at the same time in good taste are always of interest and ever sought after. Here is one well suited to a slender, even thin, woman, all that is required to make it look well being a round, childlike pair of white arms and a smooth neck. It is to be of a crepe that is almost a chiffon made over satin. A flexible belt of silver comes right under the arms, the skirt falling full from this. The crepe is too fine to look full and the quantity of goods merely insures beautiful folds and plenty of them. The bodice is in surplice style, crossing over the bust, and it is cut to show only the smooth neck. The sleeves are big puffs at the shoulder, leaving the pretty arms bare all their length. The surplice ends tie at the back in a rosette, the silver belt being partly hidden in the back and spanning the waist prettily just below the surplice in front. The skirt should not have a train and is prettier, if your figure permits, made ankle length. A ruche of satin fringes its edge. Long satin ribbons fasten to the belt and from them hangs an old-fashioned round fan, ostrich feathers set round a mirror, the stick of ivory. You will do your hair high on your head, allowing some distracting curls to fall over your ears. It seems hardly necessary to say that the gown is white and that you will wear flesh-white stockings which means hose of so fine silk that the flesh shows through, and white satin slippers. If the feet are tiny and with an instep that is high, no matter what shoe you wear, for then you may risk the old-fashioned flat slipper tied over the instep with white satin ribbon. Altogether you will be a vision of old-time loveliness. Hitherto the excessively slender woman has thought she couldn't, when it came to Empire gowns. If a pair of dimpled shoulders absolutely demand a chance to see the world, then carry the surplice effect below the shoulders and have the sleeves off the shoulder entirely. But why spoil the quaint old-time demureness of the gown to show a pair of off shoulders which can get all the air they want in lots of other dresses?

A stunning dinner gown, and a tasteful one, is portrayed in the second sketch. Its fabric is a metallic green satin liberty, made with a long train, and fastens in front. The bodice is cut V shaped front and back, and is bordered with deep cream guipure. Reaching a few inches below the waist the bodice is covered with a loose blouse of spangles, black tulle shaped to fit the dress, and caught only at the shoulder and armhole seams. The short sleeves are draped with the same.

Less striking, perhaps, is the third pictured gown than the two last described, yet it is sufficiently novel in cut to prove attractive. Made from black broche silk, it is prettily trimmed with jet spangles. The bodice is lined with faille and fastens in the center. It has a square yoke banded with spangles, and is alike in back and front. The fullness is laid in pleats in front and back and the silk is draped where it joins the yoke. The sleeves are ornamented by epaulettes that are attached to long loose bretelles, and the circular basque, which is also lined with faille, is garnished with two rows of jet spangles. The moderately widegored skirt is simply finished with a gathered ruffle around the bottom.

For any but the most dressy wear of summer, jackets are more distinctly the thing than are capes. The cape is all right for the elaborate occasions, but for the street, the beach or the usual country outing use the jacket prevails. There is a tendency to have gowns supplied with their own jacket to match, or, indeed, the jacket constitutes the bodice of the gown, but it is safe to have one general all-round affair of mixed tweed, made very ship-shape and to be worn with anything. Fashion more and more strictly prohibits these economies, but practice them as long as you can, so as to encourage those who are obliged to. This jacket would be better rather long, double-breasted, and it should fit tightly in front and back. Last season's loose front shape is not made this summer, though if you have one left over, wear it confidently, for mere saying so is not going to make those jaunty affairs dowdy for several seasons yet. The genuine English bag coat is seen occasionally. It is not pretty and must really be worn by a woman just suited to the style and the swagger necessary to make it "go." Otherwise she will look like a left over from no one knows where, who is sorry for it. The jacket sketched here is in dark mode cloth trimmed with dark-green silk. It is tight fitting and is finished by a circular basque garnished with silk in the manner shown. The garment hooks in front and has a silk turned down collar to which silk loops with pointed ends are attached, the points reaching to the waist line. The sleeves are finished with pointed silk cuffs.

White gloves are again the thing for the street with the present change of gowns. It is also true that you may use your old-time long white gloves on the street. The glace kid is in the better taste, and twenty-button length may be used with ginghams or with any but dark-cloth gowns. Now that long evening gloves are not in vogue for evening wear, you can often get long white gloves as cheap as the shorter street gloves. For choice the long white glace kid is under the circumstances the good bargain. It will wear longer than a shorter glove, because better kid is put into long than into short gloves. Besides, white will clean forever, and will in the present fashion go with anything.

A promedade coat of brown Himalaya cloth is presented in the last picture. It has a gored and pleated skirt, lined with brown satin liberty. The double-breasted bodice part is tight-fitting and is sewed to the skirt at the waist. It has a triple collarette of brown cloth, a turned-down collar of satinet, and large revers, pocket flaps and cuffs of white cloth. The skirt part is laid in a wide box-pleat in front and hooks invisibly, the left side of the pleat coming over.

With the cloth tailor-made are worn heavy gloves and an English straw walking hat, either with a creased crown or the newer bell-shaped box crown, a jaunty and rather unbecoming affair which is just coming into vogue. These hats should set well on the head if they are to look as they are intended. The American woman seems to believe that her hat has become uncomfortably tiny. With the gingham you may wear a toque without brim and with a roll of the dress material laid about it, a smart tie of the same on one side, and a rose of just the right color on the other side. With the duck suit a white sailor trimmed with a band of ribbon may be worn. A great drooping leghorn with its brim weighted into becoming curves about your face by a wreath of rich roses is suitable with a lawn dress. If you want to economize you may omit the special hat for the gingham, and wear the one planned for the duck. That for the cloth dress will hardly do, because that ought to be dark, and hats for wash dresses should be light.

Obituary.

Myrta Ellen Muhn, daughter of John M. Muhn, was born in Allen Co., Ind., March 9, 1882, departed this life June 17, 1894, aged 12 years, 3 months and 8 days Myrta leaves a mother, five brothers and two sisters, besides a host of friends to mourn her untirely death. She was baptized in the reformed church by the Rev. T. J. Bacher. She possessed an affectionate heart and was loved by her associates. She was studious at school and ever obeyed the rules laid down by the teacher. When circumstances would permit, she always attended the Lutheran Sunday school. The hope these mourning friends can entertain is the hope of meeting her on brighter shores than earth. Funeral services were conducted from the Church of God by J. D. Brosy. Interment took place in the Dutch Ridge cemetery.

LAGRANGE DEMOCRAT is sold out to parties from Michigan. Who will now sing the great deeds of McNagny?

COMMONWEALERS last week stole a train loaded with beer and meat, in Illinois, just what they had been looking for.

THE election contest in Ligonier was decided in court, and Simon Strauss will be mayor and Wm. Vonderesmith, marshal,—both democrats.

A BILL to pension widows who have lost their original husband's pension by re-marrying, provided the second husband is dead. Who says a democratic congress is not friendly to the soldier—and his twice married widow?

SENATOR QUAY, of Pa., still delivers a part of his long speech every few days just to delay the senate and enable country republican editors to say "the democratic senate is slow." He began this speech April 14, and has reached the 8th installment.

"LEARNING through the stomach" is a political article the republican patent editors are just now ordering to be published all over the country. The title is a very proper one. Anyone silly enough to believe such twaddle is incapable of learning through any other organ.

THE populist idea of government seems to be on the European plan, a strong government to care for a dependent people. It is a step in advance of the republican idea of a strong government to care for its strongest people. Both ideas are essentially wrong and un-American.

SOME ignorant republicans are passing around little books, that have only blank leaves, and are labeled, "what congress has done." We presume this is intended as a joke, and it may catch ignorant republicans, but not well posted men of any party. The facts are, congress has done a good deal, having already passed 85 general laws and 18 private bills. And the big tariff bill is further along than any of its predecessors was in June

THE SOUTH BEND TIMES has a letter from Senator Voorhees in which among other things, he says: We are hammering away still here as you see from day to day, and are likely to get through by the 15th to 20th of this month. Our bill will be a better one than the country has been led to think by the reckless writing of some of our newspaper people. We will not establish absolute free trade, but we will make such an improvement on the McKinley law that every Democrat with sincere purposes, for the good or his party and of his country, will give it his cordial and earnest support."

Court News.

As noted last week, the case to test the validity of the notes given by J. L Davis just before his failure. It was decided they were not good, but the matter will be appealed to the supreme court. We believe the other suits in this same matter are in the same condition, and will be settled at last, in the same way, according to what the supreme court may do in the first case. Anna Thurston was given a divorce from Calvin H, Thurston. It will be remembered in this case, that Thurston was a prominent citizen of Butler but got into financial and social troubles a few years ago, and left the country. Hence the deserted wife sued for a legal separation, George E. McCullough appllied for admission to the bar. F. L. Welsheimer, C J. Coats and J W. Baxter were appointed committee. On favorable report, Mr. M. was admitted and sworn in as an attorney. Sarah Myers got a judgment of $790 against W. L. Houlton, L. T. Crain and others. The Mary A. Gragg estate ordered settled as insolvent. Geo. H. Ducan, estate which had been ordered settled as insolvent, has had several exceptions against final settlement filed. Isaac Hague has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Henry Shaffer. J. M. Hook was appointed executor of the will of his father, John Hook. A. Z Foote allowed a claim against the John Buchanan estate, of $381. Sale reported of 40 acres of the John Washler estate to Ellen and Frank Stafford, for $745, that being ⅔ of the appraised value; 42 acres sold to Alva and Nancy Washler for $786. Partition of the Christopher Deck estate ordered J. J. VanAuken, O. H. Widney and Beeks Erick appointed. Court has been in session only a part of the time. The jury was called in again yesterday.

COMMISSIONERS' PROCEEDINGS.

For the first session in fifteen years, there was not a ditch to be considered in any way, no petition, no remonstrance, no final report, "no nothing." But the gravel road seems to be starting up. The St. Joe gravel road report not being completed, the matter had to wait till next meeting.

ELECTION INSPECTORS.

These were appointed for the entire county, though of course some changes will have to be made next term, for when all conventions are held, and all the county and township tickets are in the field, a great many inspectors will find they have relatives on some of the tickets. The following is the list as it is fixed now:

Butler township,	Henry L. Houser
Concord, n. e. precinct	B. A. Woodcox
" n. w.	F. A. Jenkins
" s.	John Moody
Fairfield west,	R. H. Sherlock
" east,	Solomon Reinoehl
Franklin west	Wm. J. Whetsel
" east	Oliver J. Oberlin
Grant, n. e.,	Ernest Brown
" s. e.,	G. O. Denison
" west	John Duncan
Jackson north	J. J. Walters
" south	A. J. Shutt
Keyser, No. 1	Henry Schultheiss
" " 2	Wm. Hersberger
" " 3	Ted Kelham
" " 4	A. P. Foltz
" " 5	Fred Schultheiss
" " 6	Alva Widmer
Newville	Leslie Strong
Richland, north	M. E. Reynolds
" south	G. I Patterson
Smithfield, No. 1	A. W. Bair
" " 2	J. O Blake
Stafford	Joseph Wilson
Troy	W. S. Morgan
Union, n. e.	Arnold Blodgett
" n. w	Jacob Walborn
" s. w.	O. P. Myers
" s. e	J. C. Henry
Wilmington, No. 1	W. H. Madden
" " 2	H. J. Crooks
" " 3	A. R. Morse
" " 4	J. J. Oberlin
" " 5	John H. Baxter
" " 6	W. A. Dannels

All the township trustees who are not known to be candidates are left in the list, so far.

OTHER WORK.

P. D. Ginder, Silas King, T. C. Kiser, Ozro Treeman and M. E. Krontz were appointed constables for the Wilmington Center Detectives, who had petitioned for the appointments.

Matter of annexing territory to Auburn town plat went over to next meeting.

A street in Auburn was vacated—that part of Joseph street east of the east line of Cedar street.

C. H. Shatto, Burton Olds and Hiram Luce were relieved from working road tax.

CHANGES IN VOTING PRECINCTS.

There was a change in Smithfield so as to accommodate that part of Ashley that is in DeKalb county. Sections 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 make Precinct No. 1, with voting place at Ashley. All the rest of the township is called Precinct No. 2, with voting place at the Center.

In Union township were several changes. The inspectors at the last general election had reported 308 votes for the S. W. precinct, when the law says there must be no more than 250. The other precincts were short of that; the S. E. having 209, the N. E. 208, the N. W. 193. So the N. W. is extended south to Ninth street and along that street west to the corporation line. The N. E. precinct is extended south to Eighth street, and east through the court house. The S. E. is to include the blocks between Jackson, Main, Eighth street and Ninth street. The S. W. will contain all that is south of Ninth and west of Main street and the Ft. Wayne wagon road.

CORRESPONDENCE

BUTLER.

The republican nominations seem to give general satisfaction.

Walter Maxwell, our new marshal, is building a large addition to his dwelling

Fred Gengnagle is erecting a large and conveniently arranged barn on his premises.

Wood continues to come to our market in large quantities, notwithstanding the low price.

J. A. Campbell and T. C. Fralich made the run from Garrett to Butler on their wheels last Saturday evening in a little less than one and a-half hours.

We learn that the superintendent of the canning factory is here, and will commence the remodeling of the building, and put in the machinery at an early day.

Dallas Hollinger has returned from Wauseon, where he has been in school for the past three months. He goes into the Wabash storeroom as a clerk under Mr. Weiish.

A lady of Butler, whose integrity is unquestioned, says that she counted one hundred and seventy of Butler's reputable and disreputable citizens sneak into the back door of one saloon on one Sunday, and then did not watch all the time. If the law was enforced, what would this man's fine be.

Quite a number of Ashley and Butler people are quarantined in their homes in Butler. The impression seems to be gaining ground that George Murray is not having smallpox at all, but simply the sudden development of some other complaint that has been suddenly wakened into life by the treatment he has received.

CORUNNA.

This cold weather is quite a change from the roasters we have enjoyed lately.

Charlie Calkin, who was married in Chicago about a year ago, died there Saturday. The funeral was here on Monday. (Obituary in another column.)

The commencement exercises are to be held here Friday eve. Come and enjoy the treat

M. J. Thomas' new house is under construction and will be a grand addition to the town.

The ice cream festival held here Saturday evening was a grand success and was well attended.

Miss Myrtle Murphy has been quite sick for about five weeks, caused by an ulcerated tooth, but is recovering.

W. H. Trumbull, Lake Shore agent here, with wife and baby, visited with his mother-in-law, north of town last Sunday.

Quite a number from here will attend the Fairfield commencement, which will be a sort of picnic in the woods, the first of the season and a grand time is anticipated.

Business is good here, considering the hard times. The farmers know a good thing when they see it, and all our merchants ask is that you come and see their goods.

F. G. Fried will move his family and store to Pierceton, Ind., about July 1st. They will be sadly missed by a host of friends here He will leave his new store at Hudson for the present, at least.

CONCORD.

Will Pence is having quinsy.

Johnnie Hutton was in Auburn Saturday.

Carl Brown has returned to his home in Auburn.

John Beots was the guest of H. Baker over Sunday.

Belle Milton and Phillip Layman are reported better.

Henry Layman, near Butler, visited his sick brother Tuesday.

G. W. Draggoo and daughter drove over to Auburn Tuesday.

Several attended the funeral of Mrs. Andy Horn last Thursday.

Will Heffty and wife visited Belah in Smithfield township over Sunday.

The M. P. ladies will hold a social Saturday evening on the church grounds. All come.

Children's day exercises were well attended. Several attended similar exercises at Rehoboth the following evening.

Last Friday morning Mrs. Henry Cline (nee Mariah Rudy) died at her home near Spencerville at the age of almost 80 years. She leaves her aged husband, three sons and one daughter to mourn her demise.

WATERLOO.

Attorneys Shuman, Blair, Phillips and Less are attending court at Auburn.

Master Harold Blair came down Thursday for a visit with his grandfather Gen. Blair.

Sadie Jackman, the bright daughter of Wm. Jackman, was one of the graduates at Norris Chapel last evening.

Blanche Kelley, who was hurt by jumping from a buggy the day of the democratic convention, is getting along nicely.

The L. M. C held their meeting at the home of Mrs. Mary Booser. Mrs. Laura Sinclair has recently been elected a member of the society.

Mr. Maxson's house in the west part of town was struck by lightning Wednesday afternoon, and considerably damaged, but no one hurt.

Monday the weather was so cold as to be uncomfortable without a fire. Many persons anticipated frost Monday night, which fortunately escaped.

Miles Waterman and wife, from Edgerton, are visiting their daughter, Mrs. J. S Jackman, of this place. They will also visit the farm before leaving.

The republicans here are not very happy over the ticket that was chosen last Saturday. The car of Juggernaut ran over all of them but Editor Willis.

June 26 the L. M. C. year for study will close by holding a "Rose Festival" at the home of Mrs. Mary Morell. Each member is privileged to invite one guest.

Sunday evening Children's Day was observed at the M. E. church. The grand exercise of the evening was entitled, "The Future Church," and the representation and recitations went to show who and what helped to make up the future church. A church with pillars in front was placed upon the platform. Handsome cards were hung upon the pillars, bearing the words, "The Children," "Love," "Work," etc, but all to help to build up the church spoken of. Teachers as well as scholars took part and as each one approached, had something to say, showing that the children of to day will contribute to the church of the future, that without genuine love for the Savior and all mankind, and much work for the Master no future church can exist. It was very interesting to a well filled house as also the singing and recitations of the little ones.

Dangers of Chicken-Raising.

An elderly man and a young man were sitting on the veranda conversing.

"Yes," said the young man, "I am going into chicken-farming. I am convinced that there is no business in the world in which there is more money to be made. I have figured on it, and think I know what I can do. Why, look at the way they increase. In four or five years I—"

"My friend," said the old man, "I have had experience in the business. Be warned; do not embark in it. You know not what you do."

"What!" said the young man; "have you tried it and failed?"

"I mean to tell you that I tried it and gave it up," answered the other. "I got ten hens, intending to get rich, as you purpose doing. I installed them in a coop and awaited returns. But before they had laid an egg I happened to pick up a pencil and a bit of paper and do some calculating. At a low estimate I saw that each of my hens could raise three broods the first summer. Allowing for one bad egg in each sitting, there would be twelve chicks to each brood. Calling half of them pullets, this would give six to each brood, or 18 to each hen for the season, or 180 for the entire flock. Adding my original ten, I would have 190 hens at the end of the first summer. Figuring at the same ratio, I saw that I would have 3610 at the end of the second summer. I was encouraged, and went on to find that I would have 68,590 when the third summer closed. I sharpened my pencil, bent over my paper with feverish interest. The fourth summer, I discovered, would leave me with 1,303,210 likely hens. When the autumn leaves of the fifth dying summer should swirl about me I would have 24,760,990 cacklers. Another year of joys and sorrows—my sixth—would find me surrounded by 470,458,810 live and enterprising hens. Once again, when the seventh summer should fade into glorious autumn, I found that a matter of 8,938,717,390 distinct hens and a rooster or two would be with me in the gallinaceous flesh. The inspiring figures for the eighth year I have forgotten, as, likewise, I have those of the ninth. I only know I found that at the end of ten years I would have more prime hens than there was space for on the surface of the globe, counting the artic regions, and supposing roosts across all rivers and twenty fowls in each tree. I was dumfound but did not hesitate. I saw what I owed to the human race. I seized an axe and hurried to the coop. My boy, I loved those hens, but I loved humanity more; and I led them to the block like a Spartan, and chopped off their heads. I breathed more freely when it was all over, and the horrible vision was gone of the whole earth four feet deep in hens, and every blessed one of them cackling. Young man, do not go into the chicken business; it leads to awful things."

The young man started up. "Great Caesar!" he exclaimed. "I won't. I did not realize what I was doing."—From the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for June.

DON. M. DICKINSON

His Opinion as to the Future of the Great Democracy, the Party of the People.

Don. M. Dickinson Cleveland's first postmaster-general was in Cincinnati many days ago, and a reporter interviewed him. In talking upon political matters Mr. Dickinson said that he hardly expected that a democrat would be elected to succeed the late Senator Stockbrige.

"It is hard to elect a democrat to anything now," he replied, with a smile "But good times are coming. We will have it in two years. We will be all in shape for '96."

"There was a time when they burned Andrew Jackson in effigy all over this country, and yet two years after that so popular had Jackson become that you could not find a man who had ever said a word against him. That is the way it will be with President Cleveland. He is an able, fearless man. A man with the courage to do what he believes to be right. And he is doing more for bimetallism than any man living to-day. He is a believer in silver. The only question is as to the best way in which to do it. England is already receding from her position, and the day will come when you will see silver restored to the world, and Grover Cleveland's attitude is doing more to that end, as I said, than any other man or force in the world to-day.

"In my opinion the campaign will come west next time. The west and the south will be too strong to let it go east. Mr. Tilden was in favor of the western campaign.

"Mr. Tilden's prophecy is now appreciated, and the campaign will come westward. We will win on that line. The east will no longer dictate the line of policy. Yes I believe we will see a tariff bill passed by the end of June, and that it will go into effect right away."

We are informed by The N. G. Hamilton Pub. Co., of Cleveland, O., whose advertisement appears in this paper, that agents have made over $75,000 on the sale of "Samantha at the World's Fair," Josiah Allen's Wife's latest book. DeKalb county seems to be behind the times, for there has been no canvassing done in this county. There is a good field open for hustlers, for at the lowest estimate $250 can be made in DeKalb county by two or three good agents. 25

Co. Supt. Merica reports a monster meeting Monday evening at Memorial Chapel, in Franklin, to witness the commencement exercises of the township schools. With the closest crowding all could not get in, and it was with great difficulty that the officers and graduates could reach their proper places. Crowds stood around the building, or sat in buggies where they could see and hear. People have fully learned that no one thing is so valuable to them as the common schools, and their interest gains strength every year. And who doubts that much of the success of our excellent system is due to the intelligent and persistent efforts of the county superintendent and trustees?

Steuben Republican of last week had this very sensible view of the great American woodchuck problem: "About 200 woodchuck scalps were presented to the auditor last Saturday for the bounty. The large number of scalps coming regularly from certain sections of the county suggests the idea that there is a possibility that the bounty "fosters and protects." rather than exterminates these pests of the farmers." And we wish to add our testimony to the above, that we have never heard of a case where the number of woodchucks diminished under a warfare of this kind. The "chucks" seem to combine their wits to make up the losses. It is the same way with the wolf scalp bounty of western states.

Hank Little, editor of the Garrett Clipper is keeping up his long drunk. Saturday night he had a severe attack of something like tremens. If McNagny could come home now he would find the man who claims to control him in very bad shape.

Mr. Coffinberry and family moved to Garrett last week as he wished to be nearer his business there especially to superintend his new dwelling that is nearing completion. Our people regret greatly to part with them as they have made themselves very popular here.

Mrs. Hare and Mrs Fred Yesbera have returned from South Bend, where they were guests in the family of Rev. Dr. Henry Johnson. Mrs. Yesbera sang in the choir as usual on Sunday. During her absence her place had been taken by Clara Otto and others, who sang very acceptably.

Mrs. J. J. Martin and Mrs. Eliza Shaffer, of Albion, have been here a few days. They were here to see about some dressmaking as Auburn dressmakers are the most skillful in the country. Master Fred Shaffer came with them Mrs. Shaffer returned home Tuesday, Mrs Martin also visited her old time neighbors the family of Peter Ditmar at the Junction.

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

The League "Chainless" Safety.

The Hartford Telegram, June 4, '94.

One of the many objections that riders of the old high wheel had to the adoption of the Safety when first introduced, was the chain necessary for propulsion. Riders claimed that it was unsightly and dirty, that it soiled the clothing and required constant watchfulness to keep it in good running order. Be that as it may, the introduction of the League Chainless does away with all the objections theoretical or practical and marks an improvement in driving force of cycles that cannot fail to prove a benefit to the rider. It is a matter of pride that the League has made its home in Hartford where skilled mechanics, ably directed, produce such really fine wheels as are constructed in our various factories. Trade indications point to the League Chainless taking high rank among cycles of international import and that speedily.

The W. C. T. U, meeting at J. C. Henry's Tuesday evening was a very nice affair and largely attended, many gentlemen being present. There was a fine lunch at the close.

For a nice, healthy and refreshing drink, get a bottle of that orange cider at Robbins & McCord's, put it on ice and there is nothing so nice.

JAMES A. BARNS, - - PUBLISHER.

IT is a common mistake of the printer to put the preface at the wrong end of the book.

AT 15 years old the alligator is but two feet long. At the same age the average boy thinks he measures 100 feet.

IN a hitherto unpublished lecture by James Russell Lowell, just presented to the college daily at Harvard, he says: "Mere scholarship is as useless as the collecting of old postage-stamps."

SUCH has been the growth of popular opinion in favor of the sudden disposition of the dead by heat that there are now in the country eighteen incorporated cremation societies, and during the past ten years about three thousand cremations have taken place.

A HANDSOME girl, accompanied by her mother, called at the Joliet penitentiary and was married to a convict. Incidents such as this, render complex the problem of perfecting the race. A union between crime and idiocy may by the reformers be justly "viewed with alarm."

THE daughter of a Kansas safe robber got five hundred signatures to a petition for her father's pardon and then raised money by washing and scrubbing to pay railroad fare from her home in Norton County to Topeka. There she saw the Governor and secured his pardon. It is said that the father will live honestly hereafter.

A YEAR ago McKane was a boss in high feather in Gravesend, N. Y., with a strong pull in the State. To-day he is in Sing Sing, and Gravesend has been consolidated with Brooklyn. Coney Island no longer pays heavy tribute to a boss and has been made respectable. McKane's best man has surrendered to Brooklyn's Sheriff, and will go to prison. No wonder the New York City bosses are beginning to hand in their resignations.

OFFICIAL corruption is no new thing in Russia, in fact, it is old as officialism there, flourishing almost unrebuked, with a flagrancy unknown elsewhere; but the imperial interference with it, taking the shape of a ukase, is new, and will strike terror to the heart of the plunderers, though it may not arrest their evil practices. They are rooted in the old subsoil of the Empire deeper than its oaks and cedars, and it will take more than one imperial wrech and the twist of more than one imperial degee to pull them up.

AFTER all, there is nothing so refreshing as a printer's error. It is frequently the most readable thing in a publication. Only the other day an English colonial journal, soaring aloft with scientific aspirations, said: "There need be demand no longer for Jules Verne's and other blackguards' imagination." The colonial journal felt that some reparation was due to Jules Verne and "other blackguards." In a subsequent issue the following request appeared: "For 'other blackguards' please read Rider Haggard's."

ABOUT a year ago there was printed a highly interesting story about a girl who discovered a broken rail on a railroad bridge and who took off her skirt, signaled a train to stop and thereby saved the lives of many passengers. The incident was located somewhere in Ohio. Railroad Commissioner Kirby, of that State, has received a letter from Mme. Gillet, directress of the Order of Humanity of France, expressing a desire to present to the young heroine the diploma and prize of the French Society of Life Saving, a tri-color ribbon with the cross of the Legion of Honor pendant and an anchor of hope in the center.

THE sentence on the Sicilian deputy, De Felice-Giuffrida, implicated in the labor riots in his native island, is crushing. He is to be imprisoned for eighteen years; to be disqualified from holding public office thereafter, and to be under police surveillance for three years after his liberation. In other words he is blotted from the list of active and militant workers. It is impossible not to pity this man; not to feel compassion for the poor, down-trodden population dying of hunger, which he tried to liberate. If all Socialists were no worse than Giuffrida, if they were all actuated by his high and noble aims, they would never meet with popular condemnation.

AS ONE result of the recent whist congress the old heads are discussing the demand for a new game of cards. Whist, they claim, has come to be in the nature of an exact science. Experts play the same hands in the same way, and two of them sitting as partners signal through the game, so that each knows what the other has. If an indifferent player gets into the game he is frowned into humiliation or anger and he is as unwelcome as a ghost at a wedding. The reformers want a new game where there is a chance for more play and less certainty. They object to poker, fascinating as it is, and they are working their inventive genius to meet the demands of the situation.

RUDYARD KIPLING has stirred up the New England press by telling the Londoners that there is a well-defined "pie belt," extending from Maine down into New York, and that this area is also distinguished by chronic dyspepsia. As a matter of fact, the pie is one of our national institutions, and its belt is as long and wide as the country. Emerson, the sunny philosopher, ate pie even for breakfast, and he stands comparison well with Carlyle, to whom pie was unknown. One who ate breakfast with Emerson in California relates that Emerson handed the pie around the table, and when all had refused helped himself to a slice with the remark, "But what is pie for?" Kipling has yet to say as good a thing as that. But, as he married a Vermont girl and is young, he may learn a good deal.

RUMOR hath it that a French inventor, disgusted with the treatment which he has received in his own country, has sold to the Triple Alliance the secret of an "electric chariot," so terrible as an instrument of slaughter that it makes the hair rise like quills upon the fretful porcupine even to think of it. Some color of truth is given to the story by the fact that M. Turpin, the inventor in question, is known to have created a wonderful new explosive. But there is a small probability that the German, Austrian, and Italian armies are to throw aside the new weapons which they have been laboriously accumulating for the past five years to take up an "electrical mitrailleuse" which can fire 25,000 bullets per minute. Nor is it probable that France and Russia would wait to let the Triple Allaiance arm itself with this new wonder, if it should begin to do so. There would be an old-fashioned war before the new-fangled apparatus could be brought into use.

"MOONSHINING" during the last three years has increased extensively all over the country. The number of illicit stills captured in 1891 was 795, in 1892, 852, and last year 806. Prior to that time the average of seizures was about 450 a year. The internal revenue agents have prepared an interesting table showing the localities in which illicit stills were discovered last year. North Carolina leads with 254 seizures; Georgia comes next with 223, then Alabamy, 107; South Carolina, 86; Virginia, 73; Tennessee, 34, and Kentucky, 13. Several other States have had seizures, but they were in single instances, or two or three each only. In detecting and destroying the stills last year 487 moonshiners were arrested and three revenue officers were killed. The record of seizures from 1881 until and including 1892, covering a period of thirteen years, is 7,282 stills destroyed. In suppressing these illegal distilleries fourteen Government officials have lost their lives and twenty-one others have been seriously wounded.

NO DOUBT a great deal of fun will be poked at the Ohio militia company which allowed itself to be captured and disarmed by a crowd of striking miners at Glouster. The soldiers will be accused of cowardice and their lives will be made miserable for months to come. If the truth were known, however, it would probably be found that cowardice had very little part in the easy yielding of the militiamen. These men are the neighbors of the strikers. They came from an adjoining town. Many of them probably are on terms of personal friendship with the men who disarmed them. It is one thing to march militia into a neighborhood where they are well acquainted; it is quite another thing to get them to fire on their friends. In the Glouster incident it is significant that no one on either side was roughly handled or injured in the least degree. Investigation will probably show that the soldiers and the strikers were on too good terms to hurt one another. The affair does not reflect much credit upon the militiamen, but it does not by any means convict them of cowardice.

Sleep as a Nourisher.

Children grow more rapidly during the night. In the daytime, while the child is awake and active, the system is kept busy disposing of wastes consequent on this activity, but during sleep the system is free to extend its operations beyond the mere replacing of worn-out particles; hence the rapid growth.

This is why so many invalids need so much rest and sleep. The system has been taxed for years beyond its ability to repair the tissues, and hence the organism has become worn and disabled from the accumulation of waste products, and disease has resulted. With the proper conditions restored, and a season of perfect rest, nature will reassert herself, clearing up the clogged and dirty tissues, and restoring the organs to their normal condition.

Augers.

The largest auger ever made in an auger and bit manufacturing town has been recently finished at James Swan's shops. The tool is fourteen feet long and three inches in diamter. It was made in sections three feet long, and three men were kept busy nearly three days in polishing it. There is but one use for this immense tool, and that is for boring pump stocks.

A Little King's Daughter.

One day in the early spring little Bertha looked up into her mother's face pleadingly, saying, "Mamma, dear, tan't I have a darden all my very own?"

Kind Mas. Cleverly never denied her children any reasonable request, so it was decided that Bertha should have her own little garden to care for herself. As she was too small to understand anything about planting, her mother had some asters, a row of daisies and a bed of pansies set out.

Never was a little girl more busy. She watered the plants and soon grew to know when weeds appeared. No part of the yard looked prettier or neater than Bertha's dearly loved flower bed.

Our little gardener had a sister who belonged to the King's Daughters. This sister often told of the different ways in which her friends had made money to spend in charitable work, little dreaming that her sister was drinking in every word she said.

Soon the flowers were in bloom, and Bertha was very proud of her pets.

One afternoon, Katie, the maid, came into the house in great distress, crying:

"Oh, Mrs. Cleverly, sure, and the posies is all gone out of the baby's garden!"

When Mrs. Cleverly hurried out, she found it all too true.

Every flower had been nipped from the plants, not even a half-opened bud remaining to mourn for its companions.

She went into the house much perplexed and distressed, for she knew how grieved her little girl would be when she was told of her great loss.

While she sat wondering who could be so cruel as to rob her pet, in came Bertha, shouting:

"Oh, mamma, I've dot all my flowers, every one, made into bunches to sell; tause I'm a Tin's Daughter, and I'm doing to dive the money all to the poor people."

"Bless your precious heart," cried her mother, as she held the little girl close in her arms, while tears filled her eyes, "you are a King's Daughter indeed."

Never were flowers more readily sold, and better prices were never paid than were given to this dear worker for the King's poor.

The little King's Daughter never regretted the loss of her flowers, for the lesson learned so early in life resulted in many noble deeds in later years.

Boy's Speeches.

At one of the big private schools for boys over in Brooklyn, says the New York Times, there is a debating society which meets once a fortnight and discusses various questions of public interest. At one meeting capital punishment was the subject presented, and the young lad upon whom the duty of opening the meeting rested was somewhat embarrassed over his position. When the meeting was called to order, however, he promptly stood up and began, "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the subject which we are about to discuss this evening is one of the most vital importance to everybody in this room," but he never got any farther in that sentence, for he was greeted with cheers and laughter that effectually interrupted him. Of course the young speaker did not mean to imply that every one of his listeners was in danger of being hanged or electrocuted, but what he said sounded like it, and so they laughed. Another boy speaker at another class debating society got himself laughed at, too, once when he stood up to talk about Gen. Grant. He was very much embarrassed and frankly confessed that he was able to say very little. "But," he added, "if I were to say but three words, I should wish to make them a continuous eulogy upon General Grant." That boy is a gray-haired man now, but he and his friends still laugh at his continuous three word eulogy.

Something Lacking.

A certain doctor living in the upper part of the city has a bright and observing 4-year-old daughter. She has a brother a few years older, of whom she is very fond, and who for her amusement sometimes draws pictures on slate or paper. A few evenings ago he was thus engaged and essayed to draw an elephant. He shaped the body, head and legs, and before adding the proboscis stopped a moment to look at it. The little girl had been watching every stroke of the pencil with great interest, waiting patiently for him to finish, and when he stopped and she thought he was done exclaimed, "Why, Johnnie, you forgot to put on his sachel!" For the moment she couldn't think of the word trunk and evidently concluded the other word would do as well.—Utica Observer.

SERGT. PURCELL'S INVENTION.

The Police Officer's Safety Scheme for Elevator Hatchways.

Police Sergeant Thomas Purcell, New York City, has invented an automatic door for elevator hatchways which is valuable and practical as a preventive of accidents and an obstruction to the spread of fire. The illustration shows that the doors part from the central line and retire within horizontal recesses as the cage approaches. When the cage has passed the hatches are automatically drawn out and brought together. A pair of angle arms are pivotally secured to a plate fixedly attached to the side wall of the well. The depending extremities of these arms are connected by link bars to the respective hatches. A precisely similar arrangement is provided below, except in an inverted order. The shorter arm extremities are notched or recessed. Secured to the side stile of the cage is a short bar, the projecting ends of which carry studs, into whose path the recessed inner extremities of the arms project. When the cage is about to descend the hatches are closed and the studs are about to engage in the recesses. This must cause a positive swing movement of the arms that will drive the hatch doors apart and allow the cage to pass. As the same actuating studs engage the lower set of arms (they having been brought to the position indicated by the dotted lines), a positive closing movement will be exerted, the top of the cage meanwhile having passed below that floor. It is obvious that the posts are always set ready for engagement, either up or down, and no mistake can be made. It will be understood that this principle, with suitable modifications, can be adapted to open or close the ordinary vertical door commonly used.

LIGHTNING CALCULATING.

One-third Is Memory, One-third Practice, and One-third Trick.

One-third memory, one-third practice, and one-third trick—that is the secret of most of the rapid calculators who figure before the public, says London Tit-Bits. There are very few calculations of which there is not a short way to the solution, but perhaps none of them is so easy and at the same time so surprising to the ordinary mind as the instantaneous extraction of the cube root.

This is a feat which has gained great applause for its performers from the days of Hutchins, "the lightning calculator," till now. The extreme rapidity with which it is worked, and the difficulty of the solution by the ordinary methods, render it one of the most taking of feats.

Before explaining the method of performing this extraction of the cube root, it may be well for the benefit of those readers who have forgotten some of their early school knowledge to explain what a cube root is. Multiply a number by itself and the product by the original number, and the result is a cube. Thus 9x9 equals 81 (the square of 9); 81x9 equals 729 (the cube of 9). Then 9 is the cube root of 729.

Now for the method. First you obtain from one of the audience an exact cube of not more than six places of figures, though with moderate practice the latter condition need not be insisted on.

Say the cube given is 140,608, of which the root is 52. You know the cubes of the units by heart, thus:

The cube of 1 is	1
The cube of 2 is	8
The cube of 3 is	27
The cube of 4 is	64
The cube of 5 is	125
The cube of 6 is	216
The cube of 7 is	343
The cube of 8 is	512
The cube of 9 is	729

Now, as the thousands in the cube given exceed 125 and are less than 216, the tens in the reply must be 5. For the second figure, or units, a curious trick comes in. The cubes of 1, 4, 5, 6, and 9 end in the same figures; the cube of 2 is 8; the cube of 3 ends in 7, and reversely the cube of 8 ends in 2 and the cube of 7 in 3.

So when the questioner says 140,-608, you say to yourself, 50; 608, you say out loud on the instant, 52.

Take another, 39,304. The thousands exceed 27; therefore the root is thirty something. The last figure is 4; therefore the root is 34.

COOPER'S SPY.

He Was a Real Character Named Enoch Crosby.

Few people know that Harvey Birch, the hero of Cooper's novel, "The Spy," had a prototype in real life who played a somewhat active part during the revolutionary war in this country. The man's name was Enoch Crosby, and he lived near Brewster, N. Y. His house is still standing on the farm which he cultivated for many years.

Crosby got into his work as a spy shortly after the battle of Long Island, when he was setting out to join the patriot army. He fell in with a party of Tories, and they mistook him for one of themselves, so he went with them and passed several days in their company. Finally he left them, and going to John Jay, a member of the Citizens' Committee of Safety, reported all the information he had gained. Jay deemed Crosby's action so brilliant that he immediately commissioned him as a spy to watch the Tory forces. This was very important work and Crosby accomplished it with much success. He continually managed to penetrate the secrets of the Tories, sometimes disguised as an itinerant shoemaker, and to gain most valuable information. He was often captured when in their company, but always managed to escape, of course, much to the enemy's mystification, who believed him to be in league with the devil. Once with Tory prisoners he was chained in a church, but while his companions were asleep he got away through the window. On another occasion he only escaped through the good offices of the maid of a house where he was imprisoned, who drugged all the sentries and guards.

ENOCH CROSBY.

At the close of the war Crosby settled again in Brewster. There he lived, married and died. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and for years a justice of the peace in the township.

IT MUST BE DEFEATED

SENATE'S OUTRAGEOUS SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Let the Members of the House See that It Does Not Become a Law—No Rest from Tariff Revision Until Tariff Is Reformed Out of Existence.

The House Must Defeat It.

The McKinley bill is filled with schedules that speak of bargain and sale, of surrender to greedy trusts, of shame and disgrace but it contains no schedule comparable in occult meanness with the sugar schedule as it passed the Senate on June 5. The only hope for the Democratic party lies in the prospect that the House will undo this outrageous piece of work. If it does not lift the stigma that the Senate has left upon their party the Democrats may prepare for a funeral procession next fall. The disgrace attached to this schedule and the unpopularity of the sugar tax will more than overcome the popularity of the income tax.

Each feature of the sugar schedule is worse than the others; all will rise up to curse the party that put them there.

1. The 40 per cent. duty on all sugars was put on at the instigation of the trust. Though Senator Gorman said in his speech that "the refiners derive no benefit whatever from this 40 per cent. duty," yet it is certain that it yields a protection of between 20 and 40 cents per 100 pounds to the trust. The average difference between the price of foreign refined sugar and the price which the trust pays for raws is about 1 cent per pound; 40 per cent. of this difference (after allowing for the loss in refining—about 6 per cent.) is clear protection to the trust. With raws at 3 and foreign refined sugar at 4 cents, the protection is about 35 cents on 100 pounds of refined sugar.

2. The specific duties of ⅛ of a cent per pound on all refined and of 1-10 of a cent additional on all sugars imported from countries which pay export duties are robbery, pure and simple. They will not put a penny of revenue into the treasury, but will add from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year to the unjust dividends of the trust.

3. The provision to admit raw sugar free from the Hawaiian Islands makes a present of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year to the trust, which has a five-year contract with the planters.

4. The provision to continue to pay the sugar bounty until Jan. 1, 1895, besides being unconstitutional and contrary to the Democratic platform, will be a drain upon the treasury when it most needs every dollar it can obtain.

5. But most outrageous of all is the provision to postpone, until Jan. 1, 1895, the enforcement of the sugar duties. The New York Times says: "How much revenue the sugar tax would yield if it was levied on and after July 1 cannot be exactly computed. It would depend on the amount imported and the range of prices, but $40,000,000 a year is a very moderate estimate. Now to postpone the tax for six months is obviously to deprive the treasury of $20,000,000, and as the trust has the certainty of the tax after Jan. 1 to rely on, and the McKinley tax to protect it meanwhile, what the treasury is deprived of is given to the trust. But that is not all, nor is it the worst. During these six months the trust will be able to bring into the country free of duty all the raw sugar it can buy in any of the markets of the world. The only check on its purchases will be the enhancement of the price by the full amount of the duty imposed in the bill. Until that limit is reached it will be profitable for it to buy, and on every pound thus bought the treasury loses the revenue. The stock thus provided for cannot be less than six months' supply. It may easily be more. The adoption of the Senate provision in this matter, therefore, will deprive the treasury of at least $40,000,000 in revenue, and may easily cost it $50,000,000 or $60,000,000."

The effect of the whole schedule will be to raise the price of refined sugar about one cent per pound to the people. The tax on the people from the beginning of 1895 will be about $60,000,000 a year. At least one-half and perhaps 90 per cent. of the tax for 1895 will go into the coffers of the trust. After that about two-thirds will go to the treasury. Well may the Philadelphia Record say: "In every light in which the sugar schedule of the Senate bill may be viewed it serves one sole interest—that of the trust. The interests of the consumers, of planters in Louisiana, and beet raisers in Nebraska, of independent refiners and of the government itself, are all subordinated to the claims of monopoly. As the character of this measure becomes thoroughly understood it is inconceivable that it should be enacted into law.—Byron W. Holt.

The Mission of the Democracy.

If the bill should really become law it would arouse a storm of indignation among all Democrats, who would see in this bungling performance a shameful departure from the tariff platform. That tariff agitation subside even for a while is therefore not to be expected, although this would have positively happened if the present Congress had given even a half way satisfactory solution of the problem. We cannot see, therefore, why under the circumstances such a bungling performance should be shouldered: and we believe that honest Democrats will not submit to it, but will much rather allow the bill to perish. We are pretty well persuaded that the "conservative" Democrats would not take the responsibility of a failure, but would much rather support the will of the majority of their colleagues if the latter would agree upon a bill which would lie between the Wilson bill and the Voorhees bill. Then at any rate we could count upon the unification of the Democratic party and upon a stop to tariff revision for a time.

That we expect no permanent rest we frankly and freely confess. The end of all revision must be the giving up of the protection idea and the conversion to an entirely revenue tariff. If any thing were needed to show us that a protective tariff is not suitable for our political system, the present action on the tariff certainly points it out plainly. Finally, we believe a tariff tax will not always be retained as a source of revenue. With a reform of the tariff will come a general and fundamental reform of all taxation, both federal and local. Our entire tax system is outgrown and fundamentally wrong.

Something has been gained toward the understanding of the tariff question, through the miserable inefficiency of the present Congress. The action of the monopolist has never before been so plainly seen by the people in its utter shamelessness. The working people have had destroyed the last remnant of that illusion that their interests were in the least degree regarded by the beneficiary of the protective tariff. All the evils of concentrated production must, under the protective tax system, be intensified to the worker. This point must be plain to every thoughtful workman. On the one side the protective tariff increases the concentrative tendency of production and possession, the absorbing of the small by the greater; on the other hand, it destroys the weapons which the workman, through organization against the unscrupulous gain of the employer, until now has been able to fashion. The entire people, indeed, through the protective tariff, fall more and more under the power of the great industries, which make law-makers their puppets, and which must do so, if they are to continue their system of plunder. This must be clear to the dullest understanding, when we see see the antics which the puppets of the monopolists in Congress are now performing.

The loosening of the chains in which the people are bound on every side is still, alas, in the distance, and through such a bill as Gorman will give us nothing can be done. Yet the release must come; and so long as it is not reached the Democracy have not fulfilled their peculiar mission, and should not give up striving to fulfill it.—New Yorker Staats Zeitung.

Brooklyn's Mass Meeting.

Brooklyn's business men held a big mass meeting in the Star Theater, to protest against the passage of the Gorman surrender bill. The resolutions, which were adopted with enthusiastic applause, were similar to those adopted by the Cooper Union Mass Meeting, in New York City, two weeks previously. After reciting the promises of the Democratic platforms in 1890 and 1892 and declaring that the House had passed a bill which, to some extent, embodied the reform demanded by the people, it declared that the Senate bill, if passed, "would be a heartless denial and a derisive mockery of the repeated popular demands for lower taxes, more equal opportunities and freer exchanges."

The resolutions also declared that the delay in the passage of a tariff bill, and the obnoxious modifications made in the Wilson bill, at the bidding of trusts, "prolong and intensify the distress now afflicting our people, invite distrust and contempt of the Senate and jeopardize the prosperity of the whole country;" and that "Earnestly as we desire the speedy termination of the present uncertainty, we will not be content to accept from Congress any tariff bill founded upon a compromise with injustice, upon the trading of political influence, and upon the granting of special privileges, all of which are embraced in the Gorman Surrender bill now under consideration by the Senate, and that if, in effect, the McKinley tariff is to be perpetuated, it were preferably done by authority of the Republican party than by that of the Democratic party.

"That we call upon those Democratic Senators who seek to be guided by principle, and who recognize their responsibility to the people, to manfully rebuke the attitude of certain of their party associates who are bartering their honor and betraying their country for personal advantage. We entreat them to arrest the suicidal course to which these self-seeking politicians would commit their party, and to insist, without compromise, upon the passage of a tariff bill which will place all crude raw materials on the free list, and impose such moderate ad valorem duties upon manufactured products as will provide revenue, without becoming oppressive, to the same intent, in spirit and in substance, as stipulated by the Wilson bill."

These resolutions are strong, but they only half express the feelings of thousands of honest Democrats who worked hard to place their party in power—to give a few traitors the opportunity to barter away their own and their party's honor.

As was the case in New York City, speeches in favor of an income, as against a tariff, tax, were received with great favor by the audience.

The Income Tax Not Sectional.

When the parrots were ridiculed out of their screeches to the effect that the income tax is "monarchical" and "inquisitorial" they took up the concerted cry that it is sectional. It is evident, however, that, parrot-like, they have no accurate idea of the meaning of the word they have been taught to repeat. Yesterday, for instance, they showed clearly that the tax is not sectional at all. They printed dispatches against it from all sections, and one of them remarked: "They come from all parts of the country, showing that hatred to class legislation is not confined to any one section."

The dispatches referred to come from bankers, merchants and capitalists. They show that the opposition is not geographical, but comprises those in all parts of the country who will pay the tax when it is imposed. It is not the South and West against the East, as has been pretended. It is simply the desire to escape the payment of any tax that can be avoided. And this desire is confined to no section and knows no class.—New York World.

The Pauper-Mummy Industry.

The purchase of two mummies by Mr. Andrew Carnegie for scientific purposes, the history attached to which is supposed to indicate their royal lineage, has served to elicit the startling statement from an official of the Philadelphia Custom House that imports of this character are not subject to any duty—thus revealing a most extraordinary oversight in the framing of the McKinley tariff, the result of which will be to expose the home market (consisting mainly of museums to the unbounded competition of ancient Egypt, with its pitch-preserved dynasties as far back as the days of Menes.—Philadelphia Record.

The Unyielding Democracy.

If anybody, Republican, Populist or half-baked Democrat, thinks that the rank and file of the Democratic party is weakening on tariff reform, he is wofully mistaken. Their backs are stiffer than ever, and the only effect of a traitorous surrender by a few Senatorial accidents is only making them madder and more earnest.—St. Paul Globe.

To Whiten the Teeth.

A homely set of teeth will spoil the prettiest mouth ever fashioned after Cupid's bowstring. On the other hand, a commonplace face becomes positively attractive when the lips open and disclose two rows of clean, well-kept ivories. They need not be like dentrifice advertisements, and the "pearls" of the old-fashioned heroine are in this practical age but slightly esteemed, but there must be about the well-groomed mouth a wholesome, cleanly look. Precipitated chalk will keep the teeth in fine condition. Have a box of it always on your toilet stand and see what it will do towards freshening up a dingy mouthful of teeth.—New York World.

Water Weeds.

That strange water-weed, the bladder-wort is carnivorous, like some of those sinister tropical plants which seek what meat they may devour. The tiny bladders attached to the leaves and leaf-stalks are each furnished with a door, the whole acting on the eel-trap principle. Any small water-creature that ventures to peep in is seized in the clutches of the murderous plant, and straightway is swallowed and assimilated.

Plants.

The large majority of plants are scentless, and probably not one-tenth of the hundred thousand flowering plants known to botanists are odorous. Of the fifty known species of the mignonette family only the one so highly prized in our gardens is fragrant, and only about a dozen of the 100 species of violets are scented. In many large genera the scentless varieties are as 100 to one.

IN PRE-GLACIAL DAYS

REMAINS OF THE EARLY SETTLERS OF WYOMING.

Evidences of Singular Creatures of the Eocene and Miocene Periods Found in the Bad Lands—Success of Agents of the Museum of Natural History.

Found in a New State.

The immense county of Uintah, extending from the north end of what constitutes Yellowstone Park, marks the western boundary of the State of Wyoming and makes the southwestern corner of that recently admitted State. This corner has some of that peculiar western formation known as bad lands, and this spot covers an area of about 5,000 square miles and is particularly rich in fossils of preglacial animals. These bad lands, according to official geology, were once lakes back in what are known as the eocene and miocene periods of tertiary time, which means the first two of the three principal divisions during which were laid down the groups of rocks.

It is averred by these scientists that the rivers discharging into these lakes so wrought on the surrounding soil that the lake basins became filled with alluvial material, and in these old beds and in the cliffs surrounding them are found the fossil skeletons of the peculiar fauna that illustrated life in those early days. It may be added that while the estimated time since these periods varies, it is evident that the first mentioned was not less than 100,000 years ago and the second at least half as much. Into this region a party of fossil hunters penetrated a year ago, to collect specimens for the Museum of Natural History of New York and camped on this region six months. Their search was rewarded with finds of some remarkable creatures hitherto almost wholly unknown to the science of paleontology.

Most notable among these specimens is that of an animal never yet found outside of America—a huge mammal that represents a compromise between the elephant and the rhinoceros and which, singularly enough, was equipped with three sets of horns. Two pointed, upright sets of horns projected from the top of the head, two forward from the end of the nose or snout downward, and two inclining with a slight curve backward, midway on the snout. The animal was a swamp and lagoon denizen and the equipment denotes an aquatic root digger. Of this creature this New York party secured fifteen skulls and one entire skeleton, one of the skulls measuring over two and a half feet across, indicating a monster of no mean dimensions. As a courtesy to the Uintah Mountains, near a spur of which the whole aggregation was found, the beast was named Uintathericum, and palentology may add another oddity to its catalogues and another accession to its quantity of orthographical terror.

Many, perhaps most, of these fossils are in solid, greenish sandstone, and when seen on the surface frequently stand out in bas-relief. But something far more appalling than a slowly depositing, alluvial process is necessary to account for the evidently simultaneous death of a herd of any kind of creatures, and especially does this process not explain their fossils in compact sandstone.

Another rare American specimen secured was the patirofelis, an entire skeleton of which was found at the foot of a cliff on a small tributary of Green River. This is the supposed ancestor of the modern feline tribes and is interesting as marking the advent of the swimming carnivora on the plane of development. Only two small broken pieces of jaw had hitherto been secured of this animal. Another large mammal found was the palæosyops. The snout was ornamented with a single twenty-inch horn, an eocene product, and was then not larger than a modern sheep, but in 50,000 years had developed to almost elephantine proportions. His present congenaic cousins are the tapir and rhinoceros. These explorers also found the geological ancestor of the horse, but no longer than a shepherd dog. Tertiary Wyoming was semi-tropical, as numerous monkeys are in the collection, as well as other animals belonging to the warmer zones.

His Order.

A speaker who has planned an address for a multitude, and finds himself confronted with but a single auditor, sometimes fails to readjust his remarks, and the result is apt to be ludicrous. A little story illustrative of this point is told in connection with a former president of the University of North Carolina.

One day, as this dignified and stately personage was walking about the campus, he observed an unlawful assemblage of students at some little distance. He did not hasten his steps, but proceeded slowly toward them with his head down and his eyes apparently bent in contemplation of his own boots.

When this leisurely proceding had brought him to the spot where the students had been gathered, only one young man remained, the others having precipitately departed.

The president raised his head and surveyed the solitary culprit with apparent severity, although the young man always contended that he detected a twinkle in his keen eyes.

"Sir," said the president in a commanding tone, "instantly disperse to your several places of abode!"

Difficult though the feat required certainly was, the young man executed to the best of his ability by "dispersing" without further delay.

DUET IN A HORSE CAR.

With an Accompaniment by the Conductor Ending in His Enrichment.

Two women boarded a Broadway cable car at Thirtieth street at matinee time Saturday. With a great deal of fluttering and chattering they secured two seats. The car had gone on about a block when the conductor held out his hand.

"O, Jarrie, don't mind, I've got the change right here," said one, delving into a little purse.

"Now, don't bother," said the other almost in the same breath. "I've got just the right change here," and she began to dig into a purse.

"Why, here it is," exclaimed both in unison, at the same time shoving coins in the conductor's outstretched palm.

"O, why didn't you let me pay it?" they both exclaimed together again.

"Why, I just had the correct change," was another joint exclamation.

"Papdon me, ladies, but one of you gave me a dime and the other a penny," the conductor broke in, showing the coins in his hand.

"Impossible! I'm sure I had just a dime in change," said both in one breath.

The conductor smiled sadly, and remained there standing with a mute expression, with the coins exposed in his still outstretched palm.

"That's so," exclaimed both women, looking at the coins. "Well, I'll see, but I'm sure I didn't have a penny," was the next joint exclamation, and both shook the contents of their purses into their laps. There were several coppers among the change that rolled out, and then the women exclaimed together:

"That's so, I forgot, it must have been me." Both held their hands out to receive the surplus cent, and the conductor looked puzzled.

"O, how singular," was the next joint exclamation, and then both told the conductor he could keep the penny. The fare gatherer bowed gravely and moved toward the rear, while the women began a discussion as to how it could have happened.—New York Sun.

A SINGULAR TOWER.

What It Commemorates No One Seems t Know.

At Sarnath, a few miles from Bengal, India, are many interesting ruins, and this fact has led many to believe that Benares was originally built there. As early as 399 A. D. the place was visited by Chinese Buddhist pilgrims, and it then presented an architectural picture of great magnificence. It was here that Sakya Muni, the founder of Buddhism, entered upon his mission. Rising out of the ruins is a remarkable tower 93 feet in diameter, 110 feet above the surrounding ruins, and 128 feet above the surrounding plain. What it commemorates no one seems to know, but it is probable that it is in some way related to Buddhism.

QUEEN VICTORIA is seventy-five years old, and has been a Queen fifty-seven years. The old lady has had a comparatively uneventful but a very happy and contented life. If she lives three years longer she will have broken the record of throne-holding. In a domestic way she has done her duty. She has three sons and four daughters, twelve grandsons, twenty granddaughters, and no end of great grandsons and granddaughters. The succession is not in danger. She has been a model of the domestic virtues, and a ruler without reproach. She married for love herself, though since that time she has been an inveterate matchmaker for material and political reasons. No age since the Elizabethan has redounded more to the glory of Great Britain than the Victorian. It is no wonder therefore that all England celebrated the good old lady's birthday with enthusiasm, and that the world over there were cordial wishes for many happy returns of the day.

Coal Mine Fatalities.

One thousand and sixty persons were killed in coal mines in Great Britain, during last year, and sixty-five persons in metalliferous mines, both numbers being above the yearly average.

LITTLE EMILE (as his sister Elli enters the room with an apple in her hand)—Let's play Adam and Eve, sis.' Elli—How? Emile—You tempt me with the apple, and I eat it—Fliegende Blaetter.

A PRETTY girl can usually forgive a man for staring at her, but you wouldn't think so to hear her tell the folks about it after she gets home.—Somerville Journal.

HUNTING THE ELK.

Why It Has Vanished from the Plains of the West.

Elk-hunting on the plains of the West is now a thing of the past, for the elk has been banished from the wide, timberless tracts by the advance of civilization and now seeks refuge in the wild hill lands or timber tracts of mountainous regions. Little over a decade ago the elk roamed in vast herds over the plains and less than two decades ago herds of 1,000 elk were not uncommon sights. Elk-hunting then was an exciting sport and profitable, too. An army lieutenant thus gives an account of a hunt he participated in on the Loup River, Nebraska: Our party swept in a swinging gallop over the ridge beyond which were the unsuspecting elk. By the time the dumfounded brutes had "bunched"— the first act of an affrighted herd—we were right among them. Many of the older hunters dropped their carbines across their saddle-bows, and pulling their revolvers delivered a deadly fire at blinding range. Dashing through this little bewildered herd like a gust of wind, the hunting party swung to the left of the slope of the long ridge where, from 150 to 200 yards away, the main herd had "bunched," 600 to 800, if not 1,000, strong. With all the rough rattle of shots, the hard hitting of horns against horns, and the drum-like clatter of the hoofs, there was a singular silence, incongruous with so much rapidly varying excitement; for orders had been given that not a whisper should be heard till the elk had broken in an organized run in a definite course. As the western wall of elk-horns opened in that direction, with a princely buck at the head, there went up from us a yell that clove the very clouds, and scattered the band only to bunch again. That shout delayed them hardly three seconds, but that three seconds made a success of the hunt, and before it ended we were among them. Far down on my right the Marshal's carbine had been knocked from his hand by the horns of a plunging buck, while near me, on the left, a burly corporal, with empty smoking pistol, brought the barrel down like a club on the head of an elk that was trying, in the crush, to push its way directly over his horse. The elk fell to the ground stunned. It was hand to hoof and horns for a brief second or two, and then the great surging mass broke and the long chase began. After it was ended we assembled at camp, and then the wagon brought in the carcasses of nineteen elk.

A HERD OF ELK.

"THE FOURTH POWER."

An Attempt to Indicate What It Looks Like.

In a recent number of St. Nicholas the above question was asked, more as an amusing puzzle than as a serious mathematical problem. Two clever correspondents, however, have sent answers. Paul R. Heyl, of Philadelphia, incloses a model in wire open work and writes: "When we wish to represent the fourth power (which, being of four dimensions, we may call a hypercube), we may do so in solid perspective by placing a cube diagonally above another and a little behind it, and joining the corresponding corners." He refers inquirers to a book, "Scientific Romances."

"THE FOURTH POWER."

A younger correspondent, Arthur Howe Carpenter, of Deadwood, S. D., also defines the properties of the fourth power figure: "It is a figure bounded by eight cubes, just as a cube is bounded by six squares; it has sixteen corners, twenty-four squares, and thirty-two edges."

One of the correspondents says that this model shows as nearly as possible "what the fourth power looks like;" what it really looks like cannot be shown. This figure has many of its qualities, but the thing itself is only a theory of geometry.

Wilkins Won His Case.

Mr. Sergeant Wilkins once defended a breach-of-promise case for a singularly ugly little man, which he told the defendant, after reading his brief, must be "bounced" through. And the Sergeant did bounce it through in a truly remarkable manner. "Gentlemen of the jury," he said, at the close of a most eloquent speech, "you have heard the evidence for the plaintiff; and, gentlemen of the jury, you have seen and admired that most bewitching plaintiff herself. Gentlemen, do you believe that this enchanting, this fascinating, this captivating, this accomplished lady would for one moment favor the advances or listen with anything save scorn and indignation to the amorous protestations of the wretched and repulsive homunculus, the deformed and degraded defendant?" His client looked up from the well of the court and piteously murmured: "Mr. Sergeant Wilkins! Oh, Mr. Sergeant Wilkins!" "Silence, sir!" replied the Sergeant, in a wrathful undertone. "Gentlemen," he continued, bringing his first down heavily on the desk before him, "do you think that this lovely lady, this fair and smiling creature, would ever have permitted an offer of marriage to be made to her by this miserable atom of humanity, this stunted creature, who would have to stand on a sheet of note paper to look over twopence?" The jury at once gave a verdict for the defendant.

"Well, they seemed pretty good when I talked with your daughter; but, seeing you, I've come to the conclusion that I haven't any."—Washington Star.

PAYING A COMPLIMENT.—Dibbs (who has been waiting in his friend's studio)—Ah! here you are at last. Your dog has been paying a good compliment to that bit of scene-painting. I had to drive the little beggar off. Dauber (agreeably surprised)—What was he doing? Dibbs—Oh, he mistook that river for real water, and he started lapping it! By the by, what river does it represent? Dauber (savagely)—River be hanged! That isn't a river, it's a prairie fire.—Tid-Bits.

Canadian Canal.

The Hurontario Ship Canal Company of Canada has been incorporated by the Canadian legislature for the purpose of constructing a ship canal from Toronto, on Lake Ontario, to Georgian Bay, near Collingwood. The stock capital of the company is $65,000,000, of which $1,000,000 must be paid and 10 per cent subscribed before it has legal existence. One clause in the franchise requires that the directors must be British subjects. A number of American capitalists are interested in the scheme. It is a revival of the old project which had been advocated at intervals for many years.

Asking for Information.

Dr. Parry was quite witty, and always took the laugh heartily when he got the worst of a joke. On one occasion, in company with Drs. Mothershead and Bullard, he was returning from a call on the Bluff road when a sallow-faced, 16-year-old boy stopped his work and ran to the fence to intercept them.

"Just look at that boy," said one of the doctors.

"Leave him to me," said Parry.

Mounting the fence the boy shouted: "How is that man?" (referring to the patient they had just left.)

"He's sick," replied Parry.

"I knowed that already," said the boy.

"Well, then, why did you ask?" demanded Parry.

The boy instantly rejoined: "Cause I wanted to see if you knew anything or was a durn fool."

His companions laughed, while Parry hung his head, feeling that for once he had met his match.—Albany Argus.

To Exterminate Roaches.

I tried every remedy I could hear of, writes a housewife, and I was always inquiring. They seemed to fatten on my poisons; at least, their numbers did not suffer diminution. One day I took up an old almanac and idly turned its tattered yellow pages, and on the last fragment of a leaf came this: "Equal portions of corn meal and red lead mixed with molasses and spread on plates will destroy roaches." And it did. I put it in several dishes and set them on the floor, and at 9 o'clock stole softly out to see if they ate it. The dishes were so covered with roaches that the mixture was scarcely visible. The next night there were fewer at the feast, and in a week not a roach was seen. I lived seven years thereafter in the same house and never saw one.

The Cost of Living.

According to some recent statistics of the cost of living an Englishman spends on an average $48 a year for food, a Frenchman $47, a German $42, a Spaniard $33, an Italian $24, and a Russian $23. Of meat the Englishman eats 109 pounds a year, the Frenchman 87, the German 64, the Italian 26, and the Russian 51. Of bread the Englishman consumes 380 pounds, the Frenchman 540, the German 560, the Spaniard 480, the Italian 460, and the Russian 635.—Scientific American.

A Georgia Egg.

Mr. W. L. Vaughn of Lawrenceville, has a queer egg. In its appearance there is nothing peculiar about it. It is about the size of an ordinary hen's egg, although not much over half as heavy. But roll the egg out of your hand on to a table, and then the fun commences, for as soon as this is done it begins to perform the most astonishing antics. It will dance around like a top for a few seconds, and then settle down—on its little end.—Atlanta Constitution.

Those Little Sieves.

The kidneys, separate from the blood, as it passes through them, impurities for which the final medium of liberation from the system is the bladder. When their function is suspended direful results ensue. Among these are dropsy, Bright's disease, diabetes and maladies which terminate in some one of these. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters stimulates the kidneys, not as an unmedicated alcoholic stimulant would by inciting them, but by gently impelling them to renewed action and perpetuating their activity and vigor. Thus the blood is once more insured purification and the organs themselves saved from destruction. Malaria, constipation, liver complaint, nervousness, dyspepsia and rheumatism are all thoroughly remedied by the Bitters, which is, moreover, a most thorough appetizer, general tonic and sleep promoter. Use it regularly, not semi-occasionally.

How to Butter Thin Bread.

"I like my sandwiches with the bread cut thin," said Mr. Googleby, "but I seldom try to make them in that way myself, for they always make me angry, the bread crumbles and curls up so when I try to spread it. Mrs. Googleby has no such trouble, however, and this mornin' I discovered why; she butters the cut end of the loaf before cuttin' off the slice. Simple, ain't it; and Mrs. Googleby tells me it's as old as the hills."—New York Sun.

She (carefully questioning)—Are you a married man? He (carefully answering—I don't know. My latest telegram from Chicago says that the jury is still out.

NATURE seems to have fitted some men with glass eyes.

THE VERY THING FOR CHILDREN—Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're so tiny, so easily taken, so easy and natural in the way they act—no disturbance, no unpleasantness, no reaction afterward. They're made of nothing but refined and concentrated vegetable extracts—sugar-coated. One of them at a dose is a corrective, a regulator, a gentle laxative.

When you feel "a touch of biliousness" or indigestion, take one of these little Pellets. They go right to the spot.

They absolutely and permanently cure Constipation, Sour Stomach, Dizziness, Sick or Bilious Headaches, and every derangement of the liver, stomach, and bowels.

Almost never does Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy fail to cure the very worst cases of chronic Catarrh. You can judge of the chances of it from the makers' offer. They'll guarantee it in every case.

Raw Eggs as a Tonic.

A raw egg is an excellent tonic with which to begin these warm spring days. It is strengthening and tends to prevent that tired feeling so prevalent at this season of the year. If prepared in the following way it is really a delicious drink:

Put the yolk of an egg into a dish with a teaspoonful of white sugar and a teaspoonful of orange or lemon juice, and beat lighty together with a fork. Put the whites on a plate and add a pinch of salt, then, with a broad-bladed knife, beat it to a stiff froth. Now, as lightly as possible, mix all together in the dish; then as lightly transfer it to a clean tumbler, which it will nearly fill if properly made, as it soon becomes liquid and loses its snowy look. Any fruit juice may be used in place of orange or lemon, or even brandy if the doctor has ordered it.—New York World.

THE LADIES.

The pleasant effect and perfect safety with which ladies may use the California liquid laxative, Syrup of Figs, under all conditions, makes it their favorite remedy. To get the true and genuine article, look for the name of the California Fig Syrup Co., printed near the bottom of the package.

Nothing Surprising.

Sir. Walter Scott called one day at the office of Joseph Gillon, an Edinburgh lawyer. "Why, Joseph," said Sir Walter, "this place is as hot as an oven!" "Well, and isn't it here that I make my bread?" retorted Gillon.

When the Heart is Affected

By Rheumatism or any of the muscles near that organ, it is like tampering with an electric wire, for death may come at any moment. If life is worth it, do not hesitate, but get Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co, 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send you two large bottles, enough for one month's treatment, by first express. It is not as quick as electricity, but it will save your life if you take it in time. Agents Wanted. 24-26

Greatest on Earth.

James M. Brooks, Washington Ave., St. Louis, Mo., makes affidavit that he suffered from Rheumatism for years, until persuaded to try Drummond's Lightning Remedy, and that by its use he has been fully restored. He says the remedy is the greatest on earth. This is high praise, but fully warranted by other miraculous cures. If you want to be cured, send $5 to the Drummon Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles of their remedy. This treatment lasts one month, and will cure any ordinary case. Agents Wanted. 26

It is Rank Nonsense

To suppose that rheumatism, gout neuralgia, and kindred diseases can be cured in a few day's time. These poisons can only be eradicated by reaching them through the blood. Infallible Scotch Cure, just introduced in America, reaches and cures the disease by driving the poison from the blood. It never fails. Try it. Accept no substitute. For sale by Matheny & Gerke. 25-26

Where Are We Drifting?

Literally millions of our American people are suffering from nervous troubles, mental depression, sleeplessness, loss of nerve and brain power, etc. Lagrippe is responsible for thousands of new cases, but a specific has been found at last, the invention of a celebrated Scotch chemist. It is called Vitaline and Nervetone. Take no other. It never disappoints. Sold by Matheny & Gerke. 25 26

Less Than Half Rates To Colorado.

On June 23d and 24th The North-Western Line will sell excursion tickets to Denver, Pueblo and Colorado Springs and return at the exceedingly low rate of $27.50—less than one fare for the round trip; tickets good for return passage until July 27, inclusive. Solid Vestibuled Trains, Palace Sleeping Cars and Superb Dining Cars through between Chicago and Denver daily, via the Chicago & North-Western R'y. For detailed information apply to agents of connecting lines, or address W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago. 24-25

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

Very Old and Tough Lambs led to the Slaughter at Garrett. And They Seemed to Like It.

The Republican County Convention met at Garrett last Saturday, June 16, and by the help of two or three chairmen and as many secretaries, they managed to get a ticket fitted out between 11 a. m and 7 p. m. They met in Wagner's Opera House, and J. D. Leighty called them to order. Then Mr. Penfield put in nomination for permanent chairman, Hon. E. D. Hartman, making quite a speech on Hartman's grand qualities, a small matter that seems to have been overlooked at the late republican judicial convention. F. W. Willis, of the Waterloo Press, and M. E. Smith, of the Butler Record, were nominated for secretaries. On the vote being taken Smith got every vote from Wilmington township, and Willis got all the rest of the county, solid. They were getting him ready by degrees, for the unanimous choice that came later, for they knew how easily his head was affected by these little things. Then the meeting tried to do some business, and finally adopted the most of the democratic plan, as usual, leaving out the best. The townships all voted with the sealed envelopes, but they had the secretary and tellers get the vote all ready, and then announced it so rapidly, that as far as the delegations over the room could catch on, it might as well not have been read at all. And the reporters had to be lightning writers to get any good of the reading. But they managed to help one another and get help from the secretary, and thus got a fair report. Encouraged by his big vote, Bro. Willis tried to get a rule adopted for primary elections in future. But the machine men saw this would be altogether too fair a method for their purposes, and sat down on him with a dull sickening slump. They laid his resolution on the table and he sat down by it to hold a post mortem over its remains. Fatty Sullivan here wanted a committee on resolations. But he was told that the traditions of the party extending back at least 18 months, all went against adopting any resolutions at county conventions. Sullivan's resolutions will not be printed in the report, though many guessed what they were. Then someone said dinner was ready and there was an adjournment. The candidates were called forward and before leaving the room they had to step up to the captain's office. It was a wise business move on the part of Chairman Leighty, as a few hours later the most of them would not have put up a dollar to save the G. O. P.

AFTERNOON.

As it had been decided not to call out the names of the candidates publicly, a written statement of each one's candidacy for a given office, was handed to the chairman. Then some one wanted these names all read before any ballot was taken. This was objected to, as some candidate might want to withdraw in case some candidate who lived near him should get a nomination, and this plan would enable him to drop out and no one know he had been in. It was a great scheme to save wounded feelings but it left the delegates in the dark. So the candidates for only one office would be read by the secretary, then the voting would go on till that office was settled. Then another office would be taken up, and so on. They had decided to take the old way and leave commissioner, the most important office, till the last, when a great many delegates would be gone and but little interest felt in the matter. This would of course make it pretty certain they would select poor sticks, but they were not caring for the county; they wanted to look out for the offices that had money in them. They took the same plan as to representative.

They began balloting on clerk, four names being read by the secretary, Eugene McDowell, of Union, J. G. Johnson, of Grant, M. F. Long and F. A. Brink, of Wilmington.

CLERK—FIRST BALLOT.

McDowell	71½
Johnson	51½
Long	84½
Brink	41½
Total	249

Necessary to a choice on full vote of 250, 126.

SECOND BALLOT.

McDowell	85
Johnson	31
Long	92
Brink	41

Brink withdrew.

THIRD BALLOT.

McDowell	99
Johnson	23
Long	128
Total	250

Long got it.

AUDITOR.

The secretary read all the victims in the auditor class; H. M. Bicknell, of Keyser, W. B. Campbell and A. N. Wilson, of Union, and M. E. Reynolds, of Richland:

FIRST BALLOT.

Bicknell	94⅙
Campbell	52½
Reynolds	80⅙
Wilson	22⅙
Total	250

Wilson withdrew.

SECOND BALLOT.

Bicknell	109
Campbell	41
Reynolds	100
Total	250

THIRD BALLOT.

Bicknell	126
Campbell	13
Reynolds	111
Total	250

Giving it to Bicknell.

PAINT cracks.—It often costs more to prepare a house for repainting that has been painted in the first place with cheap ready-mixed paints, than it would to have painted it twice with strictly pure white lead, ground in pure linseed oil.

Strictly Pure White Lead

forms a permanent base for repainting and never has to be burned or scraped off on account of scaling or cracking. It is always smooth and clean. To be sure of getting strictly pure white lead, purchase any of the following brands:

"Anchor," "Collier,"
"Eckstein," "Shipman,"
"Armstrong & McKelvy," "Southern,"
"Beymer-Bauman," "Red Seal,"
"Davis-Chambers," "Fahnestock."

FOR COLORS.—National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, a one-pound can to a 25-pound keg of Lead and mix your own paints. Saves time and annoyance in matching shades, and insures the best paint that it is possible to put on wood.

TREASURER.

The list of victims for this office as read shows: G. O. Denison, of Grant, David W. Fair, of Butler Tp. and James Provines, of Jackson. Geo. Pugsley, of Wilmington, was read, but he declined.

FIRST BALLOT.

Denison	93⅔
Fair	70⅔
Provines	84⅔

SECOND BALLOT.

Denison	106
Fair	83
Provines	61

THIRD BALLOT.

Denison	108
Fair	102
Provines	40

Provines withdrew.

FOURTH BALLOT.

Denison	98
Fair	152

And Fair got it.

SHERIFF.

The names read for this office were: L. A. Henning and Wm. Kennedy, of Smithfield; H. H. Knott, J N. McBride and Henry P. Stroh, of Grant.

FIRST BALLOT.

Henning	11
Knott	39
Kennedy	51
McBride	17
Stroh	130

And all were knocked out on first round, except Stroh.

SURVEYOR.

There was but one candidate for this empty honor. D. W. Stewart, of Wilmington, and he was put on by acclamation.

RECORDER.

Here came in the fun, for 11 candidates showed up on the secretary's log book, viz: Henry Baker, of Concord, W. H. Crane, of Richland, J. H. Elson, of Fairfield, B. F. Greist, of Newville, Milton C. Jones, of Franklin, H. A. Leeh, J. A. Sawyer and U. S. Raut, of Union, Thomas Phillips, of Jackson, Geo. H. Miles, of Richland, and John H. Topper, of Wilmington.

FIRST BALLOT.

Baker	64
Crane	9½
Elson	35
Greist	37
Jones	46
Leeh	5
Miles	8½
Phillips	9
Raut	26
Sawyer	3
Topper	5

Topper and Crane withdrew.

SECOND BALLOT.

Baker	75
Elson	33
Greist	27
Jones	73
Leeh	3
Miles	6
Phillips	5
Raut	25
Sawyer	1

Miles and Phillips withdrew.

THIRD BALLOT.

Baker	94
Elson	36
Greist	27
Jones	77
Raut	16

Greist and Raut withdrew. No votes had been cast for Sawyer and Leeh on this ballot, and their names were dropped.

FOURTH BALLOT.

Baker	113
Elson	52
Jones	94

FIFTH BALLOT.

Baker	110
Elson	49
Jones	90

Elson withdrew.

SIXTH BALLOT.

Baker	114
Jones	132

And Jones had beaten the field.

CORONER.

S. Z. Dickinson, of Grant, and Dr. Brunson, of Newville, were read off.

FIRST BALLOT.

Brunson	166
Dickinson	43

Brunson was nominated. ("Dr. Whitecloud" got about 30 votes)

REPRESENTATIVE.

F. W. Willis, editor of the Waterloo Press, was nominated by acclamation.

COMMISSIONER—NORTH DISTRICT.

The names read for this office were: J. W. Bateman and David Goodrich, of Fairfield, Ed. Campbell and C. W. Bonbrake, of Smithfield, Talma Rummel, of Troy.

FIRST BALLOT.

Bateman	91
Bonbrake	6
Campbell	45
Goodrich	16
Rummel	88
Total	246

Bonbrake and Goodrich withdrew.

SECOND BALLOT.

Bateman	138
Campbell	35
Rummel	70
Total	243

Bateman was nominated.

COMMISSIONER—S. W. DISTRICT.

The names read were, Isaac Hague and Lyman Lockwood, of Union, B. B. Long and Henry Hood, of Grant, John Yarde, of Keyser.

FIRST BALLOT.

Hague	205
Hood	9
Long	0
Lockwood	4
Yarde	33
Total	251

Giving it to Hague.
And the convention was over.

Notes on the Convention.

H. P Stroh, the nominee for Sheriff, was a populist two years ago. In their convention of May 26, 1892, when Cal. Grube was nominated, he and Grube led the others. The two votes taken showed:

	1ST.	2ND
Grube	171⅓	213⅓
Stroh	84⅔	80⅔

It may appear from this that the populists will indorse him, but we cannot say.

Gallant, glorious old Union township, with the warm blue skies bending over her, with the glorious old flag floating over her school house, (sometimes) and the variegated and faded weather flags flying from her Gandy block! The nations shall sing her praise. With 34 delegates in the convention, she managed to remember the most of her own candidates. She gave McDowell for clerk 31 votes, and then let him down to 28. She gave Campbell for auditor 17 votes and Wilson 11. But to outsiders she gave three each to Bicknell and Reynolds. Wilson dropped out, and on the 2nd ballot Campbell got 17, Bicknell 9 and Reynolds 8. On the third Campbell got 1, Bicknell 16 and and Reynolds 17. They gave the Auburn candidates for recorder, Leeh 2, Raut 11 and Sawyer 1. But they gave to outsiders, Baker 10, Elson 2, Griest 1, Jones 5, Phillips 1. The second ballot Leeh got 0, Raut 9, Sawyer 0. But Baker got 12, Elson 2, Griest 1, Jones 9, Phillips 1. The 3rd ballot Raut got 5, other Auburnites none. But Baker got 16, Elson 2, Griest 1, Jones 10. The 4th, 5th and 6th ballots the home men were ignored utterly. But where the Auburn delegation shone out gloriously for home markets, etc., was on commissioner S. W., viz, Isaac Hague 34. They had reserved all the great overflow of their pent up love for Hague, and Hague alone. Union township is a daisy from Daisyville.

The ear of man hath not heard a convention as noisy as this. Mr. Hartman is an excellent presiding officer, but the crowd now and then utterly got loose. They would not have succeeded in finishing two nominations by dark, but for the persistent pounding of the chairman's gavel, and the decisive commands he kept hurling at them. They wanted to talk. It appeared that was all they came for.

Talk about the superior intelligence of the republican masses. It is right the other way. The democratic delegates at Waterloo had never heard of the new way of casting the ballots till they came to the convention. And there was a slight change from that when the balloting began. Yet the delegates took it up at once and made no errors. Republican leaders by the score were present and saw how it was done, and admired it. But when with all this experience, they attempted to put it into use at Garrett, they kept getting things wrong. The tellers would get mixed up, and every little while, the secretary in announcing the vote, would get the names of the candidates mixed up with names of townships. Their secretary is an old hand at the business, while the secretary and tellers at Waterloo never did that kind of work before. Democrats are squarely ahead in "readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic."

There was no picture of G. Washington and such anti-ring statesmen. There was one of B. Harrison, one of Blaine, but of High Taxer McKinley there were two. One, we suppose was to remind farmers of the McKinley price of wheat and one for the McKinley price of wool.

One republican candidate was in town last week, fixed up with a hickory shirt, and somewhat faded overals tucked into his boots. He did not seem much at ease in this rig, but it may have had a good effect. Republican voters are easily deceived.

About Sugar.

An exchange says that Senator Jones, who appears to be one of the best informed men in Congress on sugar questions, has given a detailed explanation of the new tariff bill. He says "the McKinley bill has not given the people one ounce of free sugar," and explains that by imposing a duty of six-tenths of a cent on refined sugar it taxed the people $23,000,000, all of which went into the pockets of refiners. Besides $15,000,000 had to be paid out of the treasury in the form of sugar bounties, so that the total sugar tax on the people of the United States amounted to $38,000,000 per annum, of which not one dollar had gone into the federal treasury. The duty which it was proposed to impose by the new bill would cost the people about $50,000,000, of which $36,000,000 would go into the treasury, $6,000,000 to the planters in the form of protection and $6,000,000 to the refiners. The refiners would get but one-fourth of what they got under the present law. This is probably a fair and truthful explanation of the sugar question as it stands now.

The Horseman.

Use a brush instead of a currycomb.

A good driver must have a love for it.

A college for horseshoers would be a good scheme.

To have a good rodster a man must know how to drive.

A mean scorer should never be allowed to tire a field of good, honest horses.

Go slow early in the spring, that you may be able to go fast when the time comes.

Great horses, like great men, often make their own opportunities and boom themselves.

"A sure winner!" How many times we hear it in the course of a year but, alas, to what purpose?

One good horse means profit and pleasure. A dozen ordinary ones means loss and disappointment.

Horses are selling, which is more than a great many other manufactured products are doing at even any price.

Horses need water as often as men, or oftener. It is better to give them water five or six times daily than let them drink rarely and heavily.

Old Settlers' Metting.

HON. FREEMAN KELLEY, PRESIDENT OF THE DAY.

The annual gathering of the Pioneers Old Settlers of DeKalb Co. was held on the court square at Auburn June 29, 1894. The meeting was called to order at 11 a. m. by president Freeman Kelly, and prayer was offered by Rev. W. L. Meese. Mr. Kelley in a pleasant way thanked the audience for their presence and the singers not being present, the business was proceeded with, by a motion which prevailed for the chair to appoint a committee on nominations for the next year. The following gentlemen were appointed as that committee P. B. Nimmons, R. G. Daniels, O. C. Clark, W. L. Blair and D. W. Fair. Adjourned to 1:30 p. m. At 1:30 the audience was called to order and a double quartet of male voices rendered a beautiful selection, after which the secretary's report was read by D. Z. Hoffman, this was followed by their report of the biography by M. B. Willis. The singers then gave an excellent song which was well received by the large audience. Next came the annual address by Hon E. D. Hartman, which was very good and instructive. He spoke of the pioneers laying a better foundation than they ever knew, not only in a moral sense, but in the matter of economy, saying that if the principles advocated by the pioneers had been more strictly adhered to by the following generations they would be better off financially today, and there would be more careful expenditure of the public funds. He thought that all old settlers should be very much interested in the management of the public affairs of the county, and that they had reasons to be proud of the structure reared upon the foundations laid by them in early days, also to be proud of the county of their choice as one of the best in the state today.

After the address the quartet rendered a song which was comic and amusing. The committee's report was then read as follows:

President Jas. E. Rose, of Auburn; vice pres., W. R. Emerson, Troy; sec., D. Z. Hoffman, Auburn; biographer, Moses B. Willis, of Auburn; treas., R. G. Daniels, of Waterloo; Tp. Presidents, P. Noel, Butler; Wm. Carr, Jackson; S. S. Shutt and J. D. Leighty, Concord; Geo. DeLong, Newville; S. P. Wartenbe, Stafford; George Sawyer, Wilmington, south; W. L. Blair, Wilmington, north; F. W. Willis, Grant; J. W. McKay; Union; L. W. Treesh, Richland; O. C. Clark, Keyser; J. M. Brumbeck, Fairfield; E. R. Shoemaker, Smithfield; F. D. Oberlin, Franklin; Talma Rummel, Troy. The audience was about to be dismissed on account of an approaching storm when Andrew Sponhoner an old gentleman from Jackson township stepped to the platform and amused the audience by giving a comic song about the dosing calomel in the early days. Morris Widney then delighted the audience with a comic song in which he imitated the hooting of the owl to perfection. He was encored and gave another fine selection, after which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. W. L. Meese, when the large crowd dispersed without the completion of the program on account of the storm, which seemed to be an annual occurrence.

"SUN DO MOVE" JASPER.

How the Reverend Gentleman Disposes of the Claims of Astronomers.

Rev. John Jasper, of Richmond, Va., the most noted of all slave preachers, is now over eighty years old and believes as firmly as he did in 1878, when his famous sermon was preached, which, he says, was composed in order to set at rest some doubts which had arisen in the mind of a young member of his flock. After quoting numerous passages of scripture in support of the position he assumed with regard to the solar system, Mr. Jasper paid his respects as follows to the "philosophers," as he calls the people who reject his views:

"Dese here philosophers say dat de sun am one hundred an' fo' million miles from de earth. Now, how'd dey find dat out? Dey says, too, dat ef you shoot a cannon ball from a raig'lar army cannon dat it takes 702 years ter get to de sun. How'd dey find dat out? Dey ain't but one way an' dat's ter do it. An' if dey did do it dey wouldn't know it onless somebody set on dat cannon ball 702 years widout eatin' or sleepin' ontil it git to de sun, an' den set on it 702 years ontel it git back? 'Sides, 'sposin' he kin do it, an' 'cyarn't, ain't he got ter have er cooker an' washer' an' ain't dat cooker an' washer got ter eat an' sleep as well as him? Well, 'sposin' dat man an' dat cooker an' washer set on dat cannon ball seven hundred an' two years ontil it git to de sun, how dey goin' ter find out dat de sun am one hundrerd an' fo' million miles from the urth? Why, dey got ter have er tapeline one hunderd an' fo' million miles, an' you know dey ain't no tapeline dat long. But jes' 'sposin' dat man an' dat cooker an' washer done set on dat cannon ball seven hunderd an' two years widout eatin' an' sleepin', wid 'er tapeline one hunderd an' fo' million miles long, how dey goin' ter fasten it to de sun, when you knows an' I knows dat folks right here in dis berry City of Richmond settin' in der parlors in the month ob August fannin' demselves an' drinkin' ice watah, gits so hot dat dey dies? Dey says, dese here philosophers does, dat de earth am round 'cause dey bin 'round it. Now, I don't b'lieve dat, 'cause dey also says dat it take er railroad train runnin' thirty miles er hour thirty-five days to go 'round it. Now, anybody knows dat er railroad cyarn't run thirty-five days widout stoppin's ter git up steam an' let de passengers get on."

Sir Isaac Pitman

Pitman, the man who did so much to develop the art of short hand and phonography has been made a Knight by Queen Victoria. He has not only been a practical short hand artist, but has written several works on the subject. He is also one of those who tried to have adopted, the "phonetic," or "improved" way of spelling—that is, spelling more nearly as the words sound. The following letter which he wrote for the papers many years ago, will give us an idea of how we would have to spell, had his plan been adopted:

Ser.—A frend sujests to me that I ought tu reit a leter tu the Times, plasing mei leif eksperiens in kontrast with the editorial sumingup on Mr. W. Gibson-Ward's vejetarian leter in the Times oy last Thurzday. The konkluzhon areived at iz:—"So long az no speshal kall iz to be made on the strength, a piurli vejetabel deit may sufeiz." Az mei leif haz been wun ov eksepshonal aktiviti, the fakt that it haz been maintained on a vejetabel deiet ought tu be known, nou that a diskushon on the deiet haz been admitted intu the Times. Pain's Great "Pompeii," Fort Wayne, Ind.

Cheap rates and special trains to Fort Wayne for the big fireworks production "Last Days of Pompeii" to be produced at the Lakeside Park, June 30, July 4, 7, 10, 12, 14, 17, 19, 21, 24. Thousands of persons will visit Fort Wayne to see this greatest of modern time exhibitions, typical of the most stupendous tragedy in the world's history.

The cost of these colossal exhibitions averages nearly $2,000 nightly. Over 10,000 square yards of beautiful scenery are used to picture the city of Pompeii. A large lake of real water is provided, upon which floats numerous gondolas, the stage for the 250 performers is 300 feet long and 75 feet wide. Back of these towers grim Vesuvius, quietly sleeping during the grand pageant and acrobatic sports, but at the climax, the terrific earthquake arouses him from lethargy, and with an angry roar, he vomits forth floods of fire and lava, which, sweeping down the mountain side, destroys palaces, temples and buildings.

An enormous display of fireworks, worth $1,000 will be given nightly. Each display will include hundreds of novelties, such as fiery fish, diving and leaping about in the water, with coats of fire unaffected by submersion; a laughable fireworks monkey acrobat; Jumbo, a monster elephant; Niagara Falls, a cascade of falling fire several hundred feet long; the Yellowstone Geysers, magical fountains of molten gold belching from the lake; portrait, 25x30 feet in size, of Indiana's governor; nests of fiery hissing snakes; numerous shells weighing 20 and 30 pounds fired to an enormous altitude, there releasing myriads of fire jewels, diamonds, emeralds, sapphires and rubies.

TABLE TALK.

"Table Talk" for June will be welcome guest in every household where it enters, it is so full and complete in all its departments, which are teeming with good things, demonstrating as usual its position as the American authority on culinary topics and asserting its popularity throughout the land. To the young and inexperienced housewife, who has the care of the direction of the kitchen, its helpfulness is invaluable. This month we find it full of Menus for all sorts of occasions. One article of exceptional value and acknowledged authority is from the able pen of Miss Call, on the subject of "Physical Culture," written especially for this magazine. The "New Bill of Fare" department is brimful of information for progressive women, and the department of Luncheon and Tea Toilets is up to the latest notch. The Table Talk Publishing Co., Philadelphia will mail a sample copy of this magazine free to the readers of this paper. Price, $1.00 per year.

4th of July at Fort Wayne.

To accommodate people wishing to spend the 4th in Ft. Wayne, train No. 156 will have extra cars attached at Waterloo. A special train returning will leave Ft. Wayne at 11:45 p.m., running through to Waterloo stopping at all stations. Tickets half fare. 26 is an arbitrary word used to designate the only bow (ring) which cannot be pulled off the watch.

Non-pull-out

Here's the idea

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

It positively prevents the loss of the watch by theft, and avoids injury to it from dropping.

IT CAN ONLY BE HAD with Jas. Boss Filled or other watch cases bearing this trade mark—

All watch dealers sell them without extra cost. A watch case opener will be sent free to any one by the manufacturers.

AROUND THE WORLD.

INTELLIGENCE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE GLOBE.

France Wild with Grief Over the Assassination of President Carnot—The Tariff Bill Expected to Pass the Senate This Week—A Big Strike Predicted—Murdered His Sweetheart.

FRANCE MOURNS

Over the Death of President Carnot at the Hands of an Assassin.

Paris special: France is ablaze with an indignation that approaches wild frenzy. The sorrow that first struck the people dumb when the news of President Carnot's assassination was received seems to have been forgotten in the fierce desire of the populace to wreak vengeance on some one. To what extremes the fury of the populace may be carried no one can predict. Italians and Anarchists are the objects of the mob's wrath, and persons known to be Italians or suspected of affiliation with the anarchistic movement are in deadly peril at the hands of the crowd. People recall that several of the attempts on the lives of French rulers have been made by Italians, and these reminiscences serve to fan the flames of indignation against all that nationality. All Italian shops and cafes are closed, and their owners are in hiding. Should any known Anarchist be arrested now the police will have to fight vigorously to save him from the mob.

These scenes in the streets remind one of the description of Paris in the days of the revolution. Business has been practically suspended here, except in the wine shops and cafes, which are more than usually busy. The boulevards are crowded with people, all discussing the assassination. Every corner is the gathering point of a crowd which listens to some self appointed orator, who harangues his hearers and tells them what ought to be done. No language is too strong for these speakers. Everything and every one not in accord with France is denounced. The common people from the poorer quarters of Paris are thronging the boulevards. They are all half crazy with sorrow and anger, but chiefly with anger. Italy, never popular with the French masses, is declared to be an enemy of the Republic. Santo, the assassin, is cursed with all the vehemence and in as many forms as the French tongue is capable of.

Burglar Shot.

Warsaw (Ind.) special: A burglar entered the residence of Thomas Miles and stole $300 in jewelry and money. A son of Mr. Emerson was compelled to lie in bed at the muzzle of a revolver while the thief did the plundering. A telephone message was sent to the police office and five officers tracked the thief to Claypool. Officers Garner and Pollock commanded him to surrender. The fellow ran, however, and pulled a revolver as if he would shoot, and the officers blazed away. The second shot of Garner's struck the man, and after running a short distance he was captured and brought here. The wound is a fatal one, having passed through the body. The wounded man said that his name was George McNeal and that he was born and educated at Rochester, N. Y. He refused to give any further information.

A Vote This Week.

It is evident that the vote on the tariff bill in the Senate will be taken sometime this week. The Democratic leaders think that it will be on Thursday, but Senator Aldrich, leader on the Republican side, does not look for it before Friday and Senator Allison, the next most prominent Republican member of the finance committee, thinks it hardly possible to reach a vote before Saturday. All agree that the bill will pass this week. In spite of the opposition of Senator Hill and others the income tax provision will go through as it was agreed upon by the compromise, with the amendments already made.

Mine Closed Down.

Ironwood (Mich.) special: The receivers of the Colby mine have closed that property and will not resume operations until the strike at the other Gogebic mines is settled. They took this step because the stock pile men quit, and because they considered it only a matter of a few days until the walking delegates, who precipitated the strike here, would induce the Colby miners and helpers to join in the demand for more pay. The strike situation remains unchanged. No attempts have been made to resume and there has been no disturbances.

Murdered His Sweetheart.

At Lowensboro, Ala., Minnie Jones, a 17-year-old girl was called from her house and was brained by her sweetheart, William Wilson. Minnie had returned home from church with another man, which made Wilson jealous. He is in jail and lynching is threatened.

The Kentucky Giant Dead.

John Hanson Craig, known professionally as John Powers, the Kentucky giant, died at Danville, Ind., aged 46. He was a museum attraction for twenty years, and weighed 700 pounds.

Caught in Canada.

E. G. Walker, who robbed his employers at Goshen, Ind., and fled with a woman not his wife, was captured in Canada after a long chase.

Predicts a Big Strike.

At a meeting of the local union of Railway Trainmen at Columbus, Ohio, Secretary Patrick McBride of the United Mine Workers, in an address, predicted a strike within the next three years that would be participated in by every organized laborer in the United States. He assured the trainmen that in the great railway strike that he felt was coming, no United Mine Worker would mine coal to be used by non-union firemen.

In Politics.

The convention of the American Railway Union, in session at Chicago, put in considerable time discussing minor clauses of the constitution. Incidentally it unanimously indorsed the platform of the People's Party, approved the Governmental ownership of railroads, extended thanks to Judge Caldwell, of Omaha, for his decision in the Union Pacific case, expressed its approval of the single tax doctrine, indorsed industrial co-operation, and adopted resolutions declaring for the exemption of labor and its products from the burdens of government. W. Haley, a fraternal visitor from the Knights of Labor, delivered an address of greeting. A large number of delegates have received dispatches from their local unions favoring a boycott by the Union of the Pullman sleeping and dining cars.

MINE BURNING.

The Mary Lee Mine in Flames.

Fire was discovered in the coal mines of the Mary Lee Coal and Railway company at Lewisburg, ten miles from Birmingham, Ala. The fire broke out 400 feet from the opening of the mine. One hundred men were at work in the mines at the time, fifty of them being beyond the fire, their only way of escape being through the flames and smoke. Up to a late hour four dead bodies have been recovered, and many of those taken out alive are prostrated from suffocation.

When it became known that the mine was on fire the fifty men who were imprisoned began making efforts to escape. The greater part of them were loaded into the tram cars which were drawn through the flames and smoke by means of wire cables as rapidly as possible. Others took their chances in making a dash through the smoke. Some got out alive, while others were less fortunate and fell victims to the smoke and fire. Among the latter was Superintendent Whalen, who was prostrated and died just as he was brought out. The work of rescue went on for several hours, and by dark every man who was alive had been taken out of the mines. Many of those brought out of the tram cars were suffocated, as the cars had, of necessity, to be drawn right through the smoke that filled the mine. A number of physicians were at the mouth of the mine, as was also the entire population of the town of Lewisburg.

Mothers, wives, and children were wild with grief, and it was with the greatest difficulty that they were restained from dashing into the burning mine in an effort to rescue their loved ones. As rapidly as the suffocated miners were brought out they were taken in hand by physicians and efforts made to revive them. Four died from suffocation. The others who were prostrated will, it is thought, recover. It is believed that all the men have been accounted for, though later investigation may show further fatalities.

The owners of the mine are positive that it was set on fire. The mine had recently started up with new labor, having been closed down previous to that on account of the strike. There is no clue as to the incendiaries. The fire in the mine is still raging at a furious rate.

SEVERE WIND STORM.

Lincoln Nearly Wiped from the Face of the Earth.

Lincoln, Nebraska, was visited by one of the worst storms in its history Thursday night and occasioned rumors outside that Lincoln had been destroyed. The wind blew a tornado and the rain fell in torrents. The streets were well occupied with humanity when the storm broke. For the first ten or fifteen minutes there was no rain, but the air was full of everything portable. Papers, baskets, wooden sidewalks, and branches of trees and dust filled the air, and the only wonder is that there were not many more people injured. As it was one or two narrow escapes from death were reported and many painful accidents. The velocity of the wind was eighty-four miles an hour. This would make it seem that the city was visited by a tornado, if nothing stronger. The greatest damage was probably to shade trees along the streets and the loss in this respect is almost incalculable. Trees were broken off close to the ground in many instances and almost denuded of branches in others. In many places the sidewalks were torn up and the progress of the street cars were impeded by fallen trees. Bill boards and exposed signs were unable to withstand the furious wind and many out buildings and roofs which were scattered about assisted in making the city look as though it had experienced a twister.

A TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

Eighty Lives are Reported Lost.

London special: An explosion occurred in the Albion coal mine near Pon-Y-Prid, Clamorganshire, Wales, and 200 men were under ground at the time. As soon as possible a rescue party descended, but found their way barred by broken timbers and wrecked machinery. Eventually they left the shaft for the galleries, only to find the works so badly damaged as to necessitate almost two hours delay in getting at the men nearest the entrance. Crowds gathered at the pit from the other collieries and the near-by villages. Miners' wives and children were there by the hundreds waiting the first news from below and making the usual distressing scenes. The first two reports brought up from the mine were discouraging, and two more rescue parties went down, and with other volunteers, worked until 10 o'clock at night before any definite news could be got. Then it was reported that a hundred men had been killed. At 11:30, however, the estimate was reduced to eighty. The works are so badly chocked with wreckage that the exploring is very slow. Many dead bodies have been recovered.

Won the Suburban Handicap.

New York special: The greatest suburban handicap in the history of the classic event was won by Ramapo. It was not the richest suburban, as the prize was worth less, financially, this year than last by nearly $1,000. The winner got about $17,000. He got nearly $18,000 a year ago. The battle was a grand and well fought one, and Ramapo, the first favorite, carried off the prize from that sterling aged gelding, Banquet, only after a bitter and cruel struggle. That erratic beast, Sport, took it into his head to try when it was too late. He came like a shot from a cannon from the rear ranks in the final sixteenth, and passing the other struggling contestants as if they were standing still, secured third place by a comfortable margin. There was not an admirer or supporter of Sport on the track that did not believe that he would have won outright had Taral, Garrison, Simms, or some equally capable jockey had the mount on him. Since the future books opened on the race Ramapo has been the favorite. His record entitled him to rank as the best horse in the race, and proved himself thoughly worthy of the confidence reposed in him.

Heroic Treatment.

The London Times prints a dispatch from Lisbon, saying that the encampment of 6,000 bakers of that city who struck against a municipal regulation requiring the master bakers to deposit 8,000 reis as a guarantee that they will sell bread of a proper weight, was surrounded by a strong force of military and police and escorted into Lisbon, where they will be compelled to resume work under military and police supervision. As many of the strikers are Spaniards, and as the latter are believed to be the leaders of the strike, they will be immediately expelled from Portugal. During the two days which the bakers have passed in their camp outside of Lisbon, soldiers have been employed to bake bread enough to supply the demands of the citizens.

Slain at a Crossing.

As east-bound passenger train No. 6 was approaching McHenry, Ky., it ran into a wagon occupied by five persons, killing three instantly, and one of the other two dying in a short time. It is supposed that the driver heard the train coming and tried to pass ahead. The parties lived in Texas and were on their way to the station to start for home. No blame is put on the engineer at all. He is considered one of the best on the line. The carriage was owned by J. P. Maddox. Mrs. Lewis Maddox of Texas, Mr. Maddox's sister-in-law, and her two children were instantly killed. Mr. Maddox died in a short time.

Through the Mail.

Niles (Ohio) special: Mayor Woodford, while examining his mail, opened a package which he will remember for some time to come. The package contained the decomposed remains of a 6-weeks-old baby. The stench which arose from the package was sickening, and only Dr. Leich, who was called, could stand the horrible smell. With this startling find was a letter which ascribed the horrible thing to a gentleman who, the authorities say, holds high office here. It was signed a "Wayward Girl." A reward of $100 is offered for the arrest of the author of the letter, and a big sensation has been opened.

Lightning's Flashes.

One of the severest electrical storms in the history of the country passed over Brazil, Ind., recently. No less than a dozen houses were struck by lightning. The house of Benjamin Monce, in the east end, was badly injured by lightning. The bolt shattered all the windows, passed through the house, shattered the furniture and tore off one corner of the building. Mrs. John Berryl, a neighbor, was rendered insensible and badly burned. The house of John Kreider, in the same neighborhood, was badly damaged, the windows being knocked out and the furniture shattered.

Outbreak Imminent.

The situation at Round Pond, Okla., growing out of the complications between the Rock Island railway and the city, is reported to be serious, and an outbreak is anticipated at any moment. Governor Renfrew especially commissioned Deputy Marshal Madison to investigate, and the latter has reported that in his opinion United States troops will be needed to prevent a serious outbreak, which will undoubtedly result in bloodshed and damage to property unless nipped in the bud.

The Ship Canal.

Springfield (Ohio) special: Secretary Nicholls of the Board of Trade, has received the following letter from Senator John Sherman, at Washington:

"MY DEAR SIR:—Your note of the 18th received. I will heartily support the proposed survey for a ship canal in Ohio. It is probable that the contest will be mainly for the route from Erie to Pittsburgh, or from Cleveland via the Muskingum River to Marietta, or from Toledo to Cincinnati. But all of these routes will be carefully surveyed by military engineers and there is no knowing what they will determine."

Double Affliction.

Mary, the 3-year-old daughter of John O'Brien, of South Center street, Springfield, Ohio, was burned to death. She was playing around a bonfire with some other children, when her clothes caught fire from sparks. Her mother was horrible burned about the face and hands in trying to extinguish the flames. The girl's 5-year-old brother, John, was bitten in the right cheek by a mad dog just a moment before the fatality.

Trap Sprung.

William Whalley, the colored murderer of Greene County, Ohio, was executed in the State Prison shortly after midnight, Friday. The trap was sprung at 12:14, but the noose was not properly adjusted and he slowly strangled to death. It was 12:30 when he was pronounced dead. He made no confession as expected, and from the scaffold only said he was not guilty of a capital crime.

Peffer's Proposition.

Senator Peffer has given notice of his intention to offer an amendment to graduate the income tax so as to make incomes in excess of $1,000 and below $10,000 subject to a tax of 1 per cent.; between $10,000 and $25,000, 2 per cent.; between $25,000 and $50,000, 3 per cent.; between $50,000 and $100,000, 4 per cent.; above $100,000, 5 per cent.

Burned to Death.

Mrs. William Edwards of Fairmont, about 14 miles west of Danville, Ill., was burned to death while endeavoring to start the kitchen fire with kerosene. The house was also burned.

Ex-Senator Perkins Dead.

Ex-Senator Bishop W. Perkins of Kansas, died at Washington. He would have been a prominent candidate for the next Senatorial nomination for Kansas.

Will Resume Work.

All departments of the Cleveland, Ohio, rolling mill company's plant will resume operations on July 1, giving steady work to 4,000 men.

CARNOT IS KILLED.

PRESIDENT OF FRANCE STABBED BY AN ANARCHIST.

The Assassin Springs Upon the Step of Carnot's Carriage and Plunges a Knife Into His Heart—People Aroused to a Point Bordering on Frenzy.

All France in Mourning.

M. Sadi-Carnot, President of the French republic, is dead. He was struck down on Sunday night by the hand of an assassin, and died soon after midnight. The most intense excitement reigns throughout France.

The President was visiting Lyons in connection with the international exhibition. Upon his arrival there he was tendered a reception at the Prefecture, after which he visited the exhibition. After spending some time there he proceeded to the Palais de Commerce, where a banquet was given in his honor. At 9:25 President Carnot started for the theater, where a gala performance was to be given because of his presence in the city. Several carriages were in the procession, the first one being occupied by the President. M. Carnot's carriage was driven slowly along in front of the Palais de Commerce, and then turned into Rue de la Republique, still following the facade of the palace. When half way down the street, which was lined with enthusiastic crowds of people, who were loudly cheering, a man rushed out of the crowd and sprung upon the step of the President's landau.

Just at this moment M. Carnot was waving his right hand and saluting with his hat in his left hand in response to the ovation that was being given him. The people close to the carriage saw that the man standing on the step had a knife in his hand. By the glare of the electric lights they saw the bright blade gleam in the air as the assassin's arm descended, and President Carnot was seen to fall back in his seat, his face deathly pale. One of his hands was pressed over his heart where the steel had entered the body.

M. Rivaud, prefect of Lyons, who was seated beside M. Carnot, immediately struck the assassin a blow full in the face and knocked him from the step, thus preventing the man from again stabbing the President, which it was his evident intention to do.

Instantly cries of "The President is assassinated!" "Death to the assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the carriage swelled to enormous proportions, every member of it seemingly intent upon killing the assassin. He was grasped by a dozen hands, and his life would have then and there paid the forfeit of his crime had it not been for a squad of cavalry.

A cordon was formed around the policemen and the captive and the march to the police station began. Even thus surrounded the prisoner was not safe, for men in the crowd made frantic endeavors to reach him. The guards repel ed these attacks with the flat sides of their swords, while at the same time keeping watchful eyes upon the crowd to prevent the prisoner from being shot. Maledictions were hurled upon the captive, and never before has such wild indignation against a human being been seen in the city. Santo, the assassin, is a beardless man 22 years old. When questioned by Prefect Lepin at the police station his replies were given coolly, but without any sign of bravado. He refused, however, to answer any of the many questions put to him regarding his motive for stabbing the President, declaring that on this subject he would speak only before a tribunal. When he was searched by the police a book was found in one of his pockets, in which it was written that he was born in a village in the province of Milan, Italy. All over the city threats were made to take summary vengeance upon the countrymen of Santo, and the authorities, fearing that attempts would be made to put these threats into effect, ordered bodies of cuirassiers to patrol the city to prevent any outbreak.

The receipt of the news of the assassination caused a great sensation at the Grand Theater, which was filled to the walls by the elite of Lyons. The theater presented a brilliant scene, the handsome toilets of the ladies being offset by the gay uniforms of the many military officers present. All were awaiting with impatience the arrival of the President, and were unable to understand the delay. Suddenly a man entered the theater, crying at the top of his voice: "The President has been assassinated!" The most intense excitement followed this abrupt announcement. Women screamed, and several fainted. Many men, without waiting to secure their hats, ran out of the building in order to confirm the news. They found all the streets leading to the palace filled with excited throngs, and in a few minutes they were convinced that the report of the cowardly attempt upon the life of the President was true.

Indignation at the Capital.

The first news of the attempt upon the life of President Carnot was received in Paris with many expressions of doubt, but later when dispatches began to pour in describing in detail the act of the assassin, doubt could no longer prevail. Then came the brief dispatch announcing that M. Carnot was dead. A correspondent says that to describe the varied emotions that filled the minds of the Parisians would be impossible. In many instances officials seen by the representative of the Associated Press were too much overcome by the suddenness of the disaster to express any opinion as to the results that would follow the act of the assassin. Others, while expressing the deepest regret at the death of the President, were chary of giving any publicity to their political opinions. But among the great class outside of the officials nothing but deep sorrow and indignation at the cowardly blow that had deprived France of her executive were expressed. Many persons believe that the crime was the work of an irresponsible "crank" whose enmity against France and her president was kindled by the Aigues-Mortes riots when many Italians were killed, and who determined to wreak vengeance for the wrong done his countrymen. Whatever the motive for the crime, the act has plunged the whole of France into the deepest mourning.

It would be difficult to express at this time an opinion of any value as to the result of the assassination on the future of France. That political cabals will be formed to secure the election of M. Carnot's successor goes without saying, but the time in which such combinations can be formed will be limited, for on Wednesday afternoon the Senate and Chamber of Deputies will meet in joint session to elect his successor.

News Received in Washington.

The news of Carnot's assassination created a pronounced sensation in Washington; particularly in official circles was the tragedy keenly felt and most intelligently discussed. President Cleveland, the Vice President, Secretary Gresham, the French minister, and other officials were given the news by the Associated Press reporters and learned it from them, for no official dispatches were received. Without exception they were deeply affected and expressed their regret in strong terms. To French Ambassador Paternotre the announcement was a great shock, coming as it did at a time when the internal and foreign affairs of France are in a peaceable state. There was much speculation over whether the assassination had any political significance or was the deed of an irresponsible crank. The trend of opinion was toward the latter belief. Foreign representatives and officials acquainted with French politics say that Carnot was essentially a safe man, one whom the French people relied upon, while they did not gush over him or accord to him the dramatic following they have given leaders of the stripe of Boulanger.

LIFE AND SERVICES OF CARNOT.

Held Many Posts of Honor Under the French Government.

M. Marie Francois Sadi-Carnot, who was elected by the National Congress at Versailles in 1887 to succeed M. Jules Grevy as President of the French Republic, was at that time considerably younger than any of his three predecessors, having been born in 1837 at Limoges. The son and grandson of most distinguished republican statesmen, he was brought up as a civil engineer, and was graduated with the highest honors at the Ecole Polytechnique in 1857 and subsequently at the famous Ecole des Ponts et Chausees in 1863. After having acted as government engineer in several provincial districts he was in 1871 appointed prefect of the Seine department, which includes the civil governorship of Paris and its suburbs, and took a prominent part in organizing the national defense against the German invaders. A few months later he was elected by the Cote-d'Or district to represent them in the National Assembly, and after taking his seat became the organizing secretary of the Republican left party in the Chamber. In 1876 he was elected by the inhabitants of the district of Beaune to represent their interests in Parliament. In 1878 he was appointed Under Secretary of State for the Ministry of Public Works, in 1880 he became Minister of the same department in the Cabinet of M. Jules Ferry. On the resignation of the latter in 1885 he was reappointed to the same Ministry in M. Henri Brisson's Cabinet, and on the resignation of M. Clamargerau a few months later he succeeded him as Minister of Finance, an office which he likewise held in the Goblet Ministry.

Besides being one of the foremost civil engineers of France, M. Sadi-Carnot was a distinguished political economist and a fervent admirer of the late John Stuart Mill, of whose works he has published a French translation. His skill in dealing with intricate questions of national finance resulted in his being repeatedly elected member of the Parliamentary Budget Committee.

President Carnot was one of the few French statesmen of the present day whose past history is absolutely unimpeachable, and whose political and private character was untarnished by any kind of blemish. His wife, who is a charming and most talented woman, is the daughter of the late M. Dupont-White, the distinguished political economist and French prototype of John Stuart Mill. Mme. Sadi-Carnot is one of the best-read women in France. She has four daughters, of whom two are married and have children, and one boy. The President himself was a very silent man, of grave demeanor.

MANY LIVES LOST.

New York Excursion Steamer Goes to the Bottom of the Ocean.

The tug James D. Nichol, with sixty-three excursionists and a crew numbering ten or twelve, was swamped at 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon, some three miles off the Highlands, New York. Fifty-four of those on board have been accounted for. The rest were probably drowned. The tug left Fifth street and East River at 7:30 o'clock in the morning, touched at pier 3, East River, and then went on to the fishing grounds. She had, it is said, a license to carry fifty passengers, but sixty-three tickets were sold. There was a bar and a lunch counter on board, whose attendants, with the crew, brought the whole number on board up to about seventy-five. The tug reached the banks on time, but the fishing was poor and the sea too rough for comfort, and at noon she started back.

When three miles east of the Highlands and about south of Scotland lighthip the waves began to break heavily over her starboard rail. To dodge the water and wind the passengers began to run around to the port side and to climb on top of the deckhouse. The boat careened alarmingly to port and the water swept in over the rail. The terror-stricken men rushed back to starboard and the tug swung deeply down on that side. At the same moment three heavy waves struck the boat in quick succession. The captain, William H. Platt stuck pluckily to his post and sounded the whistle in a prolonged scream for help. Even as he did so the tug filled with the water that poured into her from both sides and sank out of sight in the water. She went down like a stone, carrying many of her passengers with her.

TARRED AND FEATHERED.

Adjt. Gen. Tarsney, of Colorado, Roughly Treated by Masked Kidnapers.

Adjt. Gen. Tarsney, who was kidnaped at Colorado Springs, Colo., by unknown masked men, was found at Palmer Lake, twenty-five miles from Colorado Springs, and taken to Denver on a special train. He had been tarred and feathered, and, although somewhat dazed by his rough treatment, was not seriously hurt.

Shortly before 1 o'clock in the morning a bogus telephone call was made for Adjutant General Tarsney, of the State militia, at the Alamo hotel. When Mr. Tarsney came down stairs he was confronted by a masked man with two revolvers, seven more men being in the background. Tarsney cried for help, but was quickly clubbed into submission with a revolver. He was carried to a closed carriage in waiting and rapidly driven to Austin Bluffs at the city limits. Arriving on the open prairie at Austin Bluffs, Tarsney was removed from the carriage, stripped nude and a coat of tar and feathers administered and he was warned not to return to Colorado Springs.

THE pyrotechnic critic is humbly advised that the real mission of the stage is to make money for the manager.

Minor State Items.

WILLIAM KOENIG'S home, Fort Wayne, was destroyed by lightning.

SAMUEL DE COURSEY'S 2 year-old child, Clay City, drank fly poison. May die.

SOUTH BEND'S GROCERS' ASSOCIATION has passed resolutions abolishing the sale of cigarettes.

AT Goshen William Hatfield was crushed under a load of brick and sustained injuries from which he died.

THE Eastern Indiana Oil and Gas Company, at Union City, has begun work on its pipe line to that city. Gas will be ready by Sept. 1.

AT Crawfordsville, Charles Darter was killed by lightning while holding a horse. He was married and about thirty-four years of age.

RICHMOND has secured the Scott-Creamer Carriage Works of Milton, Ind., and that plant will soon be removed. It employs 100 men.

JOHN CARTER of Plainfield, who has been deaf for several years, has regained his hearing by removing a ball of cotton which he stuck in his ear sixteen years ago.

THE National Association of Stationary Engineers has organized at Connersville and elected M. K. Fowler, President, Craven Moore, Treasurer, and Gillett Gordon, Secretary.

AT Evansville, Fred Hauptmeyer, 18 years old, accidentally shot himself with a flobert rifle. Death was instantaneous. His father was a well-known traveling salesman, who died two months ago.

GEORGE VAN GIESON, a pioneer of Lafayette County, was killed by a Lake Shore train at Rolling Prairie. He was driving across the track, and being deaf, was struck. His team was also instantly killed.

THE State Board of Health has ordered the quarantine lifted from all the benevolent and penal institutions with the exceptions of those located in the counties still infested by smallpox. The quarantine against visitors from Chicago was continued at the Prison North.

THE citizens of Anderson are becoming alarmed at the pollution of White River by dying fish above the city. A mile or so east of Anderson the banks of White River are strewn with thousands of decaying and dead fish. It is thought that the waters of the stream are poisoned by the sewerage from the strawboard works near Muncie. The water supply for Anderson is taken from the river, and an effort will be made to enjoin the further pollution of the stream from that source.

PATENTS have been awarded to the following residents of Indiana: William Brooking, River, car coupling; Fred W. Spacke, Indianapolis, centrifugal high speed governor; Hugh D. Studabaker, Bluffton, register for rotations of vehicle wheels, etc.; Warren B Sylvester, Portland, tub roller and shaper; Clotilde P. Thomas, Evansville, hat pin retainer; James Tobin, Indianapolis, car fender; Sylvester Warner and O. E. Cook, West Union, traction wheel. A trade mark has been granted to the Excelsior Manufacturing Company, Logansport, for medicinal preparations for the hair and scalp.

THE two days' session of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, held at Warsaw, closed by electing the following officers for the ensuing year: President, J. B. Stoll, South Bend; First Vice President, Mrs. Daniel McDonald, Plymouth; Second Vice President, John H. Baker, Columbia City; Secretary, Mrs. J. F. Sutton, Logansport; Corresponding Secretary, Louis McDonald, Plymouth; Treasurer, Major Bitters, Rochester. Executive Committee, General Reuben Williams, Warsaw; John W. Adams, Columbia City; and Ed. S. Brooke, Plymouth. Logansport was selected as the next place of meeting, and the second Thursday and Friday of June, 1895 as the date.

DURING a severe electrical storm at Wabash, lightning struck the large standpipe of the Wabash Water Company, 100 feet high and twenty-five feet in diameter. It leaped from the steel plates and struck the residence of Adam Sundheimer, adjoining, seriously shocking Mrs. Sundheimer. Other persons in the neighborhood were also shocked, but no one injured. Mrs. James Stewart of North Huntington street, was seated at the piano, and as her hands rambled over the keys she felt a burning sensation on her right hand and a flash ran the length of the keyboard. A moment later she noticed a red streak, six inches in length, extending up the back of her hand and wrist. She was not otherwise hurt.

WILLIAM R. DAVIS, aged 20, and a prominent young man of Frankfort, was probably fatally shot during a fight with a burglar. He was sleeping at the home of C. R. Pratt to protect the family in the absence of Mr. Pratt from the city. About daylight he awoke and saw the robber going through his clothes on a chair. Leaping from the bed young Davis clutched the burglar, who drew a revolver and fired two shots, afterwards making his escape, leaving a hat and dark lantern behind. One shot was through Davis' arm and the wound is not serious, but the second bullet entered his abdomen and may prove fatal. Officers shortly afterward arrested a hatless tramp, who gave his name as Michael O'Brien. The man is held on suspicion. O'Brien is from Marion County, Ohio, and is a telegraph operator. Feeling runs very high against him.

TWO IMMENSE catfish were caught in the Wabash River at Logansport, one of them weighed seventy-two pounds.

WORKMEN, while excavating a ditch in St. Joseph County, uncovered the well-preserved teeth, bones, and tusk of an immense mastodon. Two of the teeth weigh five and one-half and six and one-half pounds respectively, and were sold for $15. The tusk measured twenty-two inches in circumference two feet from the end. The piece taken out measured four feet long and weighed seventy pounds. Its size indicates a length of fifteen feet.

WHEN Company G. of Jeffersonville was ordered out by Gov. Matthews a short time since several of the members of the company who had positions in Louisville were notified that they would lose their positions. Private Frank Jenks was employed by the wholesale house of the Peaslee-Gaulbert Company. It became rumored that Jenks was to lose his position, and the various drug stores notified the wholesale firm that should the report prove true they would boycott it entirely. When Jenks went back to work he was taken in. Several others lost their positions, however, one of whom was the sole support of a widowed mother and six small children.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

The Senate and House.

The Senate on Monday, with the mercury at 81, entered upon the twelfth week of the tariff debate. Several schedules were disposed of. A fight was started over Mr. Hill's proposition to put coal on the free list, and the amendment was lost, 7 to 51. Mr. Durborow's bill authorizing railroads to sell "joint interchangeable 5,000-mile tickets" was passed by the House. The Senate bill granting a right of way to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservation in the State of Nebraska, was passed, and Mr. Hatch's anti-option bill occupied the balance of the session.

In the Senate, Tuesday, Mr. Aldrich attacked the anti-option bill. Afterward, the tariff bill occupied the time. The bill to amend the act for the relief of the civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota passed the House. The bill provides that the pine lands of the White Earth and Red Lake reservations and other reservations, when the Indians upon it have been allotted lands in severalty, shall be surveyed, examined and appraised to the amount of at least 100,000 acres, after which they shall be offered for sale. The House bill authorizing the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Monongahela River at the city of Pittsburg was passed. There was also passed a House bill to donate certain lands belonging to an abandoned military reservation to the city of Newport, Ky., for a public park.

The Senate completed the consideration of the free list Wednesday afternoon, and then taking up the administrative features of the bill, omitted about a dozen sections and promptly passed all the remainder but the last ten sections. The omitted sections provided for new regulations governing the customs appraisers, consular officers and foreign manufacturers and shippers of goods to be imported. Upon these points the law will not be changed and this much time is thus saved in the Senate. The income tax will be next taken up. The anti-option bill occupied the attention of the House on Friday after the morning hour. Speeches were made against the bill by Representatives Goldzier, Walker and Harter, while Mr. Richardson, of Michigan, spoke in favor of it. The Speaker was still confined to his room by sickness, Mr. Bailey performing the duties of Speaker pro tem.

In the Senate Thursday Senator Hill spoke at length against the income tax, followed in the same line by Mr. Hoar. Mr. Aldrich moved that the date on which the income tax should cease be Jan. 1, 1898. The amendment was defeated—23 to 39. Mr. Hill, who was present, did not vote. The Finance Committee amendment fixing the time limit during which the tax was to run at Jan. 1, 1909, was then agreed to. Mr. Peffer then offered an amendment he gave notice of to levy a graduated income tax, which was defeated. In the House several bills and resolutions were passed. There was some delay in taking up the anti-option bill, and an agreement was entered into extending the time for debate for two hours Friday, to be consumed under the five-minute rule, after which Mr. Hatch will be allowed an hour for his closing speech. Speeches were made by Representatives Grosvenor, Wheeler, Stockdale, and Berry in support of the bill, and by Messrs. Covert, Bartlett, Quigg, and Boatner in opposition to it. Mr. Pence spoke on the silver question. At 5:45 o'clock the House adjourned.

The tariff and income tax were the subjects of Senatorial discussion Friday. Excepting a quarrel between Hill, of New York, and Harris, of Tennessee, nothing of interest was evolved. The anti-option bill passed the House by a vote of 149 to 87. Mr. Hatch received a bad scare in the morning when the House in committee of the whole, by a vote of 81 to 74 adopted an amendment offered by Representative G. W. Stone, of Pennsylvania, exempting thirty-day options from the provisions of the bill. It was an unexpected move. Mr. Hatch and others, amid great confusion, raised the point of no quorum. Mr. Hatch said the amendment, if adopted, would destroy the bill. On a demand for tellers the vote on the Stone amendment was 92 to 92, and it was lost by a tie. Immediately after the passage of the bill the general deficiency appropriation bill was taken up. After a few minutes spent in explanation of the bill by Mr. Sayers, who is in charge of it, in place of Mr. Breckinridge, the committee rose, and at five o'clock a recess was taken until eight o'clock. The night session was devoted to private pension bills.

A Royal Head of Hair.

Once a month the Empress of Austria has her hair washed. This may seem a small matter to chronicle, but it is usually a great event. Her hair is still beautiful, luxuriant and perfectly black. When let down it touches the ground as she stands, and she is tall. The cleaning and cutting of this hair is a business, and so completely fatigues her majesty that she is unfit for anything afterward. It takes up the best part of a day. The hair wash is a profound secret, but it is reported that it requires forty eggs, and that the other ingredients are obtained from no less than twenty mysterious bottles. Besides being washed, the hair is cut very slightly, every single

MASSACRE AT BOSTON.

A Bloody Episode in Colonial History—Quartering of British Troops in Boston Had Long Been Considered a Grievance—Crispus Attucks Monument.

A Memorable Event.

The Boston massacre in itself was a matter of unimportance, it was a street brawl between soldiers and civilians, yet really it was one of the most important of the lesser causes of the Revolutionary war and, in this light, receives a distinction and a place in men's memories which otherwise it would neither hold nor deserve.

The quartering of British troops in Boston had long been considered as a grievance by the people and complaints of great bitterness were constantly made of the matter. It does not appear that the soldiers did any considerable damage or that the sufferings of the citizens were excessive, but it was just one of those things which prove a constant irritation and an excuse for complaint. March 3, 1770, a party of soldiers and rope makers of Boston had an encounter with clubs about midnight and several men on each side were wounded. The next night it was attempted to renew the battle, but the authorities prevented it. Fighting would have served as the natural outlet on both sides had it been allowed, but, being smothered, it burned more fiercely and the men were ready to seize any occurrence for an excuse to battle with each other. It happened that on the evening of the 5th two young men undertook to pass a sentinel at the foot of Cornhill, without answering his challenge. A struggle ensued and some soldiers ran from the neighboring barracks to the sentry's aid, armed hastily with any weapon they happened to pick up. The soldiers, in turn, attracted the attention of other citizens and windows were hastily thrown up and heads put out to see what the matter was. Evidently the prospects were fair for some sort of a scrimmage and so, eagerly donning their clothes, the good citizens poured into the street and surrounded the soldiers. The officers were anxious to avoid any encounter and succeeded in drawing the soldiers into the barracks. But the mob did not wish to be disappointed of its sport; it had come out to see a fight and it did not want its wishes balked.

An Excited Mob.

In a few moments another sentinel at some little distance was seen. A boy cried out that this soldier had struck him a few days before. It was just the excuse that the crowd wanted, and instantly twenty young men advanced and began to pelt the sentry with missiles. The man loaded his gun, but did not fire, and tried to retire into the building before which he was. He found the door locked, however, and he called loudly for the main guard whose station was within hearing. The officer in command sent to his relief a sergeant and six men and also dispatched a messenger to Capt. Preston, the officer of the day. The mob meanwhile was increasing every moment, and by the time Preston with six more men arrived on the spot it was a huge gathering. Preston behaved with coolness and moderation, but the soldiers were provoked and excited by the constant jeers and insults of the crowd. "Come on, you bloody-backs," they cried. "Come on, you lobster-backs." "Fire if you dare." "Why don't you fire?"

The Soldiers Fire.

One soldier was hit by a club; he drew back, leveled his musket and fired. Inspired by his example, seven or eight more discharged their arms and the mob fled. Two men were killed, three others mortally wounded and six injured slightly.

[A curious picture of the event from a contemporary engraving.]

The people were terribly excited at this, and to calm them Gov. Hutchinson addressed them at the State House, promising that a full investigation of the affair should be made the next day. The next day Preston gave himself up to the authorities and, with six of his men, was put upon trial and acquitted.

Popular sentiment, however, had its way in the funerals of those slain. These were Crispus Attucks, a half-breed Indian negro; Patrick Carr, an Irishman; and three Americans Samuel Gray, James Caldwell and Christopher Maverick. Their bodies were borne with great pomp through the streets, a solemn funeral service was held over them, and they were buried in one common vault. The affair of the shooting received then the exaggerated title of "massacre," a name which has clung to it from that day to this.

Crispus Attucks.

A good deal has been made of Attucks since this affair, and in 1888 a monument was unveiled in Boston. He was a resident of Framingham and a man about 50 years of age. The removal of the British troops from Boston was demanded by the people and, after some efforts to withstand the request, the Governor complied. Not again until Gage's arrival in 1774 were troops quartered in the city.

Once a year it comes
With its flags and drums,
With its cannon loud,
With its rockets high
And their starry crowd
Filling all the sky.

Music in the air,
Powder everywhere,
Crackers making noise,
Snapping at your feet,
For the happy boys
All along the street.

Then, hurrah! I say,
Independence Day
Comes but once a year,
With its noise and smoke,
Let us hold it dear,
Big and little folk.

Let us take our part
With a loyal heart,
Be our flags unfurled,
Little maid and man,
Proudest in the world,
Free! American!

WHERE THE FLAG WAS BORN.

Birthplace of the Star Spangled Banner—Flags of the Colonies.

THE small two-story house still standing at 239 Arch street, below Third, Philadelphia, has an interesting history. In it the first flag, containing thirteen stars and thirteen stripes, was made by Mrs. John Ross. The design for the flag was from a drawing made by George Washington with a pencil, and the flag thus designed was adopted by a resolution of Congress on the 14th day of June, 1777. A committee of Congress, accompanied by General Washington, afterward called upon Mrs. Ross and engaged her to make a flag from this design. The flag then made is now known the world over as the Star Spangled Banner of the United States. There is a striking resemblance between the design of our flag and the arms of General Washington, and it is believed by many that the American flag was derived from this heraldic design.

WHERE OUR FIRST FLAG WAS MADE.

Several flags were used by the people of the States before the present one was adopted. In the month of March, 1775, a red flag was hoisted in New York, bearing on one side the inscription, "George Rex and the Liberties of America," and on the other side, "No Popery." In July, 1775, on Prospect Hill, Gen. Israel Putnam raised a flag upon which was inscribed the motto of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, "Qui transtulit sustinet." In October, 1775, the floating batteries of Boston carried a flag with the motto, "An Appeal to Heaven," the design being a pine tree on a white field. Virginia carried a flag in 1775—design, a rattlesnake coiled as if about to strike, and the motto, "Don't Tread on Me." But it was not until Jan. 18, 1776, that the grand union flag, bearing stars and stripes, was raised on the heights, near Boston.

THE PINE-TREE FLAG.

A number of flags appeared—the rattlesnake, the pine tree, and the stripes, the various designs of the different colonies—until July, 1777, when the blue union of the stars was added to the stripes, and the law adopted this flag as the great national emblem. Afterward a stripe was added with every new State; but, as it became manifest that in time the beauty of the emblem would be marred by the enormous proportions acquired by additional States, Congress reduced the stripes to the original thirteen, and the stars were made to correspond with the number of States.

THE FLAG OF VIRGINIA, 1775.

The American flag is one of the most beautiful that floats upon any land or sea. Its proportions are perfect when it is properly made—one-half as broad as it is long. The first stripe at the top is red, the next white, and these colors alternate, making the last stripe red. The blue field for the stars is the width and square of the first seven stripes, viz., four red and three white. The colors of the American flag are in exquisite relief, and it is altogether a splendid national emblem. Long may it wave untarnished!

WHEN WE WERE BOYS.

A Picture of an Old-time Celebration in the Country.

"Now, Billy, don't go near them anvils." "Sammy, will you stand back, or do you want to get blowed up?" And a stranger to boys and to the custom would have concluded that Sammy certainly did want to get "blowed up," for it was the regular complaint of the men in charge that there "wouldn't be a speck of danger if it weren't for the derned boys crowdin' in so."

This was at 4 o'clock in the morning of a Fourth of July, years ago, in a country village. The boys were hurrying toward the public square, where the anvils were located, barefooted and clad for the most part only in tow linen shirts and jean pantaloons, and buttoning the latter as they ran, for the affair was too important to be missed on account of a little informality in toilet. And close after them came two or three mothers with nervous warnings of caution.

The rising sun showed the whole population up, and in the country as far as boom of cannon or ring of bells could be heard, there was great excitement among the boys, each eager to get his breakfast and be off for the village. The men and women came in later if it wasn't a "good harvest day."

By 10 o'clock all the town was out, and so many from the country that the village contained 3,000 or 4,000 people. If the season had been very early "down on the sand barrens," a few watermelons were for sale, but not often. Of home-made beer, ginger cakes, currant pies, striped candy and the like, the sale was wonderful—a stand under every big tree. In the village grocery the big cheese was cut and regular customers invited to taste it. "Cuba six" cigars (six for 5 cents) were so plentiful that every boy could have one. The men gave way to unwonted generosity, and whisky they had always with them—"20 cents a gallon, and that that's good." Shutting up the "groceries"—they were not called "saloons" till near the war—would have provoked a riot.

The speaker gave "old England" a few vigorous whacks, pitied the "subjects of foreign despotisms," congratulated his fellow-citizens on their glorious freedom, and generally wound up with a statement that "but for our noble forefathers, who on this day so many years ago declared these colonies free and independent, we, fellow-citizens, would have been the subjects of a despotism like the wretched Irish, perhaps, trodden into the mire of slavery and compelled to give one-third of all we possessed to the king and his soldiers." In the enumeration of the horrors of despotism one count nearly always appeared—that one-third of what the farmer raised would be taken by the despot!—Boston Post.

When the Sticks Come Down.

Fourth of July is comin' roun 'nd soon
Will sound the boom of cannon and the through all the land
music of the band;
Fire-crackers and torpedoes will be crackin' everywhere.
With fire balloons and parachutes a-sailin'
through the air:
'Nd rockets will be whizzin' up in every country town.
But you'd better git from under when the sticks come down.

I find that thar is lots of things that acts in that same way.
'Nd starts up with a heap of fuss 'nd makes a grand display.
While everybody's lookin' on, admirin'
from afar,
'Nd sayin' "Who'd a thought they could a sailed way up so far?"
But when they bust in mid air, people scatter with a frown,
'Nd try to git from under
the sticks come down.

—Arthur Gerritt.

A Question About Firecrackers.

Mr. Magruder had forbidden his boys to buy anything on credit, and one day he called the children and said he wante to know who had had five cents' worth of firecrackers charged to him at the toy store.

The older ones promptly said, "I did not," but the two little ones, John and Harry, seemed not so clear in their statements. John said he had bought five cents' worth of firecrackers with five cents Uncle Frank had give him, and one time his mamma gave him five cents and he got some firecrackers at the toy store.

"Oh, I don't care about that," his father said. "Did you have five cents' worth of firecrackers charged?"

Little Harry could not stand it any longer. He must make John understand, and he went right up to him and said, "Johnny, did you ever get five cents' worth of crackers with a five cents nobody never gave you?"—Harper's Young People.

They Did Both.

"Let's break the silence," suggested one patriotic boy to another on the morning of the glorious Fourth.

"We can cracker, anyhow," replied the other.—Detroit Free Press.

Pensioners Scattered.

An exchange gives the following information as to how our pensioners are scattered over the world, for of course a man who is entitled to a pension carries his rights with him wherever he goes: The pension roll was decreased 25,000 last year by death. There are 3,856 United States pensioners residing in foreign countries. Two thousand live in Canada, 740 in Great Britain, 590 in Germany, 83 in Switzerland and 55 in France. Two pensioners live in Bulgaria, four in India, one in Siam, one in St. Helena and one in the Fiji islands.

Court News.

Work has been delayed by such public days as conventions and old settlers day, but a good deal of general business has been done, such as the taking of judgments, settling estates, etc. On Tuesday there was a case that brought many witnesses from Hudson. It was learned they had two new cases of small pox at that place, so that to avoid danger of spreading it, Judge Powers adjourned court. As the disease is kept confined, the danger will soon be over.

The central Committeemen are urgently requested to send the names of the state and congressional delegates of their respective townships to county chairman Shuman at once.

CARNOT, president of the Republic of France was murdered Sunday night. He was at the city of Lyons to see the International Fair they are having. He spent the afternoon at the exposition, and after a banquet at the mayor's residence in the evening he and the mayor started for the the theater in an open carriage, Crowds of people cheered all along, when suddenly a man ran to the carriage mounted the steps, and struck the president with a dagger. The mayor knocked the assassin out into the street. But the one blow was fatal, for he lived but a few hours. The murderer is in jail, and gives no reason for the crime. Carnot was a very popular president and one of the safest and ablest statesmen France ever had.

The Ferris Wheel.

It is not easy for the mind to grasp the stupendous nature of this undertaking. The wheel itself is two hundred and fifty feet in diameter; at its highest point it is two hundred and sixty-eight feet above the earth. If the Bunker Hill monument were used as a yardstick to measure it the towering monolith would fall short fifty feet. If the wheel were set in Broadway by the side of Trinity spire it would lift the passengers of its cars to a level with the apex of that soaring steeple. The obelisk of Luxor, or Trajan's pillar, at Rome, would not be long enough to serve as a radial spoke.

Then, again, as to its enormous weight. The Niagara cantilever, just below the falls, was looked upon as an engineering wonder when it was built. Its construction required three years. The Ferris wheel was built in five months and its weight is four times that of the Niagara bridge. The St. Louis bridge was another wonder and its weight is about equal to that of the big wheel complete. The Cincinnati cantilever is another large bridge. It is thirteen hundred feet long, and would about balance the scale with the Ferris wheel. The one is set immovable, resting on two supports, while the wheel is swung upon an axle lifted one hundred and forty feet in the air. It has thirty-six cars, and in these two regiments of soldiery could be seated and swept with an almost imperceptible motion high above the White wonder.

Troy Township Commencement.

The second annual commencement of Troy township took place in Zion Chapel on Friday evening, June 15. The large attendance showed the interest our Troy township people are taking in school work. The church was beautifully decorated with flags and flowers while the class motto, "More Yet to be Gleaned," shone out conspicuously upon the evergreen arch. Music was furnished by the Edgerton Orchestra. The first oration, "Clouds and Sunshine," was given by Sadie McCurdy. Her delivery was good and she handled her subject in an able manner. The next oration, that of Addie Skelton, "Success," contained many good and original thoughts. Last came Edith Bowden. She delivered her oration in a pleasing and eloquent manner, winning the admiration of all present.

Very interesting recitations were given by the little girls, Carrie Leeson and Bertha Good. Willis Rhodes gave the class address. His speech was practical and very much appreciated by the audience. Then after music, came the presentation of diplomas. Superintendent Merica's talk is always earnest and sympathizing as everybody knows. In his remarks he tried to make the parents understand how largely they are responsible for the education and welfare of the coming generation.

We regret that out of five schools in Troy township we have a graduating class of only three. But we feel that these graduating exercises are doing their own work in the way of creating an enthusiasm and interest on the part of the parents and giving an inspiration to the pupils.

Richland Commencement.

The annual commencement of the Richland Tp. public schools was held in the Christian church, Corunna, June, 22, '94. The people of Richland Tp. always manifest great interest in all lines of educational advancement, especially in her public schools. This was shown by the large number of people who attended the exercises. Long before the time set for the exercises to begin the seats were all occupied and standing room was at a premium. The audience became somewhat restless until the "march," which was well rendered by Mrs. Hattie Lipsette, announced the coming of the graduates. The salutatory by P. A. Foote contained many beautiful thoughts and was an inspiration to all present. An essay "All Honest Industry Honorable" by Elbert Maxwell showed careful study, and that he was master of his subject; Miss Alice Treesh's essay, "Step by Step" did credit to herself and impressed all with the fact that the intellectual ladder must be climbed one round at a time. "Light" an oration by Frank Shook was well delivered and made all present appreciate more than ever before, that bountiful gift of the Creator. His treating education as the light of civilization was worthy of careful consideration. We are certain every one present formed a new determination to improve every moment, after hearing Miss Nettie Shafer's essay, "Make Hay while the Sun Shines," A declamation by Miss Nora Rynearson was well rendered. W. E. Aldrich delivered the class address which was instructive and to the point. Music was furnished by the Calkin orchestra and the Christian choir. ***

Fairfield Twp. School Day.

The first annual school day of Fairfield township was held in the grove one mile north of Fairfield Center and proved to be a success in every particular. The forenoon was devoted to the commencement exercises. The class of '94 consisted of seven members and their orations and essays showed a careful preparation, a marked degree of originality and were well delivered. After spending two hours in replenishing the inner man and having a good social time, the audience was again called to order and the alumni of the schools gave their exercises. Each of the nine classes was represented by one of their members in a short address. This association has nearly forty members and the excellent addresses delivered gave evidence that they had not ended their school days in the Common Schools, but had made advancement in a higher education. At the close of these exercises, Co. Supt. Merica gave a short talk in which he urged the parents to take more interest in the advancement of the schools of the township. He brought very prominently before them that a common school education of to-day was not what it was twenty years ago, and that at the present time the boy or girl who did not take all the studies outlined by the state, including grammar and history, was a very uncommon student.

He thinks the idea of having a school day is a good one and advised that in the coming year a greater effort should be made to have all the school children of the township present, thus giving them an inspiration to continue their school work and at last finish the course.

Prof. L. W. Fairfield, of the Tri-State Normal College, Angola, Ind., gave a lecture in the evening at the Lutheran church, which was listened to by a large and appreciative audience.

Much good it is hoped was accomplished by the exercises of the day, and may the schools the coming year have a more energetic and earnest lot of students from the encouragement gained at these exercises. ***

LAINGSBURG, MICH., June 21, '94.

The high noon's sun of the 19th of June glared upon us as we were hurried from Butler to Waterloo to catch the north bound passenger on the Jackson division. We reached it in time and were soon speeding over its much improved track since the Lake Shore has taken it under its control. We reached Hillsdale in time for a Lansing branch train, which bore us swiftly across about as pretty a stretch of country as this state affords. We passed Jonesville, Homer, Albion and Eaton Rapids, all clean, beautiful and prospering Michigan towns. Each contains a number of large brick structures, with tall smokestacks—all innocent of any smoke emerging from their wide open throats—while a beautiful growth of grass chokes up the walks and ways so recently trod by the busy feet of prospering well paid laborers. But now all is quiet. No sounding anvil, no buzz of busy wheels breaks the summer evening stillness, but some scattered laborer may be seen cultivating some small plot of ground to raise something to stay the hunger of his household. We crossed the old river that in youth we were taught so often to repeat, "Michigan, Lansing, on the Grand River," and reached that well known city at 5 p. m. We had an hour to do the city, which we improved by visiting its state house and partaking of an excellent supper that our long ride had given us a good reason to enjoy. The city is clean, the capitol large and imposing, but it has not lost its old cognomen, "Hole in the Woods." We left the city at 6:15 and a few minutes ride brought us to this place. A warm greeting from kind friends awaited us, and a carriage soon brought us to our destination for the night, a grand, good visit with old friends, some of whom we had never before met, but whose knowledge of our parents and the surroundings of our childhood scenes, to fill us to overflowing with sweet memories of old, the recollections of which lulled us to peaceful slumber. The 20th we spent in visiting and comparing notes of the long ago, and in the evening attended the commencement exercises of the high school of this place. The graduating class of eight did themselves much credit by the sprightliness and originality of their productions. The 21st found us hurrying for the morning train for Lansing, at which place we waited an hour for a train over the Detroit, Lansing & Northern, upon which, in company with a carload of picnickers for Grand Ledge, we left Michigan's capital city. The route from the capital to Grand Rapids is through a very fine stretch of country, dotted over with fine farms and buildings. When within seven miles of this city of lumber and furniture, our engine broke down, and it was with considerable nervousness that we waited its repairs, fearing that our connection would be broken at the city; but willing and skillful hands soon righted the disabled machinery, and we were dropped off in Grand Rapids in time to catch our train on the West Michigan. The people throughout this section of country complain of the wet and cold spring, and as consequence corn is very small, potatoes in many places are just coming up, wheat generally looks well, and hay is a moderate crop and being harvested. Our train over the West Michigan carried us to Holland, a point of considerable importance on the shore of Lake Michigan, and dropped us off at Fennville, our point of destination. This lively little place is in the heart of the peach and other fruit section and already begins to show signs of life from large shipments of strawberries. A special fruit train makes daily trips to Chicago. From this point we took a carriage to our destination on the lake shore. Our route lay over a series of high hills, from the tops of which glimpses of the shining waters of Lake Michigan could be seen and the sand hills of Saugatuck and old "Bald Head" glistening in the hot June sun. Our road on either side was lined with peach orchards, the fruit in places showing plainly upon the trees. The people say the crop will be short, but a vast quantity will no doubt be gathered, as the area in peach orchards covers a large portion of the country. It was nearly night when we reached our destination where a good supper and a good night's rest enabled us to continue in the enjoyment of our visit, and being now upon the banks of Lake Michigan, we spent a couple of days playing "beach comber," fishing and bathing in its refreshing waters. From this point we again returned to the West Michigan road and at Grand Junction changed to the Michigan Central to Kendalls, where we enjoyed another day's visit among friends, and on Sunday night we visited Kalamazoo and reached Kendallville by the Grand Rapids and home over the Lake Shore, well pleased with a short visit. St. Joseph School Commencement.

The Sisters' School at Garrett, or St. Joseph School as it is called, held its first graduating exercises last Thursday, June 21, graduating two students, John McKinzie and Gertie Mannion. There was a large attendance of people of all classes, over 600 being present to witness the exercises. The graduates stood high, each having grades of 100. The school has been admitted to the list of high schools, whose graduates can enter the state institutions without further examination.

Butler and Keyser Commencement

The graduating exercises of Butler and Keyser townships were held at Cedar Chapel, June, 16. The graduates were Tina Moody, Cora Heitz, Emma Long, Fred Knott, Philip Holman and George Rugman, of Keyser. Early in the evening the house was crowded to its uttermost and many were obliged to remain outside. The class is to be commended on the orations and essays which were rendered. The exercises closed with a few fitting remarks to class and parents and the presentation of diplomas by our county Supt. C. M. Merica. ***

Franklin Tp. Commenhement.

The ninth annual commencement of Franklin township was held on Monday, June 18, in Memorial Chapel. The very able and animated orchestra from Butler, by rendering many fine pieces of music, was the means of adding much to the success of the entertainment; and when at 8 o'clock, a march was played, the graduates were soon in their respective places. They were four in number, as follows: C. B. Jackman, Lee Noragon, Cora Kepler and Mamie Huyck. Each one did himself much credit, both in composition and delivery of his oration. Albert Shultz assisted in the exercises with an oration, Miss Ida Gratz with an essay, and Miss Minnie Kepler with select reading. Miss Pearl Huyck addressed the class in a few well chosen words. The many presents to the graduates, consisting of handsome books, beautiful baskets, and many boquets, showed the vehement interest of many friends to the cause of more and better education. The inspiring thought quoted by an orator, still rings in our ears: "He who will not work with his mind for himself must work with his muscle for someone else." The church is large, and was immensely filled, while many eager listners crowded about the open windows. The committee on decoration displayed much taste, having distributed profusely, every shade of beautiful roses. The stage draperies were in white, artistically arranged and finished off with many beautiful house plants. There is a marked growing interest being manifested in all our school exercises. So, together with our kind, thoughtful, hard and ever laboring County Superintendent and many obliging and willing trustees, we should be inspired anew at these grand successes, and use all our influence and power to assist. ***

For Good Roads.

Following the sensible plan of the people east of town, who graveled some roads last year, the people west of town started in on Monday morning to gravel in that direction. Charlie Rugman, after helping to make good roads in Keyser township, together with all the neighbors living out that way, went at it and hauled gravel on all the road from the Auburn line to the Keyser line, taking in a mile of road. Sixteen teams were at work on Monday, and put on about 150 loads that day, hauling the gravel from the pit on the Hodge farm just north of town.

The Stormiest Region Known.

The waters of Cape Horn have never been unvisited by storms for more than a week or two at a time within the memory of man. Standing on the outpost of the world Cape Horn is the meeting place of ocean currents of very different temperatures, from the icy cold waters of the Antarctic drift to the warmth of the Brazilian and Peruvian return currents. The prevailing winds are from the north-west and west, and these, coming from the warm regions of the Pacific, condense into fogs, which the sailors call "Cape Horn blankets," and which are the sure forerunners of storms. The extremely low level to which the glaciers of Tierra del Fuego do end, the perpetual congelation of the subsoil, the meeting of conflicting winds of very different temperatures, are all direct or indirect causes combining to make this the most constantly stormy region of the world.

BOOK KNOWLEDGE,

Is not the only thing requisite in a physician. Unless he is born for the business, unless he has the subtle, indefinable power of looking through a man and seeing the disease in its most secret hiding place, he will never be a good physician, even though he graduated from a German university. A man may dissect and vivisect, he may know every detail of human anatomy till he can, by looking at bone heaps and fossils, trace the descent of his ancestry down to the lowest marsupial and beyond, he may know all those things and more, but unless he is born for a physician he will never rise above mediocrity.

An illustration of the great advantage given to a man by an inborn power of diagnosis is seen in the practice of Dr. Fruth, late surgeon in the Provident Medical Dispensary of New York City. This eminent doctor has had, to be sure, all the advantages of thorough college training and widespread experience which the most ambitious physician could desire, but by the side of others who have that fitness and nothing else, he stands out preeminent. His cures are remarkable. They are worked in cases which seem utterly hopeless, and no one, no matter what his malady, should despair until after consulting Dr. Fruth. He will be at the Swineford House, Thursday, July 12.

Rev. A. S. Wooton, pastor of the M. E. church, was married yesterday, June 27, to Miss Cora Draggoo, of Lagrange. They returned here on the afternoon train, and the friends gave them a reception at the parsonage the same evening. The bride, though a stranger to most of our people, is spoken of in the highest terms by those who know her. We hope our people will receive her with that friendly cordiality for which Auburn is noted. The COURIER adds its welcome.

R. W. Cobb, while making a circuit of Allen, Vanwert, Paulding and Defiance counties last week in the interest of the Leage wheel, broke the record between Ft. Wayne and New Haven, the distance being 6½ miles, time 20 minutes flat. Mr. Cobb was not thinking about record breaking, but was simply turning the Chainless loose to get the benefit of a breeze on that hot eve (the 12th). He was followed by several of the Ft, Wayne club, who were afterwards simply astounded at the speed and ease with which Mr. Cobb covered the course with a League Chainless. 26

P. L. Mrs. C.C Hoffman is home again after a long stay with her son, Prof. H. A. Hoffman, at Bloomington, and P. V. Hoffman at Ligonier. Another son, Luther now a teacher at Minneapolis, is visiting her at present.

The great musical gathering in Ft. Wayne called down several Auburn ladies. Among them are Mrs. Garwood, her mother Mrs. McClellan, Mrs. Barns, Flora Hoffman, Lydia Teeters, and perhaps others.

Don't forget that Schaab & Murphy, our clothiers, are in their new room just south of their former place. You will find them with a fine stock of everything in their line of hats, caps, clothing gents' furnishing, etc.

Schaab & Murphy have moved into their new room, the Tarney building three doors south of their former location, but in the same block. The room has been nicely fitted up for them and will give them a superior location.

The Ladies of the Maccabees of Auburn will give an ice cream social on the court house lawn on the 4th of July. The bill of fare and price will appear on bills next week. Let everybody come and patronize these ladies in their endeavor.

As nice and seasonable a summer drink as we know of is the orange cider sold by Robbins & McCord. One gets a bottle of it and puts into the refrigerator, and it is ready for use as soon as it cools. The colder the better. It may be laid on the ice, or poured into a glass containing pieces of ice. It is very refreshing.

The ice cream social given by the Junior Endeavor Society of the Lutheran church last Saturday evening, was a grand success in every respect. They worked with untiring efforts until done. The proceeds of the evening were $37.55. The pastor feels much encouraged to think that he has so many young earnest workers for God and the church.

A letter from B. F. Fretz, a former DeKalb teacher, locates him at the Indiana State Prison North, not as a criminal, however, but as an official. He is head clerk in the Deputy Warden's department, and has been there since some time in April. We are sorry to know that we have several DeKalb boys in that institution, but are pleased to note that Mr. Fretz is there in an honorable capacity.

Such pretty roses as we have in town this year! Look at those at Ves. Zimmerman's and W. H. Rakestraw's and many more. Mrs. A. B. Richards has a most brilliant display of cactus flowers, and so it is all over town. But the greatest showing of all, is at W. H. McIntosh's. He has a great bed of poppies, that shows many hundreds of flowers at a time, besides a wilderness of roses and other lovely flowers.

Bro. Bliss is awfully ungrateful. After the COURIER had saved him from a vicious attack which the Press made on his "lylock" spelling, he turns the vials of his wrath on his defender, the COURIER. The COURIER article, however, had copied only words—actually misspelled words—that showed a want of knowledge, and we purposely omitted mere typographical errors, or such as are caused by careless typesetting and proof reading. Then he comes back at us with a set of errors, not one of which shows ignorance of spelling, but of proof reading only. And it is worth notice that he utterly forgives the Press which alone attacked him, and goes for the COURIER, the only one that defended him. If Bliss won't accept a friendly act, we will drop the matter by alluding to one fact, which is, that the COURIER knows how to spell and the Times don't. And a paper that can't secure any more attractive advertising than its own ads for the little populist glass buttons and "momentoes" is in poor shape to select the proper kind of ads for its more extensively read neighbors. That the political matter in the COURIER is simply unanswerable, especially by a man of Bliss' capacity, is a good reason why he don't read it more frequently.

A Poor Milker.

Two little lads were one evening last week inspecting one of the newly invented milk posts, that Mr. York has been putting up for people. It was quite a puzzle to one of them. But the other informed him it was a "milk post, where people get their milk." The other turned the thing, shook it a little then squeezed it and then blurted out in a disgusted way, "Huh! You can't get any milk out of that thing. I'll bet ye on that." And the other not being able to explain the faith he had in the thing gave it up, and the boys moved on.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1. 5

Origin of "The Three R's."

The famous toast to "the three R's"—"reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic"—is usually accredited to Sir William Curtis, Lord Mayor of London in the year 1795 and for many years one of the wardens of the tower. He proposed it at a dinner given by the London board of education. It was received with great applause. Although recognized at the time as a jest, it was afterward taken up in earnest by Sir William's detractors, who have handed his name down to posterity as a blundering ignoramus. A late writer in one of the leading English weeklies says that an aged ex-member of the board of education, now deceased, assured him that Sir William Curtis, although a man of limited education, was very shrewd, and that it was the height of presumption to suppose that he used his immortal alliteration otherwise than as a jest.

Snakes Alive!!

Quite a snake story comes from up by South Milford in Lagrange county. This spring while a farmer was plowing along a sort of sand bank, the plow opened up a nest of snakes, rattlesnakes in fact, and they killed twenty-nine rattlers, before they stopped. The next day, they found and killed ten more. And they say the season is not extra good for rattlesnakes either.

LORD ROSEBERY is probably the appiest man in England. He should e, at any rate. Twenty-three years go he vowed that he would marry he richest heiress in England, win he Derby, and be Prime Minister efore he died. Ladas' victory over he Epsom Downs course puts the apping climax upon the sum of his itled owner's ambitions, for Rose- bery married Hannah Rothschild, the ichest endowed maiden in Great Britain, succeeded Gladstone as Premier, and has now won the blue ribbon and the 5,000 guineas, which are the prizes of the world's greatest annual horse race. To fulfill such a varied trilogy of desires is the lot of but few mortals.

THE suit instituted by Attorney General Olney to recover $15,000,000 from the estate of the late Leland Stanford, as part of the debt now due the United States from the syndicate which built the Central Pacific Railway, marks the first attempt of the Government to recover any part of the immense sums owing to it on account of the assistance it loaned to the builders of these transcontinental lines. Attorney General Olney should push the suit to the bitter end, and in default of payment seize upon the properties against which the Government holds liens. A reversion of these railroads to the people is more to be desired than the repayment of all the moneys loaned or guaranteed.

SLOWLY but surely the conservative—not to say benighted—Europeans are adopting the comforts and conveniences of American railroad travel. There are one or two vestibuled trains on the English roads, and now it is announced with a great flourish of trumpets that the new fast express between Ostend and Vienna will be a "train de luxe, the cars being connected with covered ways, giving access from one end of the train to the other." This appears a very commonplace luxury to Americans, but it is undoubtedly viewed as a great affair on the continent. Some day they will adopt the baggage-checking system, and then the millennium will have arrived.

WHATEVER may be the faults of the Chicago police force, too much cannot be said in praise of the officers who guard the crowded crossings in the downtown district. Their work is the most exacting and nerve-racking that can be imagined; their hours are long and they have to deal with all sorts of foolish, unreasonable and exacting people. Yet under these disadvantages it is rare that one of the "corner men" loses his temper or fails in the performance of his duty. He picks children out from under horses' feet, he steers intoxicated persons from the roaring sea that surges in the street to a haven of safety on the sidewalk, he answers sixty questions an hour with unvarying good nature, and, most beautiful sight of all, he keeps in subjection the fiery, untamed cab driver and his colleague the reckless truckman by a mere crooking of the finger. The crossing policeman is a joy and a blessing, and his beneficial and philanthropic work goes far to redeem any shortcomings that he may occasionally be guilty of.

MEMORIAL DAY is always prolific of oratorical asses who seek the occasion to advertise themselves by giving utterance to radical or revolutionary doctrines. Such prostitution to base uses of the day of sorrow produces an effect similar to that experienced by one climbing the great pyramids only to see stretched out on them in huge letters the advertisement of "Drake's Bitters" and somebody's miraculous soap. The star performers at the late memorial occasion happened to be two ministers of the gospel, so called. One, named Cave, at Richmond, Va., preached rebellion revived and blatant. Another named Grose, at Frankton, Ind., counters by shouting the bloody-shirt warhoop from the Northern standpoint. Each of these "reverend" ranters wants the civil war fought over again. Though blasphemously claiming to be mouthpieces of the great Preacher of Peace they talk like Satan addressing his archangels of ruin in the bottomless pit. It is a little strange, not to say disgusting, that the most bloodthirsty sentiments on occasions of this kind should proceed from occupants of the pulpit. When real war rages it is not noticeable that they are especially belligerent. In war they are lambs but in peace they are "lammers." They are the most civil military men and the most military civil men that the country affords. When old Jube Early was trying to rally his men against Sheridan during the rout at Cedar Creek, he met one of his chaplains hastening wildly to the rear. "That's the way with you preachers," sneered old Jubal. "You are always preaching about going to heaven, but when you get a chance you are no more anxious to avail yourself of it than the rest of us." This timely rebuke conveys a lesson that might prove instructive to the Caves and the Groses.

PRIMITIVE GRAMMAR.

How Syntax Appears When It Is Reduced to Its Simplest Elements.

Everybody knows the story of the Englishman who, dining with a mandarin, desired to know what meat he was eating. He pointed to the dish and said interrogatively: "Quack-quack?" His host shook his head and . . wered with the politest of smiles: "Bow-wow." And there, says Longman's Magazine, you have the language in its simplest elements.

As yet, however, it possesses no syntax, no order, no formative principles. Now push the thing one stage further. Let us make a verb, to eat. The simplest way of doing this is to imitate the sound of teeth in grinding—especially in grinding hard grain, like corn, or coarse roots and foodstuffs. Ny'm, ny'm, ny'm, or nyum, nyum, nyum, is about as near as we can get to it in ordinary letters. (The Italian gn'm, gn'm, or the Spanish n'm, n'm, would represent it more accurately.) Hence, nyum-nyum is a common symbol for "to eat" with savages.

Now ask with an interrogative inflection of voice, "Nyum-nyum quack-quack?" and that means, "Am I eating duck?" The answer comes with a shake of the head, "Nyum-nyum bow-wow," and that means, "Oh, dear, no; it is dog you are eating." True, the grammatical elements of first and second person are her suppressed, but so they are in many primitive languages, and so they are even in the negro dialects of French and English. Tenses and persons are frequently lost. "Him gwine town" means "He is going to town" in negro English. "Him eat" means "He is eating;" "Him eat yesterday" means "He ate," and so on generally. "I have eaten" becomes in Creole French "Moi finn mange," that is to say, "J'ai fini manger." "Rich nigger, him mulatto; poor mulatto, him nigger," gives the simple grammar of negro English; in Creole French where "li" means "lui," it comes out in the precisely analogous form. Negue riche, li mulatte; mulatte pauvre, li negue." That is grammar reduced to its simplest elements.

Now, to carry the process one step further. You see the remains of a duck lying on the ground in the neighborhood of your compound, and you wish to know what has happened to it. You ask a savage bystander, "Bow-wow nyum-nyum quack-quack?" That is to say, "Has a dog bitten my duck?" The savage shakes his head, pats his own round stomach, and answers with gusto, "Nyum-nyum quack-quack." That means "I have eaten it."

THE CITY OF POMPEII.

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF ITS LAST DAYS.

History of the Famous Buried City—Extensive Discoveries Made Among the Ruins—Fully One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Inhabitants at the Time of Destruction.

Since 1834, when the late Lord Lytton, then Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer, published his famous novel, "The Last Days of Pompeii," so extensive have been the discoveries made among the ruins of the buried city, that very little of what he then wrote remains accurate. The excavations of the past twenty years have laid bare sufficient to guarantee the assertion that, far from being a little country seaside town, as the great novelist described it to have been, Pompeii was a very large city indeed, with possibly over one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants. Even Sir William Gell's beautiful work, compiled with so much patience and personal research, holds no longer its position as an infallible guide. In 1832, about three hundred bodies had been dug out of the ruins; to-day the number reaches considerably over three thousand.

The history of Pompeii is simple enough. Its building is generally ascribed to the Oscans, and its name is derived from the Greek "Homileta," or "storehouses," indicating its commercial origin. It is known to have been a city of some importance 500 years before Christ, but under the empire it seems to have become a kind of Brighton of the epoch, a fashionable summer resort and watering place. Cicero had a villa in its suburbs, in which he wrote his famous "Offices" and entertained as guests Augustus Cæsar, Balbus, Hirtius, and Pansa. Claudius took refuge here from the tyranny of Tiberius, and his son Drusus died within the walls of Pompeii, oddly enough, from the effects of swallowing the wrong way a pear pip, which choked him.

On more than one occasion the city was menaced by destruction; firstly, A. D. 63, by a terrible earthquake, which Tacitus tells us threw down half the place, and Seneca adds, killed over "six hundred sheep, and deprived hundreds of persons of their reason. So great, indeed, was the terror, that many persons abandoned the city entirely." In the course of the same year there was yet another earthquake; which was, if anything, much more terrible than the first, and traces of which are yet discernible among the ruins now brought to light.

The first eruption of Vesuvius of which we have authentic record occurred in the year A. D. 79, on the 24th day of August, late in the afternoon. It is memorable not only as being the one which destroyed Pompeii and Herculaneum, and caused the death of Pliny the naturalist, but also as having had Pliny the younger, his nephew, as its historian.

Pliny describes the catastrophe as he himself saw it. He tells us that there had been many shocks of earthquake before, and one night one in the morning. From this epistle we gather that the first warning of a serious nature occurred at Pompeii at about 4 in the afternoon. All throughout the evening and night long scenes of unexampled horror took place.

"Nothing there was to be heard but the shrieks of women and children; the cries of men; some calling for parents, others for husband and wives, others upon their favorite gods; one lamenting his own fate, another that of his family; some wishing to die from the very fear of dying; but the greater part imagining that the last and eternal night was come which was to destroy the world and its gods together. Meantime a rain of fire fell around us, mixed with cinders and ashes, which we were obliged now and then to shake off, otherwise we should have been crushed and buried in the heap." When day did appear and "even the sun peeped out," the sight which greeted the eyes of the great naturalist's nephew and his mother, "a corpulent and elderly lady," who "had frequently urged her son to abandon her and save himself," but which he nobly and dutifully refused to do, was extraordinary indeed. "Every object which presented itself to our eye seemed changed, being covered over with white ashes, like a deep snow. We returned to Misenum, where we refreshed ourselves as best we could, and passed another anxious night between hope and fear—though, indeed, with a much larger share of the latter, for the earthquake still continued, while several foolish persons ran up and down, heightening their own and their friend's calamities by their terrible predictions."

On this memorable night, Herculaneum, a much larger city than Pompeii, was destroyed by a kind of flow of liquid lava, which, pouring itself into every crevice, has rendered attempts to recover the remains almost fruitless. Pompeii, however, was buried under a thick coating of ashes, which have rather preserved than damaged it: so that, as a rule, the houses are unearthed entire and pretty nearly in their original condition, the frescoes fresh as if painted but yesterday, and even articles of food are found just where they were left 1,800 years ago. From certain indications it seems evident that during the first four centuries of our era many slight excavations were made, possibly with a view of unearthing hidden treasures, and that even a village or so was built on the sight of the once great city; but in 472 another vigorous eruption destroyed the huts and so scared the people that, until 1748, no further attempts were made to uncover what nature, in one of her freaks of temper, had so artfully concealed. In that year, however, a peasant, when digging a well, found a painted chamber containing statues and other objects of interest. King Charles II, of Naples, in whom the discoveries of Herculaneum had awakened a desire for further explorations, ordered the excavations to be continued. In 1755, the amphitheater was laid bare, and since then until now, and notably during the last ten years, the works have gone on pretty steadily.

BIG COMET COMING OUR WAY.

A Splendid Traveler Due to Come Within Human Vision in 1911.

Halley's comet is coming back—the comet which in the year 1066 shed celestial splendor over the Norman conquest and whose terror-inspiring visit was commemorated by the hand of Queen Matilda in the Bayeaux tapestry; the comet that in 1456, the year of the battle of Belgrade, scared the Turk and Christian alike and was anathematized by a bull from the Pope; the comet whose strange scimiter form still chilled the marrow of the ignorant and superstitious at its latest return in 1835. It is yet far away, says the Providence Journal, but the eye of science sees it, already within the orbit of Neptune, rushing sunward and earthward with constantly increasing velocity as it falls along the steep curve of its orbit. And a call to arms, a call for preparation, has just been issued from one of the chief watch towers of astronomy. Prof. Glasenapp announces that the computing bureau established by the Russian Astronomical Society has undertaken the calculation of the true path of Halley's comet with a view to predicting the exact date of the next return. He hopes that astronomers acquainted with unpublished observations of the comet will communicate the information to the society. After its perihelion the comet was watched retreating out into space until May, 1836, when it was finally swallowed from sight. It will be in perihelion again about 1911, but with the great telescopes now in existence, and the greater ones that may then have been constructed, it is probable that the comet will be detected coming sunward a year or more earlier than that. The fact that the labor of computing the precise time of its return is already about to begin gives assurance that the next time it will not be a question of how many days, but rathe of how many hours, or even minutes, the calculations will be in error.

Curve Pitching.

There are some people still who refuse to believe that a baseball can travel out of the straight line between the pitcher's box and the home plate on its way to the catcher. It has been proved again and again that a ball can be "curved," by a now well known experiment. Two stakes are set up so that the pitcher standing behind one cannot hit a mark on the left side of the other in a straight line, the ball passing to the right of the first. Indeed, a short while ago, a noted colledge pitcher was offered a $1,000 by an old gentleman of his acquaintance if he could prove to his satisfaction that a baseball could be pitched in a curve. The pitcher at once set up to stakes in his back yard and curved the ball around them in fine style. But the old gentleman insisted that the whole thing was an optical delusion, and is no more convinced than ever.

Every boy knows how hard it is to bat an "out-curve" or a "drop," and after he has struck out a few times wants no one to prove to him there is such a thing as curve pitching. There is little use in trying to explain the theory of this performance here, as many scientific papers have written on it, which, after all, would not help a man to toss a tennis ball. The final twist given the ball as it leaves the hand makes a spinning motion, so that there is more resistance by the air on one side or the other, and the ball is forced out of a straight line by unequal pressure on one of its side.

Daybreak Concerts.

It was our privilege very recently to attend a matinee given by our feathered artists, the robins and bluebirds. In fact it is just the beginning of the season for this out-door troupe. Amid the chill and gloom of this laggard spring it was cheering, on being aroused at the unseasonable hour of half-past 4 to hear their merry warbling. Sometimes it was a solo, then a duet, and again the full chorus swelled out in grand harmony. It is a wonder that a choir of these native singers has not been thought of for the coming Peace Jubilee. But then the hour they choose for their entertainments and are in the best voice is so very unreasonable that the performers would lack an audience. Think of rising at 3 on a June morning to attend a concert! Only birds and babies believe in real matinees; not those afternoon affairs to which modern circumlocution has given the misnomer "matinee," but the genuine thing; for to them 3 o'clock means 3 in the morning. Does one ever take an early train, or chance for some reason to see the sun rise in summer or spring without feeling how wasteful he is of the golden freshness of morning hours? But the birds have their way and we have ours. If any one is incredulous of the quality of their morning orchestra let him secure a hearing, the only expense being that of early waking.—Boston Transcript.

The Reason.

"In looking out of doors do you notice how bright is the green of the grass and the leaves?" asked an elderly gentleman of a little girl whose home he was visiting.

"Yes, sir."

"Why does it appear so much brighter at this time?" he next asked, looking down upon the bright, sweet face with tender interest.

"Because ma has cleaned the windows, and you can see out better," she said.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

CHECK ON JAW WORK

HOUSE WILL LIMIT DEBATE ON THE TARIFF BILL.

Expect the Bill Will Be Back from the Senate Within Ten Days and Then It Will Be Pushed Through—Small-pox in Chicago.

End Now in Sight.

Tariff leaders of the House are preparing to handle the tariff bill expeditiously when it comes back to that body, as a Washington correspondent. No definite program has yet been arranged, but the plans have matured sufficiently to satisfy those in charge of the bill that there will not be another long-drawn-out debate. If need be a series of special rules will be presented to close debate on various schedules and then a final rule to wind up the whole question. Such a course will be adopted, however, only in case the debate gives promise of becoming interminable. In will not be used to limit a reasonable discussion of the Senate changes. Members of the Ways and Means Committee expect the bill to be returned to the House within the next ten days. It is expected, however, that there will be several days' delay after the bill passes the Senate in order that a careful revision of the Senate changes may be made and a new print of the bill issued.

Representative Breckinridge of Arkansas, a member of the committee, says the first step in the House on the receipt of the bill will be to refer it to the Ways and Means Committee. This body will take several days, perhaps a week, in carefully going over the bill, and determining on the policy to be adopted toward it in whole and in detail. Thus far there has been no desire to fix a policy, as it was likely to be construed as improper influence on the Senate. But with the Senate's work complete, the House members will go over the bill in detail to see how far they will recommend an agreement with the Senate and to what extent they will join issue with the Senate changes. The determinations of the committee will be largely advisory to the House, but they are likely to fix the future program of the conference. The committee will select the House conferrees, to be recommended to Speaker Crisp for his appointment.

Rules for Debate on the Bill.

When the bill is once in conference frequent reports will be made to the House on such agreement as may be reached. Some of the Ways and Means members say ten days will suffice for agreements. Others are less sanguine, and foresee the necessity of a rule, or series of rules, to prevent another protracted debate.

Representative Outhwait, of the Rules Committee, says there will be no disposition to cut off fair debate. "The House will not consider itself bound hand and foot by the Senate amendments," he said. "On the contrary, they will be fairly and reasonably discussed. The good sense of the House will undoubtedly dictate when the debate has proceeded far enough. If, however, a rule becomes necessary, one can undoubtedly be brought in and passed for closing the debate. As yet, however, no suggestion of a rule has been made."

Representative Burrows, a Republican member of the Rules Committee, says: "A rule can be undoubtedly made effective in disposing of debate on the tariff. It can prescribe a limited time for discussion, and then direct that the previous question be considered as ordered without any dilatory motions. Of course the House would have to vote on such a rule, but if the gentlemen on the other side determine on crowding the bill through they can probably get through a rule strong enough to accomplish that purpose."

SMALL-POX IN CHICAGO.

Terrible Condition of Affairs Reported by Agents from Neighboring States.

A startling state of affair has been brought to the notice of the Mayor and health officials of Chicago in relation to the spread of small-pox. Special agents from Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois were sent to Chicago not long ago to make secret inquiry into the matter, and the report they made to Mayor Hopkins of the manner in which the health authorities of the city were endeavoring to check the epidemic seems scarcely credible. The report recommended a quarantine against the city and so stirred up the authorities that a force of 400 vaccinators was at once added to the health department, the force of regular physicians was doubled and a detail of police drafted and held in readiness if it should be needed. Then within two days a descent was made upon the inflicted region and a house to house canvass was made. Every one who had not a well-defined scar of recent production was obliged to be vaccinated again. There was some strong resistance, particularly in the Polish district, where the police had to be called in, but the work was thoroughly and impartially done.

In one district, comprising four square miles of territory and inhabited mostly by poor foreigners, the special agents found everything ripe for the spread of the disease. It was in this section that the scourge showed itself first. The filth and squalor of the locality was indescribable. The men reported that only two physicians were at work, and that but one case of smallpox in six was reported to the health officers. About one case in ten was placarded to warn people away, and in one out of ten instances was there fumigation and quarantine. Children in homes where there was smallpox were found in a large number of instances playing on the streets with other children. Instances were found of children who had about recovered from small-pox, but who still had scabs on their faces, mingling freely with well children. Grown people living in infected homes came and went about as they pleased. Vaccination had been attempted to some extent, but the facilities were entirely unequal to the demand. The inhabitants of the district were found to be bitterly opposed to whatever work the Health Department attempted, and were evading at every opportunity.

TO CONVERT THE BIG CITIES.

An Evangelistic Movement to Be Inaugurated Next Winter.

There will occur next winter a series of religious gatherings the like of which this country has never seen. They will surely attract the attention of the religious world, especially as the movement is to be non-sectarian in its broader purposes. The plan includes aggressive and continuous work, not only within the Episcopalian denomination, but within every denomination, the Roman Catholics included, and while as yet no formal response has been made by those in power in the Catholic Church, there is reason to believe that they will give the movement their cordial aid. The plan was first conceived by Rev. Dr. E. A. Bradley, the rector of St. Agnes' Church in New York City, and the president of the influential association called the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Bishop Whitaker, of Philadelphia, gave the first cordial approval, followed by Bishop Paret, of Baltimore, and Bishop Potter, of the New York diocese. Mr. Moody heartily approves of the proposition and regards it as auxiliary to his own special religious work. He gladly consented to arrange for his Washington meetings so that they could be held at the same time that this series of meetings in Washington churches was to be held.

In detail the plan is as follows: Eight weeks before the beginning of Lent there will begin a series of daily services in every Episcopal Church in Washington, in every Presbyterian Church there and probably in every church of any other denomination. There are to be held three services daily, morning, afternoon and evening. They are not to be what are called revival services they are to be more in the nature of that extraordinary series of religious meetings which was held in Trinity Church in New York City during Lent four years ago, when Phillips Brooks preached for an hour to large congregations. To Washington will go some of the ablest and most eloquent preachers in all of the denominations. Such men as Dr. Greer, Dr. Lyman K. Beecher, and every one of the clergy of Great Britain who has gained repute in this country. Later the meetings will be held in Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other large cities. It is believed that the Methodists and Baptists will cordially co-operate.

a Union Pacific train and ran it to the industrial camp, offering it to Kelly to transport his men. The offer was declined and warrants were issued for the arrest of the girls. They skipped the country, however, and subsequently joined Kelly's industrials. The girls claim to be typewriters and give their names as Edna Harper and Anna Hooten.

SWEPT BY STORMS.

LOSS OF LIFE AND DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY.

Aledo, Ill., Visited by Violent Wind, Rain and Lightning—The Rev. H. T. Ferguson, Pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, of Sunbeam, Instantly Killed.

Crops Injured by Hail.

A storm of wind, rain, and lightning passed over the section in the vicinity of Aledo, Ill., causing considerable damage and loss of life. The barn of L. C. Detwiler was struck by lightning and burned; loss, $200; no insurance. An inner wall of the new courthouse in course of construction here was blown down. The Rev. H. T. Ferguson, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Sunbeam, while unharnessing a horse, was instantly killed by lightning, the bolt also killing his horse, stunning his son and igniting the barn, which was burned. Frank Harvey and his wife were milking, when lightning killed Harvey and stunned his wife. Two cows were killed. The wind did considerable damage to fruit and shade trees in all parts of the county. The heavy rain which accompanied the storm did much, however, to offset the damage, as it was badly needed. At Elwood, Ind., the Quick City Iron and Steel Works, in course of erection, were utterly destroyed by the terrific windstorm. They were wrecked a month ago by a storm, but were being rebuilt. The damage is estimated at $10,000. A hailstorm visited the southeastern portion of Huntington County, Ind., and resulted in a great devastation of crops. On a number of farms there is a total loss of wheat, oats, corn, and grass. A conservative estimate by acreage places the loss of crops at $50,000. At East Tawas, Mich., a severe hail and rain storm occurred. Lightning struck the Lumber-Emery Mill dock, and the shock knocked several men in the mill down. Gardens were badly damaged by heavy rains. A heavy hailstorm at Davenport, Iowa, laid bare the fields in many portions of Scott County. Field crops and small fruits suffered to the extent of thousands of dollars, cattle were stampeded, and chickens killed. At Creston, Iowa, during a thunderstorm, Oscar Watson, aged 17, was struck by lightning and killed.

CLOUDS OF LOCUSTS.

Millions of Them Are Now Swarming Over New Jersey.

The country all about Paterson, N. J., is overrun with seventeen-year locusts. Millions of them fill the air and light on the trees, covering the bark and leaves. When they take their flight all fruit and leaves have disappeared. The farmers are talking about taking some concerted action against the pests before their crops are wholly destroyed.

One afternoon last week a dense, black cloud was seen by residents of Pompton. At first they thought it was a storm, but soon it was seen to be a swarm of locusts. As the locusts neared the village a train approached. The train was immediately in the track of the locusts, who were about thirty feet from the ground, making a gradual descent as if about to attack the train. When within a few feet of the smokestack of the locomotive the engineer blew the whistle and sent a cloud of steam toward the locusts. The insects made a sharp swerve to the east and flew to a mountain back of Pompton Lake. Many of them were drawn into the train by the rush of the wind, while others were hurled against the locomotive and cars and scattered dead about the tracks. The passengers caught the few that entered the car windows and no doubt took them home as curiosities.

On another occasion locusts took possession of a train near Avenel, and for a time there was every prospect of the passengers having to abandon the coaches and let the locusts retain them. The heat had caused almost every window to be opened, and when the train came to Avenel the passengers leaned out to look at the hundreds of thousands of the locusts on the ground and in the air. They would have been satisfied with this, but the locusts were not. Before the passengers were aware what was happening, the pests had swarmed up the sides of the cars, and through the windows and doors inside. Women screamed, and stood on the seats with their skirts drawn up, so as to avoid immediate contact with the crawling objects. They soon had to let go their skirts and pay undivided attention to keeping the locusts from their hats and faces. The more timid passengers started for the doors, but at that moment the cars started. The rush of wind seemed to disconcert the pests. Those on the outside of the cars dropped off, and those on the inside clung closely to the seats or floors, and were soon thrown out of the windows by the train hands who started through the cars.

Foreigners Have Quit Chicago.

Discontent and hard times have sent 10,000 Scandinavian, Italian and German residents of Chicago back to Europe since March 1. A large proportion of these emigrants belong to the higher class of artisans, carpenters, iron workers and molders, and in perhaps half of the cases they have sold out all their possessions and are taking the money that remains after their tickets are procured to the old country, where they intend to remain the rest of their days.

A TOBACCO HEART.

Thousands of Americans Can't Get Insurance Because Tobacco Has Destroyed the Heart Action and Wrecked the Nervous System—No-To-Bac Works Many Miraculous Cures.

DELANSON, N. Y.—Engineer O. N. Bates stepped off Engine No. 47 with a long oiler in one hand and a bunch of blue waste in the other. Not a bystander there could help remarking his youthful, healthy look and active, vigorous movements, and contrasting his appearance with his condition of two months ago.

"Say, Colonel, how well you look!"

"Yes, I am well; better than I have been for years."

"What have you been doing?"

"Oh, not much. No-to-bac cured me of the tobacco habit and braced me mentally and physically. In fact, made me a new man in more ways than one. I had no appetite; couldn't sleep; now I sleep like a baby and eat three times a day with a relish, for the first time in years. My heart action is regular and no longer a bar to increased life insurance. You know throttle pulling requires a pretty steady nerve, and my nerves are O. K. now. One box and a quarter of No-to-bac cured me completely in ten days, after using tobacco forty years. No-to-bac is sold by all druggists and made by the Sterling Remedy Company of New York and Chicago. You ought to get one of their little books called 'Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away,' and post yourself. They send them free to any one that writes. It cost me $2.50 to get cured, and I spent three or four dollars a week for tobacco. If I had failed to get cured I would have gotten my money back, as the makers guarantee three boxes to cure any case. I have recommended the use of No-to-bac to fifteen of the boys on the line, and every one of them, so far as I know, has been cured."

The cab bell rang, the engineer climbed up quickly on the footboard, and the big train rolled away.

UNITED AT LAST

BY MISS M. E. BRADDON

CHAPTER XIV.

SIR CYPRIAN HAS HIS SUSPICIONS.

Sir Cyprian Davenant had not forgotten that dinner at Richmond given by Gilbert Sinclair a little while before his departure for Africa, at which he had met the handsome widow to whom Mr. Sinclair was then supposed to be engaged. The fact was brought more vividly back to his mind by a circumstance that came under his notice the evening after he had accepted Lord Clanyarde's invitation to Marchbrook.

He had been dining at his club with an old college friend, and had consented, somewhat unwillingly, to an adjournment to one of the theaters near the Strand, at which a popular burlesque was being played for the three hundred and sixty-fifth time. Sir Cyprian entertained a cordial detestation of this kind of entertainment, in which the low comedian of the company enacts a distressed damsel in short petticoats and a flaxen wig, while pretty actresses swagger in costumes of the cavalier period, and ape the manners of the music-hall swell. But it was 10 o'clock. The friends had recalled all the old Oxford follies in the days when they were under-graduates together in Tom Quad. They had exhausted these reminiscences and a magnum of Lafitte, and though Sir Cyprian would have gladly gone back to his chambers and his books, Jack Dunster, his friend, was of a livelier temperament, and wanted to finish the evening.

"Let's go and see 'Hercules and Omphale' at the Kaleidoscope," he said. "It's no end of fun. Jeemson plays Omphale in a red wig, and Minnie Vavasour looks awfully fascinating in pink satin boots and lion-skin. We shall be just in time for the breakdown."

Sir Cyprian assented with a yawn. He had seen fifty such burlesques as "Hercules and Omphale" in the days when such things had their charm for him, too, when he could be pleased with a pretty girl in pink satin hessians, or be moved to laughter by Jeemson's painted nose and falsetto scream.

They took a hansom and drove to the Kaleidoscope, a bandbox of a theater screwed into an awkward corner of one of the narrowest streets in London—a street at which well-bred carriage horses accustomed to the broad thoroughfares of Belgravia shied furiously.

It was December, and there was no one worth speaking of in town; but the little Kaleidoscope was crowded, notwithstanding. There were just a brace of empty stalls in a draughty corner for Sir Cyprian and Mr. Dunster.

The breakdown was just on, the pretty little Hercules flourishing his club, and exhibiting a white round arm with a diamond bracelet above the elbow. Omphale was showing her ankles, to the delight of the groundlings, the violins were racing one another, and the flute squeaking its shrillest in a vulgar negro melody, accentuated by rhythmical bangs on the big drum. The audience were in raptures, and rewarded the exertions of band and dancers with a double recall. Sir Cyprian stifled another yawn and looked around the house.

Among the vacuous countenances, all intent on the spectacle, there was one face which was out of the common, and which expressed a supreme weariness. A lady sitting alone in a stage box, with one rounded arm resting indolently on the velvet cushion—an arm that might have been carved in marble, bare to the elbow, its warm, human ivory relieved by the yellow hue of an old Spanish point ruffle. Where had Cyprian Davenant seen that face before?

The lady had passed the first bloom of youth, but her beauty was of that character that does not fade with youth. She was of the Pauline Borghese type, a woman worthy to be modeled by a new Canova.

"I remember," said Sir Cyprian to himself. "It was at that Richmond dinner that I met her. She is the lady Gilbert Sinclair was to have married."

He felt a curious interest in this woman, whose name even he had forgotten. Why had not Sinclair married her? She was strikingly handsome, with a bolder, grander beauty than Constance Clanyarde's fragile and poetic loveliness—a woman whom such a man as Sinclair might have naturally chosen. Just as such a man would choose a high-stepping chestnut horse, without being too nice as to fineness and delicacy of line.

"And I think from the little I saw that the lady was attached to him," mused Sir Cyprian.

He glanced at the stage-box several times before the end of the performance. The lady was quite alone, and sat in the same attitude, fanning herself languidly, and hardly looking at the stage. Just as the curtain fell, Sir Cyprian heard the click of the box door, and looking up, saw that a gentleman had entered. The lady rose, and he came forward a little to assist in the arrangement of her ermine-lined mantle.

The gentleman was Gilbert Sinclair.

"What do you think of it?" asked Jack Dunster, as they went out into the windy lobby, where people were crowded together waiting for their carriages.

"Abominable," murmured Sir Cyprian.

"Why, Minnie Vavasour is the prettiest actress in London, and Jeemson's almost equal to Toole."

"I beg your pardon. I was not thinking of the burlesque," answered Sir Cyprian, hastily.

Gilbert and his companion were just in front of them.

"Shall I go and look for your carriage?" asked Mr. Sinclair.

"If you like. But as you left me to sit out this dreary rubbish by myself all the evening, you might just as well have let me find my way to my carriage."

"Don't be angry with me for breaking my engagement. I was obliged to go out shooting with some fellows, and I didn't leave Maidstone till nine o'clock. I think I paid you a considerable compliment in traveling thirty miles to hand you to your carriage. No other woman could expect so much from me."

"You are not going back to Davenant to-night."

"No; there is a supper on at the Albion. Lord Coleraidale's trainer is to be there, and I expect to get a wrinkle or two from him. A simple matter of business, I assure you."

"Mrs. Walsingham's carriage!" roared the waterman.

"Mrs. Walsingham," thought Sir Cyprian, who was squeezed into a corner with his friend, walled up by opera-cloaked shoulders, and within ear-shot of Mr. Sinclair. "Yes, that's her name."

"That saves you all trouble," said Mrs. Walsingham. "Can I set you down anywhere?"

"No, thanks; the Albion's close by."

Sir Cyprian struggled out of his corner just in time to see Gilbert shut the brougham door and walk off through the December drizzle.

"So that acquaintance is not a dropped one," he thought. "It augurs ill for Constance."

Three days later he was riding out Barnet way, in a quiet country lane, as rural and remote in aspect as an accommodation road in the shires, when he passed a brougham with a lady in it—Mrs. Walsingham's carriage again, and again alone.

"This looks like fatality," he thought.

He had been riding Londonward, but turned his horse and followed the carriage. This solitary drive, on a dull, gray winter day, so far from London, struck him as curious. There might be nothing really suspicious in the fact. Mrs. Walsingham might have friends in this northern district. But after what he had seen at the Kaleidoscope Sir Cyprian was inclined to suspect Mrs. Walsingham. That she still cared for Sinclair he was assured. He had seen her face light up when Gilbert entered the box; he had seen that suppressed anger which is the surest sign of a jealous, exacting love. Whether Gilbert still cared for her was another question. His meeting her at the theater might have been a concession to a dangerous woman rather than a spontaneous act of devotion.

Sir Cyprian followed the brougham into the sequestered village of Totteridge, where it drew up before the garden gate of a neat cottage with green blinds and a half-glass door—a cottage which looked like the abode of a spinster annuitant.

Here Mrs. Walsingham alighted and went in, opening the half-glass door with the air of a person accustomed to enter.

He rode a little way further, and then walked his horse gently back. The brougham was still standing before the garden gate, and Mrs. Walsingham was walking up and down a gravel path by the side of the house with a woman and a child—a child in a scarlet hood, just able to toddle along the path, sustained on each side by a supporting hand.

"Some poor relation's child, perhaps," thought Cyprian. "A friendly visit on the lady's part."

He had ridden further than he intended, and stopped at a little inn to give his horse a feed of corn and an hour's rest, while he strolled through the village and looked at the old-fashioned church-yard. The retired spot was not without its interest. Yonder was Coppet Hall, the place Lord Melbourne once occupied, and which had, later, passed into the possession of the author of that splendid series of brilliant and various novels which reflect as in a magic mirror all the varieties of life from the age of Pliny to the eve of the Franco-Prussian war.

"Who lives in that small house with the green blinds?" asked Sir Cyprian, as he mounted his horse to ride home.

"It's been took furnished, sir, by a lady from London for her nurse and baby."

"Do you know the lady's name?"

"I can't say that I do, sir. They has their beer from the brewer, and pays ready money for everythink. But I see the lady's brougham go by not above 'alf an hour ago."

"Curious," thought Sir Cyprian. "Mrs. Walsingham is not rising in my opinion."

CHAPTER XV.

"THEY LIVE TOO LONG WHO HAPPINESS OUTLIVE."

In accepting Lord Clanyarde's invitation, Cyprian Davenant had but one thought, one motive—to be near Constance. Not to see her. He knew that such a meeting could bring with it only bitterness for both. But he wanted to be near her, to ascertain at once and forever the whole unvarnished truth as to her domestic life, the extent of her unhappiness, if she was unhappy. Rumor might exaggerate. Even the practical solicitor James Wyatt might represent the state of affairs as worse than it was. The human mind leads to vivid coloring and bold dramatic effect. An ill-used wife and a tyrannical husband present one of those powerful pictures which society contemplates with interest. Society represented generally by Lord Dundreary likes to pity just as it likes to wonder.

At Marchbrook Sir Cyprian was likely to learn the truth, and to Marchbrook he went, affecting an interest in pheasants, and in Lord Clanyarde's conversation, which was like a rambling and unrevised edition of the "Greville Memoirs," varied with turf reminiscences.

There was wonderfully fine weather in that second week of December—clear autumnal days, blue skies, and sunny mornings. The pheasants were shy, and after the first day Sir Cyprian left them to their retirement, preferring long, lonely rides among the scenes of his boyhood, and half-hours of friendly chat with ancient gaffers and goodies who remembered his father and mother, and the days when Davenant had still held up its head in the occupation of the old race.

"This noo gentleman, he do spend a power o' money; but he'll never be looked up to like old Sir Cyprian," said the gray-haired village sage, leaning over his gate to talk to young Sir Cyprian.

In one of his rounds Cyprian Davenant looked in upon the abode of Martha Briggs, who was still at home. Her parents were in decent circumstances, and not eager to see their daughter "suited" with a new service.

Martha remembered Sir Cyprian as a friend of Mrs. Sinclair's before her marriage. She had seen them out walking together in the days when Constance Clanyarde was still in the nursery; for Lord Clanyarde's youngest daughter had known no middle stage between the nursery and her Majesty's drawing-room. Indeed, Martha had had her own ideas about Sir Cyprian, and had quite made up her mind that Miss Constance would marry him.

She was therefore disposed to be confidential, and with very slight encouragement told Sir Cyprian all about that sad time at Schoonesthal, how her mistress had nursed her through a fever, and how the sweetest child that ever lived had been drowned through that horrid French girl's carelessness.

"It's all very well to boast of jumping into the river to save the darling," exclaimed Martha; "but why did she go and take the precious pet into a dangerous place? When I had her, I could see danger beforehand. I didn't want to be told that a hill was steep, or that grass was slippery. I never did like foreigners, and now I hate them like poison," cried Miss Briggs, as if under the impression that the whole continent of Europe was implicated in Baby Christabel's death.

"It must have been a great grief to Mrs. Sinclair," said Sir Cyprian.

"Ah, poor dear, she'll never hold up her head again," sighed Martha. "I saw her in church last Sunday, in the beautifulest black bonnet, and if ever I saw anyone going to heaven, it's her. And Mr. Sinclair will have a lot of company, and there are all the windows at Davenant blazing with light till past 12 o'clock every night—my cousin James is a pointsman on the South-eastern, and sees the house from the line—while that poor, sweet lady is breaking her heart."

"But surely Mr. Sinclair would defer to his wife in these things," suggested Sir Cyprian.

"Not he, sir. For the last twelve months that I was with my dear lady I seldom heard him say a kind word to her. Always snarling and sneering. I do believe he was jealous of that precious innocent because Mrs. Sinclair was so fond of her. I'm sure if it hadn't been for that dear baby my mistress would have been a miserable woman.'

This was a bad hearing, and Sir Cyprian went back to Marchbrook that evening sorely depressed."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

ITALIAN BANKS IN NEW YORK.

The Way the Italian Bankers Rob Depositors of Their Money.

The Italian banks, of New York, of which there are about 132, are patronized by the most ignorant Italian laborers. The bankers, who are of a little higher grade than the laborers, do a great variety of work, sending money to Italy, writing letters, acting as adviser and sometimes changing the office into an employment agency. Money is given to a banker by the laborers to be sent to Italy. If he chooses to send it right away, he does; if not—he waits till he gets ready, sometimes never sending it. All the customers' letters come to the banker and, as very few of the depositors can read, he reads to them whatever he wishes to.

The bankers are expected to work without compensation, and so they swindle the customers to obtain it. If a depositor wishes to go some place he has a banker buy his ticket and is overcharged by that person, who keeps the surplus for himself to pay him for his trouble. During the past eight months fourteen Italian bankers absconded in New York. The reason that so many got out is on account of the hard times. The depositors, being out of work, go to the bank to get their savings, but the banker, having probably been juggling with the money, is unable to meet the demands and is forced to run away. Of course all of the bankers are not dishonest. The fact that $5,000,000 annually passes through their hands shows that the criminal element is not in control.

A Touching Demonstration.

Shortly after the surrender of the Southern army Gen. R. E. Lee was riding along one day through a rather dreary stretch of country in Virginia when he espied a plain old countryman, mounted on a sorry nag coming toward him. As they passed each other both bowed, as is the fashion when strangers meet in out-of-the-way places, but the old farmer in the home-spun suit stared hard at the soldierly figure as though not quite certain of recognition. He went his way a little further, then turning his horse around, cantered back and soon came up with the General again.

"I beg pardon, sir, but is not this Gen. Robert Lee?"

"Yes, I am Gen. Lee. Did I ever meet you before, my friend?"

Then the old Confederate grasped the chieftain's hand, and with the tears streaming down his face, said, "Gen. Lee, do you mind if I cheer you?" The General assured him that he didn't mind, and there, on that lonesome, pine-bordered highway, with no one else in sight, the old rebel veteran, with swinging hat, lifted up his voice in three ringing rounds of hurrahs for the man that the southland idolized. Then both went their way without another word being spoken. It was a display of affection which the General never forgot.

Common-Sense Entertaining.

There are two or three common-sense rules that would save a would-be entertainer a lot of heartache if she will only heed them. The sensible housekeeper never tries to make her dinners and teas more elaborate than her circumstances would consistently permit. It is always a source of annoyance to attempt to do things that are beyond the limitations of your cook or yourself. If your guest is one who is used to the ministrations of a French chef you will probably please her best by giving her some of the dainty home dishes for which you have a reputation beyond your home, and of which she has heard. Make things pleasant in your own simple fashion and you will be a success—that is, if you have displayed spotless linen napery, shining glassware, and burnished silver, and have had the good taste to invite only those who are congenial to each other.

Truth Spoken in Jest.

Baron Ferdinand Rothschild tells an amusing story about the late Lord Hertford. He lived in Paris during the last twenty years of his life, and as he usually went to bed very late, his valet was under the strictest orders not to disturb him in the morning.

"You may call me at eight if there is a revolution," was the command, "not otherwise."

By this his lordship probably meant that he was not to be aroused at all. On the morning of the 24th of February, 1848, however, he was called at eight.

"What's wrong?" he grumbled; "is there a revolution?"

"Yes, my lord, there is," the valet replied.

This was the fact. It was then that Louis Philippe, the Citizen King, fled from Paris and found refuge in England, where he died.

THE name "Indian" was given to the inhabitants of America by Columbus, from his belief that the country which he had discovered was an extension of India, the country known to occupy the extreme of the Eastern hemisphere.

VENICE BUILT IN A SWAMP.

The City of Gondolas Founded as a Refuge From Savage Northern Invaders.

The City of Venice is approached from behind by a railroad constructed over a stretch of swamp which is not very unlike the near approach to several New Jersey coast towns. There is a trifle more water and not so much grass, but, according to a writer in the Philadelphia Telegraph, the ride into the city is anything but a subject for a chapter of fine romance. Out beyond this swamp was another swamp which was a little higher. It had been out of the water longer and had caught enough of seaweed, sand, shells, and sediment to be fit for birds to nest on. There was one island called the Rialto, which was really quite secure, and around this one there was said to be about seventy-five or eighty other islands which to-day are occupied by the City of Venice. Some of these were originally not islands at all. They were mere high places in a great bog, which, by the cutting of channels and by artificial means, were converted into more or less fit places for the erection of building. Without consulting history, one could almost guess that such an unfavorable spot as this was not selected as the site for a city out of free choice; and, indeed, it was not. Venice was started during the fifth and sixth centuries. The inhabitants of Pandua and a few more north Roman cities, chased out by the Huns, the Goths, and other tribes of barbarians, took refuge there in an Adriatic lagoon. The savages of Asia had no boats, so that the settlement was very safe, and, leading an independent life, prospered by itself during the middle ages at a surprising rate. It was a monstrous work to make the city, secure from the sea. Ship loads of stone were brought from other coasts. Dams and canals were built at great cost and the residents finally got enough of dry land about them to feel moderately safe. It was still, however, a difficult thing to find foundations for the houses, especially as many of the rich men desired to put up heavy marble palaces.

A KENTUCKY MIRACLE

Judge John M. Rice Tells How He Was Cured of Rheumatism.

Crippled for Six Years with Sciatica in Its Worst Form. He Expected to Die, but Was Saved in a Marvelous Manner.

(From the Covington, Ky., Post.)

The Hon. John M. Rice, Louisa, Lawrence County, Kentucky, has for the past two years retired from active life as Criminal and Circuit Judge of the Sixteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.

He has for many years served his native county and State in the Legislature at Frankfort and at Washington, and, until his retirement was a noted figure in political and judicial circles. The Judge is well known throughout the State and possesses the best qualities which go to make a Kentucky gentleman honored wherever he is known.

About six years ago the bodily troubles which finally caused his retirement at a time when his mental faculties were in the zenith of their strength, began their encroachment upon his naturally strong constitution. A few days ago a Kentucky Post reporter called upon Judge Rice, who in the following words related the history of the causes that led to his retirement: "It is just about six years since I had an attack of rheumatism, slight at first, but soon developing into sciatic rheumatism, which began first with acute shooting pains in the hips, gradually extending downward to my feet.

"My condition became so bad that I eventually lost all power of my legs, and then the liver, kidneys and bladder, and, in fact, my whole system, became deranged. I tried the treatment of many physicians, but receiving no lasting benefit from them, I had recourse to patent remedies, trying one kind after another until I believed there were none I had not sampled.

"In 1888, attended by my son John, I went to Hot Springs, Ark. I was not much benefited by some months' stay there when I returned home. My liver was actually dead, and a dull persistent pain in its region kept me on the rack all the time. In 1890 I was re-appointed Circuit Judge, but it was impossible for me to give attention to my duties. In 1891, I went to the Silurian Springs, Waukesha, Wis. I stayed there some time, but without improvement.

Again I returned home, this time feeling no hopes of recovery. The muscles of my limbs were now reduced by atrophy to mere strings. Sciatic pains tortured me terribly, but it was the disordered condition of my liver that was, I felt, gradually wearing my life away. Doctors gave me up, all kinds of remedies had been tried without avail, and there was nothing more for me to do but resign myself to fate.

"I lingered on in this condition sustained almost entirely by stimulants until April, 1893. One day John saw an account of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in the Kentucky Post. This was something new, and as one more drug after so many others could not do so much harm, John prevailed upon me to try the Pink Pills. It was, I think, in the first week in May the pills arrived. I remember I was not expected to live for more than three or four days at the time. The effect of the pills, however, was marvelous and I could soon eat heartily, a thing I had not done for years. The liver began almost instantaneously to perform its functions, and has done so ever since. Without doubt the pills saved my life, and while I do not crave notoriety I cannot refuse to testify to their worth."

The reporter called upon Mr. Hughes, the Louisa druggist, who informed him that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been very popular since Judge Rice used them with such benefit. He mentioned several who have found relief in their use.

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People shows that they contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Wisdom Cries Aloud.

Advertising not only brings trade, it directs trade, it creates trade.

You have something to sell, there is somebody who needs it; connect that something with that somebody and there is a probability of a trade.

The newspaper can save clerk hire and the soiling and spoiling of goods in the showing of them by telling customers beforehand just what you have.

Forget that there are other merchants within a thousand miles of you, or a writer within 10,000, and write for the people alone whom you want as regular buyers at your store.

The object of an advertisement is to be read. Every other consideration should give way to this. An advertisement may be set up in faultless manner and yet may be so monotonous that it will not attract any more attention than one grain of rice among thousands of other grains about it.—Philadelphia Call.

Treatment of the Feet.

Hot water enlarges the feet by drawing the blood to them. When used the feet should be exercised before attempting to put on a tight boot. Mustard and hot water in a foot bath will cure a nervous headache and induce sleep. Bunions and corns and callousness are nature's protection against bad shoe leather. Two hot baths a week and a little pedicuring will remove the cause of much discomfort. A warm bath with an ounce of sea salt is almost as restful as a nap. Paddle in the water until it cools, dry with a rough towel, put on fresh stockings, make a change of shoes, and the person who was "ready to drop" will then be ready to stand up. Another tonic for the sole is alcohol. It dries the feet nicely after being out in the wet. Spirit baths are used by professional dancers, acrobats, and pedestrians to keep the feet in condition.

A Nice Distinction.

The Railway Age says: "The miles of main line" in a State fall very far short of the "miles of track." Thus in Illinois the main lines aggregate 10,315 miles, while there are 1,300 miles of second, third, fourth, and additional tracks, and 3,436 miles of yard tracks and sidings, making a grand total of 15,051 miles of railway track in the State. This is an increase of 373 miles in the last fiscal year, though only 76 miles of main line were added. In the United States at the beginning of 1893 there were 171,805 "miles of railway" and 49,824 miles of second track, sidings, etc., in addition, or 221,629 miles in all. The increase of sidings and second tracks in the last year has been very great, and will continue; which suggests the fact that the demand for railway supplies of all kinds is steadily growing, even in times when the construction of new lines is light.

What He Thought.

The distinguished Detroiter had been in Chicago on a visit of several weeks, and when he returned a reporter who thought he might get a good item, called to interview him.

"How long were you in Chicago?" he asked, after a few preliminaries.

"Five weeks."

"Big town, isn't it?"

"Slightly large."

"You had a pretty fair opportunity of testing the climate, didn't you?"

"Excellent."

"Well, what do you think of it?"

"Your's is a family journal, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir," replied the reporter, wondering what the mischief that had to do with it."

"Well, sir, what I think of it is utterly unfit for publication in such a medium, and you must excuse me," and the rest of the interview didn't amount to much.—Detroit Free Press.

Worn Out in Harness.

In the harness of every-day business work men and women wear out prematurely. For some of us it is not easy, for others, again, it is impossible to get out of harness. It is the inflexible yoke, the strongly forged, unbreakable shackle of imperative servitude needful to ourselves and those most dear to us. The weight of it often bows many of us into the grave before our time, but it is undoubtedly true that there is a means of rendering the burthen less onerous, and of mitigating the ailments that unremitting toil—especially of a sedentary kind—has a tendency to produce. Overworked clerks in counting-houses, mill operatives, bookkeepers, type-writers, and others testify to the reviving, restorative effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and its power of renewing physical and mental energy when overtasked and on the wane. Dyspepsia, failing vigor, rheumatic, bowel and kidney complaints yield to this beneficent medicine, which is a preventive of malaria and counteracts the effects of exposure in inclement weather.

Yield to the Enevitable.

Farmers in Maryland and Delaware slowly and unwillingly relinquish the idea of growing wheat and corn in competion with the West and half sorrowfully admit that their lands must in time come to form a market garden for the great cities of the Atlantic seaboard. There is an old-fashioned notion in Delaware and upon the eastern shore that it is more respectable to grow wheat in sixty-acre fields than half a dozen vegetables in small plots and the minute peasant farming of France, Belgium, and Holland has no attractions for the occupants of 300-acre farms.

Chinese Hermits.

Oldest Living Actress.

The distinction of being the oldest living actress in the United States is said to belong to Mrs. Rachel Cantor, whose home is in Philadelphia, but who is at present in Boston. She is years of age, and until a dozen years ago was on the stage. Mrs. Cantor is an English woman. She made her American debut as a member of the elder Wallack's company, and she subsequently supported Booth, Forrest and all the leading actors in legitimate drama in her time. Her last appearance on the stage was made in Boston in the early '80's.

A Business Way.

Our county has frequently felt compelled to support some worthy poor people, who had at the same time, relatives who were able to furnish the means. We have also seen public aid given to worthy poor, who had lazy members in the family, who could have supported themselves, but who preferred to hang around the old folks and help eat up the allowance made by the public. They have a more business like way out in Nebraska. Last week in looking over the work of the county commissioners of Boone county, in that state, we find this item:

"Complaint having been made to the board that parties were applying for county aid who had relations able to support them, the county attorney was instructed to notify the relatives of such parties that they must care for and furnish subsistence for them."

If this sensible plan could be carried out here, it would save the county a good deal of expense.

When the Heart is Affected

By Rheumatism or any of the muscles near that organ, it is like tampering with an electric wire, for death may come at any moment. If life is worth it, do not hesitate, but get Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. Send $5 to the Drummond Medicine Co, 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send you two large bottles, enough for one month's treatment, by first express. It is not as quick as electricity, but it will save your life if you take it in time. Agents Wanted. 24-26

Greatest on Earth.

James M. Brooks, Washington Ave., St. Louis, Mo., makes affidavit that he suffered from Rheumatism for years, until persuaded to try Drummond's Lightning Remedy, and that by its use he has been fully restored. He says the remedy is the greatest on earth. This is high praise, but fully warranted by other miraculous cures. If you want to be cured, send $5 to the Drummon Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send to your express address two large bottles of their remedy. This treatment lasts one month, and will cure any ordinary case. Agents Wanted. 26

It is Rank Nonsense

To suppose that rheumatism, gout nenralgia, and kindred diseases can be cured in a few day's time. These poisons can only be eradicated by reaching them through the blood. Infallible Scotch Cure, just introduced in America, reaches and cures the disease by driving the poison from the blood. It never fails. Try it. Accept no substitute. POPULIST COUNTY CONVENTION

A Slim Turnout, but very Warm and Windy.

The populists of the county met in convention to nominate county officers last Saturday, June 23, 1894. W. F. C. Francis was made permanent chairman, and showed his good judgement by refraining from making a windy speech, the kind for which populists have such a pronounced weakness. Then a committee on rules was appointed: J. Y. W. McClellan, C. H. Bliss and Miles Baxter. There was also a committee on resolutions, of one from each township. This gave Bliss, who was on both committes, a chance to air his eloquence, etc., and he called the committees to follow him to the office of the Times. The members who were present went, but it was all a cut and dried affair from the start, for the machine, though new, had all the modern improvements, and it only took a man or two to turn the crank. In the meantime the delegates who were present kept on, imagining they were running the machine themselves, and were happy. If the machine worked to suit them we have no objection to it. While waiting, Hon. Freeman Kelley, who has many times been honored by the democrats of this county, was called on to make a speech. Of course it was a speech against these same democrats, and was not only an excited speech, but at times rather profane. After he had "hollered" himself red in the face, in abuse of the "two old parties" and Grover Cleveland, he turned fiercely on the reporters of the various newspapers who sat at a table taking notes. What these reporters had done has not yet appeared, but he seemed to think he had at last discovered the common enemy of populism and all other isms, and he proceeded to do them up in great shape, to the evident delight of the crowd, as well as the amusement of the astonished reporters themselves. He whetted his tusks and returned to the charge on the reporters' table three times.

HE ADDRESSES THE REPORTERS.

After exhausting the vials of his wrath on the reporters, he made excuses to the crowd, and sat down. Call Husselman was called out next, and in a brief speech managed also to get a whack at the common enemy, the newspaper reporters. Later on Windy Bliss was called up, and though an alleged newspaper man himself, he too turned his back on the audience and sailed into the reporters. Just what all three of these men did this for is a puzzle. The only sane reason they hinted at, was the fear that the reporters were going to misrepresent them. Why they should object to having a report different from their speeches, we don't see. It could be no worse, and the reporters were all liable to make many improvements on their harangues. Instead of reporting their so called speeches, the COURIER will in a spirit of friendliness, draw the mantle of silence over them.

Bliss himself, during Kelley's and Husselman's talks, was not at the reporters' table. He being on two committees was up in his office, busily engaged in oiling up the machine.

AFTERNOON.

Bliss, as chief machinest on rules, read the report he had prepared. It was in substance, the same as used in the democratic convention, and adopted later by the republicans. In fact the democrats seem to do all the originating for all parties. The only change we remember was that when the result of a ballot was announced, they gave totals only so that no one would know how a given township voted. This was a gag rule that neither of the "corrupt old parties" would have endured from three or four bosses. Yet the new and pure party took it down at one gulp, and the machine had them fast in the cogs. The committee on resolutions also reported quite a number of planks, one of which was that all printing should be done at home. The Plow and Hammer" device was chosen for their ticket, and the name "People's Ticket" as the name to go on their ballots.

NOMINATIONS.

C. H Bliss, H. C. Shull and Isaac Gunsenhouser were named for representative. The ballot showed

TREASURER.

Albert Hogue, G. W. Hanes, John Shugers and John Hamman were named. All declined except Hogue, who on motion of Free Kelley, was put on by acclamation. He was called on to make a speech, and said he would "go over the county and wake the people up." Some one called out to know if he was a democrat, and he shouted, "No sir. I would be ashamed to be a democrat." (Later on we suppose he will go to the democratic voters with this insult fresh in their minds, and ask them to vote for him.)

SHERIFF.

A. J. Price, of Troy, was named for this by acclamation.

RECORDER.

As usual there was a big field for this office. Many were named, but all declined but four. The vote stood;

CORONER

A. J. Shutt	175½
E. D. Raub	60½

Someone insisted on nominating an assessor. He may have noticed that neither of "the corrupt and dishonest old parties" had nominated an assessor, and this would be a good time to get one man elected. The chair, however, informed him that the assessor held on to his four year office till 1896.

Here the mantle of the speech making business fell on Bliss, and right gladly he took it up. After going for the corrupt old parties in the true populist style, he illustrated it by saying they were "like a rotten aig, we have been setting on." Cleveland had written to ask "who is the trusts' best friend?" and finding it was Olney, made him attorney-general, and now Olney gets $5,000 salary from the government and $50,000 from the trusts. After this very silly lie, he too was in the proper frame of mind to make an attack on the poor reporters. Shoemaker was called up. He showed the most business sense of any of them. He said he did not expect to be elected, but if it did happen, he would use all economy possible. But he assured them he would not let the county suffer for want of needed improvements, even if it did cost money. He was willing to pay taxes for public uses, if he could be assured the money would be properly used.

MONEY—THE ROOT OF EVIL.

Early in the proceedings the idea of using money for campaign expenses was ridiculed. They stood pledged not to insult their candidates, even by a mention of "$3 to use in the campaign." But now uprose Editor Bliss and told the convention "We must have money to send to the state committee. We must have filthy lucre to pay our campaign expenses." So a collection amounting to several dollars was taken up. Bliss had also talked privately with the leaders, that "we must meet and form an Industrial Union in Auburn," but finally concluded not to make a public matter of this, and a meeting will be held some time this week.

And the meeting was over.

Convention Notes.

Considerable amusement resulted from ex-Clerk D. Y. Husselman having cut off all his beard but a mustache, making him look like his brother Cal. Several populists came to him, drew him aside where the corrupt old parties could not hear, and asked him to "come out and make us a speech." "Are you sure you want me?" Dan would ask. "Of course we want you," would be the answer. "Well," returned Dan, "I might accommodate you, but I can tell you one thing, there would be a mighty sight of real old hickory mixed up with any speech I should make." Then the two would go off by separate paths.

John Ammon, the joyful and enthusiastic, caught E. R. Shoemaker, and in a hoarse stage whisper said, "We've got 'em foul, old man."

Bliss was particularly anxious to make appointments to speak. We presume if his wishes are granted he will add some litte to the ignorance of several localities. He will also be able to dispose of those little glass, or "momentoes," as he calls them in his advertisements. A man with a few of these little glass baubles sewed onto his coat ought to be proof against the financial errors of the "two old parties."

For a new party, they have got the cutest little machine ever seen in politics. It will crack a "gold bug" nine times in ten, and throw the carcases over the fence. It will also knock out a populist candidate with neatness and dispatch.

Several people have asked the COURIER to put a note in our "lost" column, asking for information as to the late "American Compact." Why, to be sure! The winter is over, and the "state officers" have left their cosy quarters, where they had passed the cold season in luxury, on the money collected and sent to them by the county lodges. There is now a new order ready to take its place and call for new fees to pay the "organizer" and send to state lodge. And the farmer, "he pays the freight." Bliss and other "organizers" make quite a fee, we suppose, by "organizing" the clubs. Each "Legion" has a colonel, adjutant and other military officers, same as Cozey's army. It all seems too silly to mention, yet is being worked. It will live about six months, or less, and then die out. But in the mean time there will be dollars for the "organizer," dollars to send to the "grand lodge," dollars for time wasted, dollars for wear and tear of the mind, dollars for the loss caused by neglecting work or business to run off after such nonsense, weeds in the garden, weeds in the field, fences down, and half tilled crops. But if folks like to spend their time and money in such a way, we have no objection. We merely give these words of warning, and they must do the rest.

If they have no "machine bosses" who was it that telephoned to Waterloo, asking Edward Braun to run on the populist ticket for treasurer? This item may be of interest to Mr. Hogue, who was reluctantly put on after the bosses found that Braun would not run. Brown is a democrat.

In a friendly way, we wish to call attention to the very bad spirit in which the people's party is moving. They seem to think they are the only honest people in the county, and that all others are thieves, and incompetents. Now we wish to say that we know nearly all of them, and we are unable to see in what way any one of them is more honest or more competent than his "old party" neighbor on the adjoining farm. We feel sure that if a populist were elected to office he would be at least as easily overreached by sharpers, or would be exactly as liable to take all that belonged to him, as any one else.

How ridiculous it is to hear men who at middle life have not saved up $50, criticize the leading statesmen of the country. The man who cannot get ten meals ahead, fancies he is just the one to manage the greatest nation on earth, doing a business of a thousand millions a year.

The convention passed a resolution in favor of having the printing done at home offices. Democrats are ahead of them on this, however, as they are voluntarily making a pledge to do this. We expect to have every candidate on the list shortly, as we have several already.

Henry Shull showed the best judgment of any. He was offered about all the offices they had, but refused. He has enough to do supplying the city with excellent milk. "A man who hath a calling hath an office of profit and honor" says Poor Richard.

A NARROW ESCAPE!

How it Happened.

The following remarkable event in a lady' life will interest the reader: "For a long time had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I couldn't sweep a room without sitting down and resting; but, thank God, by the help of New Heart Cure all this is past and I feel like another woman. Before using the New Heart Cure I had taken different so-called remedies and been treated by doctors without any benefit until I was both discouraged and disgusted. My husband bought me a bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and am happy to say I never regretted it, as I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. I weighed 125 pounds when I began taking the remedy, and now I weigh 150. Its effect in my case has been truly marvelous. It far surpasses any other medicine I have ever taken or any benefit I ever received from physicians."—Mrs. Harry Starr, Pottsville, Pa., October 12, 1892.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. This great discovery by an eminent specialist in heart disease, contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

"Over the Hills to the Poorhouse."

The Steuben Republican, of recent date says: Will Carleton was recently asked if his poem, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse," was founded on a real incident, to which Mr. Carleton replied: "Well, yes, partly. Near the town of Hillsdale, Mich., was the county poorhouse. Between the town proper and this place there was a small hill. I often went to see and talk with an old couple, husband and wife, who had been sent there by their children. They never chided their offspring for having sent them to the poorhouse, but it was not difficult to discover that they had not come of their own free will. This case suggested the poem to me, I suppose, although, of course, its story is different from the incident." "Will Carleton Matinees" are said to be the rage in New York and Brooklyn social circles just now. His "Betsy and I are out," and "Over the Hills to the Poor House" are the most popular of his poems for these occasions.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly For July, 1894.

"The Environs of Boston" is the attractive subject of an elaborate and picturesque paper by the Rev. Peter MacQueen, illustrated with over a score of views, in the July number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. Among the seasonable outdoor articles are Lee J Vance's "Salmon Fishing in Canada," Edwin Emerson's "Roughriders from Far Frontiers," and an account of Mr Alfred deCordova's trained Carrier Pigeons. The graphic war reminiscences of of Joseph Becker, "Special for Leslie's," are continued, this month's contribution being devoted to Ben Butler's famous Dutch Gap Canal, on the James River. Edward Porritt writes interestingly of "Rural Life in England," Mary Titcomb tells "Something about Siam," and Christian M. Waage pleasantly recalls, with some illustrative sketches, "An Afternoon with Joaquin Miller." Among the short stories is a characteristic one by Beatrice Harraden, author of "Ships that Pass in the Night." The poems of the number are by Joaquin Miller, Martha McCulloch William and Henry Tyrrell.

BLOOD OF CHRIST.

SAVING ELEMENT FOR THE WORLD.

The following is a synopsis of Rev. Dr. Johnson's sermon at the First Presbyterian church at South Bend Sunday morning June 24:

And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.—Acts 4:14.

In a few days we shall celebrate the anniversary of our national independence. Our flags will wave, our poets will sing and our orators will tell the rising generation the cost of liberty. Our free institutions did not spring up spontaneously. They were born of self sacrifice. That our free flag might wave our fathers slept under the open sky; they marched barefoot over ice and snow; they lay in prison pens, and shed their blood upon the battlefields of the revolution. It is a thrilling story and should be told afresh each year. We may condense the history into a sentence by saying that the cost of our free institutions was the price of blood. But what is true of our liberty is equally true of our christianity.

The words of the text are an open window, showing us what it cost to start our christianity on its way. It has come through prison and over cross and through fire and storm to enrich us by its presence. It has elevated our homes, enriched our art, purified our literature and inspired our liberties.

Looking through the open window, we see St. Peter pleading for christian liberty in the presence of cruel enemies. He was commanded to give answer at the bar of judgment touching the healing of the impotent man standing by his side. He gladly declared that the man was healed by the power of Jesus of Nazareth. He was the fountain whence had flowed the healing stream. Jesus, the Son of God, is the object of faith. We trust the incarnate Lord and are saved. We can find the Father only through the merit of the Son. When men are embarrassed as to the object of faith they should be pointed to the Son of God. He was the secret of the mystery of the healing of the impotent man of the story. One fact is worth a thousand arguments. They could not part company with the testimony of their eyes. There stood the man in the presence of them all and they could say nothing against it. He was an impressive illustration of the fact that Christ was as really the man of to-day as He was the man of yesterday. But turning to his enemies the apostle displayed the spirit of a hero. It was moral courage at its climax. He tells them that they had crucified the living Christ. They were the instruments of the greatest tragedy of the centuries. But the plain words met with response. Five thousand men were renewed through faith in the risen Lord; it was a big day's work and has echoed down the centuries.

We must never forget that multitudes of the Hebrew nation in the first century trusted in Christ as the Messiah and Savior. The greatest name in Hebrew history was St. Paul and he died as a martyr for his faith in Christ as the Messiah. But a shadow rested upon that part of the nation that rejected the Messiah of prophecy, the Christ of history. It is a strange history of a strange people; they are with us to-day, for they dwell upon the shore of every sea. The Greek the intellectual king of the ancient day is no more; he wrote his poem, he chiseled his statue, he made the canvas glow with beauty, and reared his beautiful temple and then left our world. Hence the Greek and the Roman that enriched the world in art and literature and law and government have no living representatives in our brilliant century; but the Hebrew stream is flowing still through the centuries. They are to have a future. They shall look on Him whom they pierced. Some day millions of them will turn to Him who hung on the cross tree.

But although He died on the cross, yet Peter tells them that God raised Him from the dead. Man nailed Him to the cross, but God lifted Him to a throne. We know that spring is near by the melting of snow and ice; and so we know that Christ is risen by the living streams that are flowing around us. The impotent man that was healed was a living argument for a risen Savior. He was a prophecy. For Christ's work on the body was a revelation of what He could do for the soul. We need not turn back the pages of history 18 centuries to see what he can do. His work is around us; He is renewing men to-day; He is raising men from the grave of sin; He is converting bad men into good men during every day of the year; He turns men from the love of sin to a life of holiness. From a self centered life men are being lifted to a Christ centered life. You can see the marvelous work of the risen Lord all along the centuries. Call the roll and what multitudes answer to their names.

The great Augustine, scholar and orator as he was, once lived a self-indulgent life, the burial to the flesh. But one day in his garden at Milan, he heard a voice saying: "Take and read." It may have been the voices of happy children playing on the green grass of the brilliant city. But to him it was the word of God and he opened his New Testament and read: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provisions for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." From that hour he traveled a new path and sang a new song. But what is true of him it equally true of millions.

But those who trust Christ are not only raised to a new life but are also stimulated to a life of self denial and sacrifice. A Florence Nightingale dresses the wounds of a dying soldier. a John Howard pours a flood of light into the darkness of Europe and Livingston carries the gospel to darkest Africa in the name of his Master and risen Lord. Hence the fact that Christ is incarnate in the lives of His people tells us that He is on the throne. He is working to-day as never before, through the pencil of painter and chisel of sculptor and pen of the poet and tongue of orator and brain of statesman. His flag is the flag of victory and His chariot is moving in triumph over the earth. This is the best day in the world's hirtory and that because Christ is with us. What has not our christianity done for man? Mark her work in the islands of the sea, in conservative China and darkest Africa and populous India.

Ours is the only religion that gives us a christian home. A brilliant infidel writes back from India that the religions of the east do not change the morals and transform the lives of the people. He concedes that Christianity is the only religion that enables man to realize a lofty ideal in character. The fact is Brahmanism in India destroys the brotherhood of man by its system of caste. Men of different caste cannot associate together. Then Buddhism robs the future of its immortal life by teaching its disciples that death is an endless sleep. Buddha was a choice spirit but because of his burden and life's shadow he longed for extinction. Some modern Buddhists entertain the theory of the transmigration of souls. But it has little hope for man in comparison with the revelation of our New Testament touching the immortal life beyond the stars. It was our Lord who said: "In my father's house are many mansions."

But see what our christianity has done for the men of Europe. In old Athens in her most brilliant day there were nearly four slaves to one freeman. The proportion was 27 freemen in every 100 slaves. It is a sad story that the old Athens of Plato has to tell. But in Rome there were 900,000 slaves in a population of 1,600,000. Of course labor was degraded, but into that dark old continent christianity came with her warm words, "There is neither bond nor free." The spirit of our New Testament has driven slavery from the civilized world and clothed labor with dignity. But what has not christianity done for our liberties? Our New testament has fought the battles of liberty both in the state and in the church.

Infidelity has done little for liberty. Hobbes, the father of modern materialism, was the advocate of kings against the people. But what was true of Hobbes was equally true of Gibbon and David Hume. Hume was the finest skeptic that Europe has produced and yet his two enemies were liberty and religion. He wrote for kings. It was Holland who bought and wore the battle of political and religious liberty. She opened her gates to the oppressed of lands. She was the United States of the old world. She sheltered our pilgrim fathers from the storms of persecution. And from her shores they sailed to this new continent by the way of old England. Hence large is the debt that we owe christian Holland for the soil and air and light that she gave to civil and religious liberty.

We lay our tribute to-day at the feet of Him who said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

A Quarter Century Test.

For a quarter of a century Dr. King's New Discovery has been tested, and the millions who have received benefit from its use, testify to its wonderful curative powers in all diseases of the throat, chest and lungs. A remedy that has stood the test so long and that has given so universal satisfaction, is no experiment. Each bottle is positively guaranteed to give relief or the money will be refunded. It is admitted to be the most reliable for coughs and colds. Trail bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Large size 50 cents and $1. 6

Pain's Great "Pompeii," Fort Wayne, Ind.

Cheap rates and special trains to Fort Wayne for the big fireworks production "Last Days of Pompeii" to be produced at the Lakeside Park, June 30, July 4, 7, 10, 12, 14, 17, 19, 21, 24. Thousands of persons will visit Fort Wayne to see this greatest of modern time exhibitions, typical of the most stupendous tragedy in the world's history.

The cost of these colossal exhibitions averages nearly $2,000 nightly. Over 10,000 square yards of beautiful scenery are used to picture the city of Pompeii. A large lake of real water is provided, upon which floats numerous gondolas, the stage for the 250 performers is 300 feet long and 75 feet wide. Back of these towers grim Vesuvius, quietly sleeping during the grand pageant and acrobatic sports, but at the climax, the terrific earthquake arouses him from lethargy, and with an angry roar, he vomits forth floods of fire and lava, which, sweeping down the mountain side, destroys palaces, temples and buildings.

An enormous display of fireworks, worth $1,000 will be given nightly. Each display will include hundreds of novelties, such as fiery fish, diving and leaping about in the water, with coats of fire unaffected by submersion; a laughable fireworks monkey acrobat; Jumbo, a monster elephant; Niagara Falls, a cascade of falling fire several hundred feet long; the Yellowstone Geysers, magical fountains of molten gold belching from the lake; portrait, 25x30 feet in size, of Indiana's governor; nests of fiery hissing snakes; numerous shells weighing 20 and 30 pounds fired to an enormous altitude, there releasing myriads of fire jewels, diamonds, emeralds, sapphires and rubies.

THE PULLMAN BOYCOTT.

Latest News Concerning the Situation at Chicago.

A special from Chicago, dated Sunday, says: The situation in Chicago is seriously worse. The Rock Island road, which had been free from disturbance up to this morning, is now tied up in all the adjacent territory. The stock yards, so far as its receiving and distributing interests are concerned, are practically at a standstill, stopping the movement of dressed meats outward and live stock inward. The Pittsburg and Fort Wayne road is severely crippled in its terminals, and the Illinois Central suburban service, which carries more people to and from business in Chicago than any other line, is completely tied. The Chicago and Eastern Illinois is badly blockaded, and the other roads which use the Chicago and Western Indiana Railway as a terminal are suffering because of the strike on that line. These roads are the Erie, the Chicago and Grand Trunk, the Santa Fe and the Wabash. The Michigan Central and Michigan Southern are suffering some delays because they use the Illinois Central and Rock Island tracks for entering the city. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul is having great difficulty in moving its trains, and, like the Wisconsin Central, is under the ban of the A. R. U. The Chicago and Northwestern reports that it is receiving and dispatching its trains with usual regularity.

A like condition is reported very generally throughout the West. No lifting of the boycott is mentioned anywhere, while numerous additions to its effectiveness are chronicled.

Child Killed by a Rattler.

Mrs. Henry Wulford, living near Winchester, Ohio, was sitting in the front yard engaged in sewing, while her 3-year-old child was playing in the tall grass near by. While looking at some persons passing by she heard the child laugh loudly and say, "Mamma, look!" Mrs. Wulford at once looked in the direction of the child and saw a large rattlesnake, with its head raised and looking at the child. The mother screamed, and at the same time the little one was struck on the neck by the reptile's fangs. The child lingered in terrible agony for a few hours, when it died.

Hanged Her Babes.

At Richford, Vt., Mrs. Merrill Baker, the mother of four children, whose ages ranged from one to eight years, as the result of a quarrel with her husband hanged the little ones to the bedposts in her chamber, one to each, and then fled to the woods. Two canary birds were also found hanging by their necks dead in the room. This is taken as an indication that the mother had become insane.

He Got Heavy Damages.

Prof. Alphonsus P. Cloutier on Christmas Day went into the basement underneath the rectory at St. John's (Catholic) Cathedral, Indianapolis, carrying a lighted taper, and there was a frightful explosion of natural gas. His eyesight was permanently destroyed. The other day a jury awarded him $15,000 damages against the Consumers' Natural Gas Company of that city.

Bounties on Sugar.

A statement prepared by the Internal Revenue Bureau shows that during the fiscal year ending Monday, bounties were paid on sugar as follows: Cane, $11,216,304; beet, $858,733; sorghum, $16,926; maple, $116,112. Total, $12,108,035.

Held Up the Train.

A Lake Shore freight train was held near New Carlisle, Ohio. The robbers were masked and revolvers were freely discharged, and during the excitement the three passengers in the caboose were compelled to surrender their valuables.

Fatally Injured.

Henry Payne, a bank boss in the Brazil Block Coal Company's mine, at Coxville, Ind., was fatally injured by being caught beneath the fans at the bottom of the cage.

Whirled to His Death.

Jeff Frizzle was caught by the hand at Bumpus' saw mill, Stewart County, Tennessee, and dragged into the belt and whirled around and dashed to death against the wall.

Accused of a Shortage.

Benjamin S. Perkins, agent for the American Express Company, at Linden, Ind., is under arrest, charged with embezzlement.

Horribly Mutilated.

Kanawha and Michigan passenger train No. 16 ran over an Italian near Leon, Ohio. His identity is unknown.

Drown in the Whirlpool.

John O'Day met death by drowning at Nelson's dam, near Columbus, Ohio.

Mills Shut Down.

At Anderson, Ind., the North Anderson Victor and Union Window Glass Factories, the Butler Flint Glass Works and the American Wire Nail Company have shut down for the summer season, throwing 2,000 men out of employment.

A Church Struck.

The lightning struck the First Presbyterian Church at West Union, Ohio, doing much damage.

There Was a Plot.

Paris special: The police visited the lodgings of a man named Granier in Montpelier with a view of ascertaining his connection, if any, with the murder of President Carnot. It is alleged that about 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon Granier was heard to say: "By this time Carnot must have received his account." When the police arrived at Granier's lodgings they ordered him to surrender. With a quick movement Granier, without uttering a word, seized a large knife, which was lying upon a table, and plunged it into his abdomen, falling dead at the feet of the police. The police are now certain that the murder of President Carnot was the result of a conspiracy between Santo, Laborie, Granier, and others to avenge the executions of Vaillant and Henri.

MORE AND MORE.

The Coal Strikes Ended But Another One on to Impede Business.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of trade say: The great strike of coal miners has ended at the most points, but another strike threatens to interrupt business more seriously for a time, though the number of hands engaged is comparatively small. Travel and traffic are well nigh arrested on about twenty western roads already, and strikes are threatened on all roads which use Pullman cars. On the whole, other changes during the week have been for the better. Many manufacturing establishments which were stopped by want of fuel have resumed. The depletion of the treasury reserve has been checked by the voluntary deposits of gold by New York banks. Exports of gold have almost ceased. Congress had made much progress toward the final disposition of the tariff question. Crop prospects grow better as the harvest draws near. The resumption of work in mines and mills has made good progress, but the demand for products is yet smaller and less urgent than was expected. Buyers apparently wait for lower prices of iron and steel products which manufacturers are slow to give in view of the increased cost of materials and production. Corn has declined 5 cents, the receipts being larger than of wheat and a heavy crop is expected. Pork products are also a shade lower. Cotton has yielded a sixteenth, as speculat on against the enormous stocks in sight grows tiresome. This week the failures have been 214 in the United States against 307 last year, and thirty-five in Canada against twenty-seven last year. Of late the number and importance of failures have increased a little as is usual at close of the half year.

NEW RULER OF FRANCE.

M. Casimir-Perier Elected President of the French Republic.

Versailles special: Casimir-Perier was elected President of the French Republic, in succession to M. Carnot, the victim of anarchistic hate.

The election was by the Senate and Chambers of Deputies sitting as the national assembly in the great hall of the palace of Versailles, that has been the scene of so many historic events, one of the most recent of which the proclamation, January 18, 1872, of the victorious King Willia, of Prussia, as emperor of Germany.

The hall was filled with spectators an hour before the session began, and among the assemblage were many members of the diplomatic corps. M. Callamet Lacour presided by virtue of his position as President of the Senate. At 1:10 p. m. he called the assembly to order and after a sympathetic reference to the late President Carnot, and the article of the constitution in reference to the election of President he then declared the National Assembly open.

No time was lost in proceeding to a ballot. The voting was more close than had been anticipated. The assembly consists of about 884 members, of whom the senators number 300. The first ballot gave M. Casimir-Perier 451 votes, a clear majority of only about 17.

IN A BAD WAY.

Pitiable Condition of the Coxeyites Near Washington.

Washington special: Pressure of an unforseen and undesired sort is being brought to bear upon members of Congress by the various industrial armies encamped about Washington. The novelty of the presence of these unique organizations has departed and consequently the donations of provisions have fallen off until the men are in a pitiable condition from want of food. Every day the lobbies are besieged by deserters from Generals and Admirals Coxey, Fitzgerald, Galvin, and Frye, who are wearied of husks and anxious to return home. Naturally they came to the Congressmen from their States for assistance. In some cases members have yielded to their charitable impulses and furnished funds for the purpose, thereby establishing a precedent which encourages other needy Coxeyites to apply. Ohio members are the greatest sufferers in this way, and the demands upon them are more than they can meet.

McVeagh for Senator.

Franklin McVeagh of Chicago, a stalwart Republican up to ten years ago and has since been known better as an independent than as a party adherent, will be the United States Senator from Illinois should the Legislature to be elected in November have a Democratic majority. This was the decision of the Democratic State Convention. The supporters of Gen. Black made a gallant fight and had not the first ballot settled the matter, they might have gathered in the scattering vote and won out on the second. As it was, they took their defeat with such poor grace that at least 300 of them voted against the usual compliment of making the nomination unanimous. The ticket nominated is as follows:

Bernard J. Claggett of Lexington for State Treasurer.

For Trustees of the State University—Mrs. Julia Holmes Smith of Chicago; T. C. Glendenning of Alexander, and Alvin L. Pleasants of Woodford County.

To Foot the Coxeyite Bills.

The Attorney-General has sent to the Senate through the Secretary of the Treasury, a request for a deficiency appropriation of $125,000 in lieu of $50,000 asked for some time ago. This amount, it is estimated, will be required to meet the expense incurred by the United States marshals and other officers of the department of justice in the arrest and punishment of Coxeyites in the West charged with stealing trains over which the Government has jurisdiction. The Attorney General's letter, which contains his request, shows that these Coxey demonstrations occurred in fourteen States and two territories.

Threats of Arson.

Colorado Springs (Col.) special: Rumors of all sorts of contemplated outrages are in the air here and the mails are burdened with thrilling letters. The other night W. H. Brooks, who has mines at Cripple Creek and was the first mine owner to require nine hours for a day's work, received warning that a band of miners intended to take him out and serve him as General Tarsney had been served. Sheriff Bowers received the following letter: "Unless the cowardly rascals who attacked General Tarsney are arrested by Monday, your city will be burned up."

Medals of Honor.

By direction of the President, medals of honor have been awarded to the following persons, members of the volunteers storming party that made the assault on the enemy's works in the action at Vicksburg, Miss., May 22, 1863: James Henry, sergeant of Company B, 113th Illinois Infantry, now of Manwood, Ill.; Rueben Sarmley, private, Company F, 83rd Indiana infantry, now of Greensburg, Ind.; William Toomer, sergeant company G, 127th Illinois infantry, now of Chicago; Frank Halse, private company G, 82d Indiana artillery, now of Indianapolis, and Theo. Hyatt, first sergeant, company D, 127th Illinois infantry, now of Lockport, Ill.

Politicians Burned.

Chicago special: By the explosion of a case of fireworks on the rear platform of the special train bringing home from the State convention the marching club of the Cook County Democracy, eight of the members were burned. The accident occurred at Bloomington. The following persons were injured: Mayor Hopkins, John W. Hanehart, J. J. McCarthy, and Wm. C. Walsh. It will be a week or more before some of those who were burned will be able to use their hands.

Big Fire.

Fire broke out in Woodruff's store on Forman street, Brooklyn, N. Y. The firemen prevented the flames from communicating to adjoining stores and the Union Ferry Company's building. The south wall of the warehouse was seen to bulge out and a moment later fell. Three workmen of the Ferry company were caught beneath the falling wall, and two were killed. Loss $1,0 5,000 said to be fully covered by insurance.

Fast Racing.

Flying Jib, 2:04, was sent on an exhibition pace at Union Park, Council Bluff, Iowa, with McDowell in the sulky. Red Light set the pace and Jib passed the quarter in 32, the half in 1:04 and the three-quarters in 1:35, and went under the wire in 2:05¼. This is the fastest mile ever paced or trotted west of the Mississippi River and the fastest in the world at this time of the year.

Broke the Record.

John S. Johnson, of Syracuse, N. Y., rode the fastest mile on the Waltham, Mass., track ever ridden on a bicycle. Johnson was paced by two tandems. Johnson not only broke his previous record of 2:03 3-5, but he lowered Windle's record of 1:56 4-5, made in private last fall. Johnson made the mile in public in 1:56, with flying start, thus breaking the record by 4-5 of a second.

The Ship Canal.

New York special: Steamer British Prince is the first steamer to arrive at this port direct from Manchester through the ship canal. The British Prince is of 1,402 tons register, and experienced no difficulty whatever while passing through the canal to Liverpool. Navigation at first was somewhat difficult, but now that pilots have become experienced, there is no danger.

Stung to Death.

Miss May Holmes, aged 16 years, of Atwood, Ind., has been stung to death by a sixteen year locust. The insect alighted on the back of her neck. The wound immediately began to swell and the young lady suffered excruciating pain and very soon lost her power of locomotion. A physician was called but failed to relieve the patient, who soon died in great agony.

Woman Found Guilty of Murder.

A jury in Judge Balliett's court at Des Moines, Iowa, found Mrs. Betsy Smith guilty of murder in the first degree and fixed the punishment at imprisonment for life. Mrs. Smith killed her blind husband, Michael Smith, by giving him poison April 25. She desired to secure $3,000 insurance on his life.

War Between Japan and China.

A dispatch to the London Times from Shanghai, China, says that Japan, preferring foreign to civil war, refuses to evacuate Corea. Consequently China is increasing her naval and military forces for active operations. A dispatch from Shanghai says that war between China and Japan is imminent.

A Cyclone.

A cyclone passed through the Western part of Morgon County, Indiana, causing a loss of not less than $15,000 to Samuel Wheeler, James Carter, George and Ryan Ratts, Jerry Stirwalt, Newton Sandy, John Whittaker and John Shuler. Several head of stock were killed.

Must Not Interfere with Mails.

Acting Postmaster General Jones conferred with Attorney General Olney and it has been decided to rigidly insist upon the carriage of all mails and to prosecute all who interfere with postal transportation.

Severely Punished.

George A. Dazey, convicted of conspiring to injure the Commercial National Bank of Nashville, Tenn., was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $10,000.

Indictments for Bribery.

Ten indictments have been found by the grand jury in New Orleans against officials for bribery.

Drowned While Bathing.

Joseph Slater of Lima, O., was drowned while bathing in a gravel pit near Tipton, Ind.

MANY LINES TIED UP

Greatest Strike Ever Known in Railway Circles.

NO TRAINS MOVING.

Freight Traffic Suspended on Roads Affected.

The St. Paul Side-Tracks Its Nine Pullman Sleepers—Mobile and Ohio Will Not Antagonize Organization—Northern Pacific Receivers Look for Help from the United States—United States Marshals Dispatched to Aid the Santa Fe in Running Its Trains—Chicago Police Guard Switches—Strikers Are Jubilant.

The American Railway Union boycott of Pullman cars has resulted in the most widespread and complete tie-up of railway lines in the West in the history of railroad operations. Chicago is the great center of the strike. Operations on several lines centering there are completely paralyzed. On other systems trouble at the terminals has made it impossible to handle outgoing or incoming trains, and local traffic is suspended. On still other roads trains are arriving and departing from suburban terminal stations and all are more or less delayed by the strike of yard and switching employes. The roads more or less affected by the boycott, according to telegraphic advices, are the following:

Northern Pacific.
Chicago and Northwestern.
Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.
Illinois Central.
Santa Fe.
Denver and Rio Grande.
Rock Island.
Missouri Pacific.
Union Pacific.
Denver and Gulf.
Wisconsin Central.
Chicago and West Michigan.
Big Four.
Chicago Great Western.
Chicago and Western Indiana.
Chicago and Grand Trunk.
Chicago and Eastern Illinois.
Louisville, New Albany and Chicago.
Southern Pacific.
Baltimore and Ohio.
Panhandle.
Mobile and Ohio.
Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton.

A Chicago dispatch says: The first passenger train due to leave East on the Baltimore & Ohio Thursday could not leave on account of being unable to couple on an engine. Forty police were sent to the yards. At the request of the railway employes in the East, twenty-five men were sent out by the American Railway Union to day to aid in organizing in that part of the country. These men are bound for New York and will begin work among the employes of the New York Central. Engineers and firemen on all roads centering in Chicago are greatly incensed at the discharge of the four engineers by the Northwestern Road, and decisive action on their part in aiding the general strike is looked for. E. A. Bancroft, representing the Santa Fe system, applied to the United States authorities in the name of the receiver for protection to his road against interference by the strikers. Four engineers on the Chicago and Northwestern Railway were arrested, charged with intimidation. The American Railway Union engaged attorneys to defend them. Owing to the strike of the switchmen on the Panhandle, the trains of that road have been brought in over the tracks of the Fort Wayne road. Threats to tie up the latter road and even the entire Pennsylvania system grew largely out of this fact. Action against the Fort Wayne will also involve the Chicago and Atlantic road, as both come into the city over the same tracks. Everything was blocked after midnight last night at the Western avenue yards of the Northwestern, Milwaukee and St. Paul and Panhandle roads.

Every Pullman car on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad was side-tracked by the management of the road, and President Debs of the American Railway Union marked down victory No. 1. Soon after the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul had given in, a report was received at headquarters from St. Louis that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad had given in and would side-track its Pullman cars. The two surrenders coming together raised the enthusiasm of the strikers to the highest pitch, for the news was sent to all of the strikers headquarters in the city and the men became more confident than ever that the boycott instituted against the Pullman Company would be entirely successful.

The entire day crews on the Milwaukee and St. Paul and Pan Handle roads have quit work, and there is not a wheel turning under any passenger car on either road that is not manned by officials. The men are in an ugly mood and violence is predicted. There are said to be only two Pullman cars on the entire Milwaukee and St. Paul system, but the use of these cars has been as effectual in tieing up the road, at least at the Chicago end, as though there were hundreds. Strikers are threatening to throw these two cars into the ditch. Eight hundred men employed in the Northwestern shops near West 40th street have struck.

The Chicago and Northern Pacific Road sent a written call for more police protection at the Grand Central depot. The message intimated that the company feared violence both as to its men and the patrons at the depot. The extra detail was at once granted. About 100 policemen were stationed along the tracks of the Illinois Central and Rock Island Railroads in the city.

Vice President Howard, of the American Railway Union, said that the situation would yet be more warlike. He added: "We can tie up every road in the country if necessary to beat Pullman. We have shown that we were able to fulfill every promise made, and we can make good our word to involve the entire railway systems of the West. Every branch of organized labor is now back of this struggle. President McBride, of the Miners' Union, has telegraphed us that he will call out miners when coal is supplied to roads that use Pullman cars. This will greatly aid us."

BULLETINS ON THE STRIKE.

Where the Railway Boycott Is Being Pushed by the Union.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The local employes of the Northern Pacific quit work according to agreement.

St. Paul, Minn.—The entire line of the Northern Pacific, with the exception of the Pacific division, is now completely tied up.

Detroit, Mich.—The Grand Trunk, C. & W. M. and D., L. & N. are the only roads using Pullman cars, and they are running as usual.

Emporia, Kan.—Three hundred men here, employes of the Santa Fe, have obeyed the A. R. U. order to strike. Nothing but mail trains are leaving here.

IN THE RAILROAD YARDS AT CHICAGO.

Memphis—There is no interruption to railroad traffic here on account of the Pullman strike. The local branch of the A. R. U. has taken no action as yet.

Omaha—At 11:20 a. m. all was quiet in Omaha and throughout the State, no Pullman cars having been interfered with. Trouble, however, is anticipated.

Nashville—Neither the Louisville & Nashville nor the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway have experienced any trouble in connection with the boycott on Pullman cars.

Helena, Mont.—At 9 o'clock last night, all A. R. U. men on the Northern Pacific Road went out on an order from President Debs. The entire line in this State, branches and all, are tied up.

Cleveland—None of the roads leading into this city have so far been affected by the Pullman boycott, and railway officials express the belief that no action will be taken by the local organization of the A. R. U.

Pueblo, Colo.—Pueblo's two lodges of the A. R. U. have voted to carry out the boycott on Pullman sleepers, making it apply to all roads entering here. Employes refuse to couple the sleepers. The sheriff was applied to for assistance.

Trinidad, Col.—The anti-Pullman strike is on here. At 12 o'clock last night the operators at Raton, Las Vegas and Albuquerque could not be raised, and shortly afterward the operators here quit work. The switchmen have stopped work.

St. Joseph, Mo.—There is no trouble among railroad men in this city. All sleeping cars start from other places along the lines and would be stopped before reaching here. The A. R. U. is very strong in this city, however, and the men will obey orders from the officers of that organization.

Duluth, Minn.—There is trouble here to day on the Northwestern and Northern Pacific roads. The switchmen of both roads are all out and the flour mills will soon be forced to shut down. The strike is on account of the use of Pullmans on both roads. The Northern Pacific has not turned a wheel since midnight at both Duluth and Superior.

Denver—An injunction granted by Judge Hallett against the Santa Fe employes restrains them from interfering with the operators of trains and enjoins them to obey the orders of the representatives of the receivers in moving, handling, switching and operating all cars and trains of the Santa Fe or under its control.

Topeka—The Santa Fe system is now in the hands of the United States Court in fact. On the application of the receivers, Judge C. G. Foster of the United States Court this morning signed an order directing United States Marshal Neeley to protect all property and trains of the Santa Fe in Kansas. Marshal Neeley is ordered to arrest all persons interfering with the trains or property of the company.

Indianapolis—The Monon train that left this city at midnight has not yet reached Chicago. It is made up of five Pullman sleepers, and these are held near Hammond. The train that left Chicago Thursday night for this city is still at Hammond, and there is no prospect of it getting away. Both the trains held at Hammond are United States mail trains, and General Counsel Fields telegraphed to know if Judge Baker is in the city, as the company proposes to proceed against the strikers for interfering with the mails.

Kansas City, Mo.—No through trains have left here in any direction on the Santa Fe road to day. Their train due here at 9 a. m. from New Mexico and the West has been abandoned. The California and Mexico train from Chicago, is tied up. This train carries two coaches from the East and takes on a third coach here. The switchmen refused to handle the third Pullman car and it was coupled to the switch engine by Supt. Koraback. Then the engineer in charge of the switch engine declined to haul the car. By order of the General Manager, the train is to be held indefinite y unless the third coach is attached.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties, and General Indiana News Notes.

Our Charitable Institutions.

The report of the Board of State Charities for the six months ending May 1 is out. It shows that during that time 436 patients have been received at the four insane hospitals and that the increase in the daily average enrollment over that of a year ago is 76.79. The total expenditure for maintenance and construction at all the charitable institutions of the State was $433,002.09, while the receipts and earnings were $3,955.58. The Northern Prison came near supporting itself during the six months, its total expenses being $56,320.98 and its receipts and earnings $55,444.61, leaving only $876.37 expended on its account. The Southern Prison's earnings were $14,761.06 and its expenses $44,476.05. The total expenditures for correctional institutions were $165,860.86 and the receipts and earnings $71,735.12, leaving net expenses of $94,12.74. The grand net expenses for all the institutions of the State both charitable and correctional were, during this period, $523,172.25, as against $454,031.51 for the same time last year, an increase in expenses of $69,090.74.

The total salaries paid officers and employes of the charitable institutions for the six months amounted to $150,668.45 and those of the correctional institutions $48,647.50. There was an average number of 315 officers, teachers, attendants, and employes at the Central Insane Hospital.

HENRY BEAUCHAMP, employed in the Wabash Railroad shops at Andrews, was fatally injured by a bar of iron falling on his head.

EDWARD STALLMAN, aged 9 years, was drowned in the Ohio River at the lower wharf, Evansville. He was the son of Mr. Louis Stallman, of the Anchor boat.

WILLIAM L. WAGNER, aged 24, was drowned in Salt Creek five miles north of Lebanon, while bathing. He leaves a wife and two little children. He was a "Red Man."

AT Elwood the body of Mary Gavin, a young widow, was found lying on the floor of her room, her face terribly bruised. She had taken an overdose of oil of tansy.

LOMIE HOLMER, aged 12 years, fell from a seat in the Decatur County Court House yard, during a convention, and was instantly killed. His spine was broken.

AT Lafontaine, Wabash County, the handle works of McCord & Co. burned. Loss on building and machinery, $10,000; insurance, $3,200. Twenty-five men are thrown out of employment.

SUPERSTITIOUS farmers near Peru are wild with excitement over the finding of a letter "B" on the leaves of growing oats. They claim in stands for "blood," and think it is an ill omen.

HERMAN SEITZ, saloon keeper, of Anderson, was killed at Pendleton, while attempting to board a freight train. He missed his footing and was thrown between the cars. The deceased leaves a wife and five small children.

A MAN hiring in the woods by the New York, Chicago and S. Louis railway tracks, one mile west of Edgerton, Allen County, Ind., committed a brutal assault on the wife of Robert McConnel, and left her insensible by the track while he fled to the woods. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell were married the day before, and she was walking to her mother's house. She says the man was James Hobbs, a young man recently returned from the Reform School, and who last week attempted to assault the 12-year-old daughter of a prominent farmer, but failing, robbed her of 20 cents. A posse, headed by the newly married man and his wife's father, after searching for a long time, found him. Sheriff Clausmier went to Edgerton on a special train to prevent a lynching, and it was with difficulty the prisoner was saved from the crowd.

THE little child of Allen Gartner, four miles from Wabash, died from the effects of pulling over on it a pot of hot tea.

A PARTY of picnickers at Comer's mill near Marion, had a sad finale to the excursion. On the way home, one wagon, containing a party, tried to pass the others, and in driving around struck a large bowlder in the road. Mrs. Rosetta Sheldon was thrown back over the wheel. She was holding her baby in her arms, but the sudden jolt threw the baby out of her arms on its head. Its neck was broken and the child died immediately.

RICHMOND was the center of a disastrous storm. Hail fell in large quantities and the wind had a tremendous force. The chief damage was the unroofing of Weber & Holzapfel's junk shop, the unroofing of a part of the grand stand at the racing park, and the total destruction of the large barn of the street car company. The loss on the latter was $3,000, and the total loss over the city is perhaps $5,000. The only injury to life was the serious injury received by Frank Dunham, who was caught beneath the falling walls of the junk shop. It is not thought that he will die. The family of Frank Roth, residing in a portion of the street car barn, had a narrow escape.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

MEASURES CONSIDERED AND ACTED UPON.

At the Nation's Capital—What Is Being Done by the Senate and House—Old Matters Disposed Of and New Ones Considered.

The Senate and House.

Both houses of Congress adjourned Monday after adopting resolutions of sympathy with the people of France in their bereavement.

The Senate Tuesday entered upon the thirteenth week of tariff debate, devoting its attention to the income tax. Mr. Hill withdrew the amendment offered on Saturday to strike out the provision exempting the interest on United States bonds from the operation of the tax. Another legal holiday has been added to the list of those now existing so far as Congress has the power to do so, as on motion of Mr. McGann the Senate bill making Labor Day a national holiday was passed by the House. House bills and joint resolutions passed as follows: A bill authorizing the Minneapolis Gas Light Company to lay a submerged gas main across the Mississippi River. Bill to give the same weight and effect to the oaths of privates and noncommissioned officers in pension cases as is given to the oaths of commissioned officers. Considerable discussion was precipitated by amendments offered to the paragraph to pay Indian depredation claims. As the bill finally came out of the committee of the whole this paragraph carried an appropriation of $100,000 for the payment of certain Indian depredation claims in lieu of the $6,000 for the examination of these cases by the Attorney General as originally provided in the bill. The House retained the amendment, and as amended it was passed.

The Senate again talked tariff and income tax Wednesday. The House got into a series of deadlocks over the New Mexico statehood bill. The bone of contention was an amendment originally proposed by Mr. Smith, of Illinois, requiring the public schools to teach the English language. The consideration of the bill was not concluded at the hour of adjournment. A cablegram from the French Government acknowledging the action of Congress relative to the death of President Carnot was laid before the House, as was also a message from the President transmitting the latest Hawaiian correspondence. A resolution was adopted extending the appropriations for the current fiscal year. The bill giving the Brainard and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation was passed; also a bill authorizing the construction of a foot and wagon bridge over the St. Croix River between Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Whisky and sugar absorbed the attention of the Senate Thursday in the tariff debate. By the action of the House another statehood bill goes to the Senate. The New Mexico bill passed without a roll call, and with a very few dissenting votes, most of them being cast by Eastern members. Several changes were made in the bill as reported from the committee. The election of delegates to the State constitutional convention is to be conducted in the same manner as the election of members to the territorial Legislature, instead of the same manner as the election of the delegate to Congress. The next amendment gives 5 instead of 10 per cent. of the money derived from the sale of public lands to the school fund of the new State. The section providing for a continuance of the territorial laws is amended by adding the following: "From and after the admission of said State into the Union in pursuance of this act the laws of the United States shall have the same force and effect within the said State as elsewhere within the United States."

The tariff bill is finally out of committee, and was given to the Senate Friday. But the income tax is yet a bone of contention. A vote on the tariff will be needed soon. With the exception of a short time the day in the House was consumed by a filibuster over the contested election case of Watson against Black of the Tenth Georgia district. The filibuster was led by Representative Pence, who contested every inch of ground, even after the aid of the committee on rules had been invoked. The tangle was finally straightened out and the resolution of the committee on elections declaring Mr. Black elected was agreed to. A few bills of minor interest were passed early in the day and some resolutions to pay the salaries and funeral expenses of deceased employes of the House were agreed to. At 4:30 o'clock the House took a recess until 8 p. m. The evening session was devoted to private pension bills.

TIGERS AND THEIR PREY.

Some Information as to How They Make Their Attack.

A correspondent who has seen a great deal of forest life in India writes on the subject of how tigers secure their prey. As a general rule, he is inclined to doubt the truth of the commonly accepted theory that the tiger, after lurking in ambush, springs on to the unsuspecting victim, and, tearing savagely at his throat, eagerly drinks his blood. This method of attack may sometimes be adopted, but it is far more often the exception than the rule.

In approaching his prey the tiger makes the best possible use of cover, but when further concealment is impossible he will course a deer or other swift footed animal with extraordinary speed. A sudden dash of 200 yards in the open is nothing uncommon, and the writer mentions the case of one tigress which used to catch hogs or deer almost daily on a perfectly open and burned-up plain.

Small animals are, for the most part, dispatched with a blow of the paw; but in the case of the more bulky, the experienced tiger, leaping on the back of his victim, grips the neck in front of the withers with his jaws, one forepaw clasping the shoulder of the animal and the other fully extended under the throat. Should he be unable to crush the spine with his jaws, he will then jerk the head back violently and thereby break the neck. In removing his prey the tiger frequently displays almost phenomenal strength and activity. In one case cited, a young tigress leaped up a perpendicular rock, some six feet high, with a man weighing nearly eleven stone in her jaws, and on another occasion a male tiger dragged an exceptionally large buffalo up a bank at least ten feet high.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

He had declined to visit Davenant with Lord Clanyaree, owning frankly that there was no friendly feeling between Gilbert Sinclair and himself. Lord Clanyarde perfectly understood the state of the case, but affected to be supremely ignorant. He was a gentleman whose philosophy was to take things easy. Not to disturb Camerina, or any other social lake beneath whose tranquil water there might lurk a foul and muddy bottom, was a principle with Lord Clanyarde. But the nobleman, though philosophic and easy-tempered, was not without a heart. There was a strain of humanity in the Sybarite and wo ldling, and when at a great dinner at Davenant he saw the impress of a broken heart upon the statuesque beauty of his daughter's face, he was touched with pity and alarm. To sell his daughter to the highest bidder had not seemed to him in any wise a crime; but he would not have sold her to age or deformity, or to a man of notoriously evil life. Gilbert Sinclair had appeared to him a very fair sample of the average young Englishman. Not stainless, perhaps. Lord Clanyarde did not inquire too closely into details. The suitor was good-looking, good-natured, open-handed and rich. What more could any dowerless young woman require? Thus had Lord Clanyarde reasoned with himself when he hurried on his youngest daughter's marriage; and having secured for her this handsome establishment, he had given himself no further concern about her destiny. No daughter of the house of Clanyarde had ever appeared in the divorce court. Constance was a girl of high principles, always went to church on saints' days, abstained in Lent, and would be sure to go on all right.

But at Davenant, on this particular evening, Lord Clanyarde saw a change in his daughter that chilled his heart.

He talked to her, and she answered him absently, with the air of one who only half understands. Surely this argued something more than grief for her dead child.

He spoke to Gilbert Sinclair, and gave frank utterance to his alarm.

"Yes, she is very low-spirited," answered Gilbert, carelessly; "still fretting for the little girl. I thought it would cheer her to have people about her—prevent her dwelling too much upon that unfortunate event. But I really think she gets worse. It's rather hard upon me. I didn't marry to be miserable."

"Have you had a medical opinion about her?" asked Lord Clanyarde, anxiously.

"Oh, yes, she has her own doctor. The little old man who used to attend her at Marchbrook. He knows her constitution, no doubt. He prescribes tonics, and so on, and recommends change of scene by and by, when she gets a little stronger; but my own opinion is that if she would only make an effort, and not brood upon the past, she'd soon get round again. Oh, by the way, I hear you have Sir Cyprian Davenant staying with you."

"Yes, he has come down to shoot some of my pheasants."

"I didn't know you and he were so thick."

"I have known him eversince he was a boy, and knew his father before him."

"I wonder, as your estates joined, you did not knock up a match between him and Constance."

"That would not have been much good, as he couldn't keep his estate."

"No. It's a pity that old man in Lincolnshire didn't take it into his head to die a little sooner."

"I find no fault with destiny for giving me you as a son-in-law, and I hope you are not tired of the position," said Lord Clanyarde, with a look that showed Gilbert that he must pursue his insinuations no further.

Lord Clanyarde went home and told Sir Cyprian what he had seen, and his fears about Constance. He reproached himself bitterly for his share in bringing about the marriage, being all the more induced to regret that act now that change of fortune had made Cyprian as good a parti as Gilbert Sinclair.

"How short-sighted we mortals are!" thought the anxious father. "I did not even know that Cyprian had a rich bachelor uncle."

Sir Cyprian heard Lord Clanyarde's account in grave silence.

"What do you mean to do?" he asked.

"What can I do? Poor child, she is alone and must bear her burden unaided. I cannot come between her and her husband. It would take very little to make me quarrel with Sinclair, and then where should we be? If she had a mother living it would be different."

"She has sisters," suggested Cyprian.

"Yes, women who are absorbed by the care of their own families, and who would not go very far out of the way to help her. With pragmatical husbands, too, who would make no end of mischief if they were allowed to interfere. No; we must not make a family row of the business. After all, there is no specific ground for complaint. She does not complain, poor child. I'll go to Davenant early to-morrow and see her alone. Perhaps I can persuade her to be frank with me."

"You might see the doctor, and hear his account of her," said Cyprian.

"Yes, by the way, little Dr. Webb, who attended my girls from their cradles. An excellent little man. I'll send for him to-morrow and consult him about my rheumatism. He must know a good deal about my poor child."

Lord Clanyarde was with his daughter soon after breakfast next morning.

Constance received her father with affection, but he could not win her confidence. It might be that she had nothing to confide. She made no complaint against her husband.

"Why do I find you sitting here alone, Constance, while the house is full of cheerful people?" asked Lord Clanyarde. "I heard the billiard-balls going as I came through the hall, early as it is."

"Gilbert likes company, and I do not," answered Constance, quietly. "We each take our own way."

"That does not sound like a happy union, pet," said her father.

"Did you expect me to be happy—with Gilbert Sinclair?"

"Yes, my love, or I would never have asked you to marry him. No, Constance. Of course, it was an understood thing with me that you must marry well, as your sisters had done before you; but I meant you to marry a man who would make you happy; and if I find that Sinclair ill-uses you or slights you, egad, he shall have no easy reckoning with me."

"My dear father, pray be calm. He is very good to me. I have never complained—I never shall complain. I try to do my duty, for I know that I have done him a wrong for which a life of duty and obedience can hardly atone."

"Wronged him, child? How have you wronged him?"

"By marrying him when my heart was given to another."

"Nonsense, pet; a mere school-girl penchant. If that kind of thing were to count, there's hardly a wife living who has not wronged her husband. Every romantic girl begins by falling in love with a detrimental; but the memory of that juvenile attachment has no more influence on her married life than the recollection of her favorite doll. You must get such silly notions out of your head. And you should try to be a little more lively; join Sinclair's amusements. No man likes a gloomy wife. And remember, love, the past is past—no tears can bring back our losses. If they could, hope would prevent our crying, as somebody judiciously observes."

Constance sighed and was silent, whereupon Lord Clanyarde embraced his daughter tenderly and departed, feeling that he had done his duty. She was much depressed, poor child, but no doubt time would set things right; and as to Sinclair's ill-treating her, that was out of the question. No man above the working classes ill-uses his wife nowadays. Lord Clanyarde made quite light of his daughter's troubles when he met Sir Cyprian at lunch. Sinclair was a good fellow at bottom, he assured Sir Cyprian; a little too fond of pleasure, perhaps, but with no harm in him, and Constance was inclined to make rather too much fuss about the loss of her little girl.

Sir Cyprian heard this change of tone in silence, and was not convinced. He contrived to see Dr. Webb, the Maidstone surgeon, that afternoon. He remembered the good natured little doctor as his attendant in many a childish ailment, and was not afraid of asking him a question or two. From him he heard a very bad account of Constance Sinclair. Dr. Webb professed himself fairly baffled. There was no bodily ailment, except want of strength; but there was a settled melancholy, a deep and growing depression for which medicine was of no avail.

"You'll ask why I don't propose getting a better opinion than my own," said Dr. Webb, "and I'll tell you why. I might call in half the great men in London and be no wiser than I am now. They would only make Mrs. Sinclair more nervous, and she is very nervous already. I am a faithful watchdog, and at the first indication of danger I shall take measures.

"You don't apprehend any danger to the mind?" asked Sir Cyprian, anxiously.

"There is no immediate cause for fear. But if this melancholy continues, if the nervousness increases, I cannot answer for the result."

"You have told Mr. Sinclair as much as this?"

"Yes, I have spoken to him very frankly."

It would have been difficult to imagine a life more solitary than that which Constance Sinclair contrived to lead in a house full of guests. For the first two weeks she had bravely tried to sustain her part as hostess; she had pretended to be amused by the amusements of others, or, when unable to support even that poor simulation, had sat at her embroidery frame and given the grace of her presence to the assembly. But now she was fain to hide herself all day long in her own rooms, or to walk alone in the fine old park, restricting her public appearance to the evening, when she took her place at the head of the dinner-table, and endured the frivolities of the drawing-room after dinner. Gilbert secretly resented this withdrawal, and refused to believe that the death of Baby Christabel was his wife's soul cause of grief. There was something deeper—a sorrow for the past—a regret that was intensified by Sir Cyprian's presence in the neighborhood.

"She knows of his being at Marchbrook, of course," he told himself. "How do I know they have not met. She lives her own life, almost as much apart from me as if we were in separate houses. She has had time and opportunity for seeing him, and in all probability he is at Marchbrook only for the sake of being near her."

But Sir Cyprian had been at Marchbrook a week, and had not seen Constance Sinclair. How the place would have reminded him of her, had not her image been always present with him in all times and places! Every grove and meadow had its memory, every change in the fair pastoral landscape its bitter-sweet association.

Marchbrook and Davenant were divided in some parts by an eight-foot wall, in others by an oak fence. The Davenant side of the land adjoining Marchbrook was copse and wilderness, which served as a covert for game. The Marchbrook side, a wide stretch of turf, which Lord Clanyarde let off as grazing land to one of his tenants. A railed-in plantation here and there supported the fiction that this meadow land was a park, and for his own part Lord Clanyarde declared that he would just as soon look at oxen as at deer.

The one only feature of Marchbrook Park was its avenues. One of these, known as the Monks' avenue, and supposed to have been planted in the days when Marchbrook was the site of a Benedictine monastery, was a noble arcade of tall elms planted sixty feet apart, with a grassy road between them. The monastery had long vanished, leaving not a wrack behind, and the avenue now led only from wall to wall. The owners of Davenant had built a classic temple or summer-house close against the boundary wall between the two estates, in order to secure the enjoyment of this vista, as it was called in the days of Horace Walpole. The windows of this summer-house looked down the wide avenue to the high-road, a distance of a little more than a quarter of a mile.

This summer house had always been a favorite resort of Mrs. Sinclair's. It overlooked the home of her youth, and she liked it on that account, for although Davenant was by far the more beautiful estate, she loved Marchbrook best.

ADVERSITY is the first path to truth. —Byron.

STYLES IN NECKWEAR

THE SMALL, NARROW CRAVAT IS MUCH WORN.

Very Swagger Designs Run Out of Style by Cheap Dandies—Lawns and Washable Silks—A Generous Expanse of Shirt Front Is the Correct Thing.

String Ties and Colored "Aprons."

The distinction between "popular" and "fashionable," as applied to men's neckwear, was never before so sharp as at the present time. The revival of the twice-around cravat, as the modified stock-tie shown in cut No. 1 is called, was followed by all sorts of variations on that form of "scarfing." The style took on various shapes, composed of silks, satins and lawns, black satins predominating. This was scarcely noticed by men of fashion, though the crack haberdashers insisted that their customers should adopt it if they wanted to carry the bell-crown hat and long-skirted frock effectively. They took kindly to the hat and coat—a revival of the style of 1830—but they would not take the made-up stock, and for the simple reason that it had been killed as an article of fashion by the lower grade of manufacturers, through whom it fell into the hands of cheap dandies and by them was pushed to extremes. The twice-around is really a handsome scarf on the right man. He should have a long neck and wear a high, standing collar with a poke front.

One of the effects in the stock-tie is to have the inner band of a bright red and the outer bow or knot of black. The same scheme is worked out also in fancy colors. For very young gentlemen the style is fetching and will probably last for some time. String ties are simply adjusted in bow form and expose the entire shirt bosom. They are especially the mode for morning wear when the fancy percale shirt, with white collar, is affected. Polka dots, hair-line stripes and solid colors are correct in these ties. Those of the new white washable silk are easily tied, hold their shape and save mental wear and tear. Black satins tied in the butterfly form have been the rage for some time, but the straighs-edge finish is the ruling passion in hand-tied bows to-day.

A late attempt to connect extreme dullness with positive gayety is a black satin scarf with a bright-red lining. The chappie of the period ties the affair in a simple sailor knot, but manages to let one of the aprons, as the ends of the scarf are called, turn around just a little so that just a suggestion of the flaming red satin is seen. There is no telling to what extent these brilliant-hued linings may be carried. No. 2 is a puzzling style when on, for the beholder can't imagine how the wearer produces the broad effect which appears at the rear of the main apron. This style is made in the lightest of surah and twill silks, bunches up artistically in pongee and China weaves, and looks provokingly cool in lawns and other midsummer fabrics. A popular form in the negligee bow class of neckwear is shown in cut No. 3. An ideal summer tie is a Windsor bow of thin silk. It does not hold its shape like the cravat of starched lawn, but it is infinitely cooler. Turned-down starched collars will be generally worn this summer, so that the shield bows will be found useful. The shield bow is not an article of fashion, yet is extremely convenient.

NO. 4. NO. 5. NO. 6. NO. 7.

The four-in-hand of the graduated school will continue all summer as the long scarf for stylish semi-dress. A clever conceit is illustrated in cut No. 4. It ties into a knot of moderate size, and is made up in light, washable fabrics. Lawn ties in every shape, from the modest bow to the generous De Joinville, will flourish in conjunction with the hot-weather suit. They are made in the same colors and patterns as the silk goods. In fact, every style that is a success in silk is made over into the wash fabrics by the manufacturer. Cut No. 5 shows a made-up lawn scarf in dead white, with small rings of black. The effect is very fetching, and just pronounced enough to suit the chappie who likes a bit of spice in his apparel.

NO. 8. NO. 9. NO. 10.

Scarfs which cover the entire bosom are entirely out of favor. The shirt-front is now very much in evidence, so that the long, slender Teck scarf delineated in cut No. 6 will be worn by the neatest of swells. No. 7 is a string tie that has had considerable vogue, and will continue a favorite among those who have mastered the knack of adjusting it. It is fashioned by the wearer into a bow, the ends having a strait-plaited effect. Nos. 8 and 9 are pronounced cool and comfortable scarfs by knowing ones, and are adapted to be worn with either standing or turn-over collars. The best effects are obtained when made of moires, black satin, silk, etc. No. 10 shows the long, narrow Teck, a scarf that is in keeping with prevailing tendencies. Its proportions should be so balanced that the long, lean aspect is effectively carried out.

WHY IT'S VALUABLE.

The Low-Lying Jungle of Mosquito Land in Nicaragua.

The Mosquito coast, a strip of land in Eastern Nicaragua, is occasioning considerable interest in this country, Great Britain and the republic of Nicaragua for the reason that in its control is involved that of the ship canal which through that isthmus is to join two oceans. Otherwise the Mosquito coast would be of very little interest to the world.

The Mosquito coast was discovered

A MOSQUITO COAST RESIDENCE.
[Elevated upon a tall tree stump and supported by long poles, in order that the occupants may be above the malaria-laden air near the ground.]

by Columbus during his fourth voyage in 1502. Its commerce is small, its people degraded and indolent, and the country itself wanting in beauty. Bluefields Bluff on the south and Bragman's Bluff on the north are the only landmarks rising above the general level of low-lying jungle, which stretches in dull monotony for leagues and leagues along the coast. Even this forbidding waste of mangrove swamp is interlaced by a bewildering net-work of lagoons and natural canals, succeeded farther inland by extensive marshes and savannas formed by the draining and silting up of still more ancient lagoons during a long continental uprising, which is not yet ended. The coast-line is fronted by a chain of coral reefs and islands, with intricate and dangerous channels between them and the mainland, which the buccaneers of old turned to good account. One of these reefs is Roncador, where the famous Kearsarge was wrecked.

Owing to the physical peculiarities of the Mosquito coast the settlements are uniformly situated on the sea coast, at the mouths of rivers. These are nothing more than trading posts—collections of palm-thatched hovels with a few rude weather-boarded houses and stores belonging to merchants, all strung in a line along the river side. Sometimes these huts are anchored to trees to keep them from being blown away in the fierce Caribbean gales.

An important industry of the coast is the collection of the crude juice from which rubber is made; this is evaporated and further dried by heat, and fashioned in molds according to the purposes for which it is destined. It is shipped in a crude form in great quantities, both liquid and solid. The Mosquito and Valient Indians are much employed in this work. These Indians, together with the Sumue Indians, are very small of stature.

The "Authority" Ruled Out.

Mr. Dan Wilson, an American lawyer, was once prosecuting a case before a Missouri justice of the peace, when the opposing counsel cited "Greenleaf on Evidence" so decidedly against him that a bold effort had to be made. Wilson asked him for the book, opened it, rose, and, with a look of solemn surprise, said he was amazed that so good a lawyer should bring such a book as that into court. "Why," said he, "the author himself never thought of its being used for an authority in any case. Just hear what he says in the preface, 'Doubtless a happier selection of these principles might be made, and the work might have been much better executed by another hand. For, now it is finished, I find it but an approximation towards what was originally desired. But, in the hope that it may still be found not useless as the germ of a better treatise, it is submitted to the candor of a liberal profession.' Now," continued Wilson, "an author who admits that his work is as bad as this certainly never expected it to be brought into court to govern the opinions of a gentleman who has sat on the bench, as your Honor has, for eighteen months." The justice was perfectly satisfied. He ruled the "authority" out as of no account whatever, and gave his judgment for Wilson and his client.

Astonished the Natives.

A Nice paper recently contained the following, which has occasioned considerable amusement among the Americans there. It is headed "Very American." "A very rich Yankee has recently offered the Countess of Janze 2,500,000 francs for her house, its furniture, objects of art and whatever else it may contain worthy of purchase. The residence is to be torn down most carefully and scientifically and transported stone by stone to the other side of the ocean, where it is to be rebuilt without the slightest departure being made from the original building or in the arrangement of its furniture."

ADULTERATED WINE

is injurious, but nothing gives strength, and tones up the stomach like a pure old port wine. "Royal Ruby Port," so called for its royal taste and ruby color, is on account of its purity, age and strength, particularly adapted for invalids, convalescents and the aged. Sold only in bottles (never in bulk) while cheap wine is sold by the gallon and gives a larger profit to the seller but less to the user. This wine is absolutely pure, and has the age without which no wine is fit to use. Be sure you get "Royal Ruby"; quart bottles $1, pints 60 cts. Sold by

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.....JULY 5, 1894.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

The democrats of DeKalb and Steuben counties will meet in delegate convention at Waterloo, on Friday July 6, 1894 at 1:30, o'clock p. m. for the purpose of placing in nomination a Judge and a Prosecutor for the 35th Judicial District.

JOHN F. SHUMAN, JOHN W. SOMERLOTT, } Chairmen.

The central Committeemen are urgently requested to send the names of the state and congressional delegates of their respective townships to county chairman Shuman at once.

CONGRESS has passed a law making labor day a national holiday.

HOUSE of representatives has passed the bill admitting New Mexico as a state.

PRENDERGRAST, who murdered Mayor Harrison, is to be hanged. The last jury is sensible.

TARSNEY, the adjutant general of Colorado, was tarred and feathered one night last week. No clue.

SENATE passed their tariff bill Tuesday. Hill was the only democrat against it. Now it goes back to the House for concurrence.

BISHOP W. PERKINS, ex-senator from Kansas, died at his home in Washington, D. C. last week. When a young man, he practiced law at Pierceton, Koscuisko county, this state, then went west.

WILD horses by the thousand are in the hilly parts of the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada and Montana. They will now be hunted for their hides and oil, and the hams sold in France where people eat them.

HON. J. D. LEIGHTY, of St. Joe, was last week nominated by the republicans at Ft. Wayne, for congress. He got it by the usual conditions. Ft. Wayne had several candidates who quarreled awhile and then broke to an outside man.

A QUEER way, the populists had at their county convention. They had the candidates for a given office stand up on the platform so the convention could see which was the best looking. As the best looking man is generally the poorest stick, they made several mistakes.

CHICAGO postoffice began July 1 under an improved system. The city is divided into "districts," each with a "station," and all directly under one head. Heretofore it has been very loosely managed, and much confusion and consequent delay prevented proper mail service for so vast a city.

Eagle Lake.

This lovely resort, better known perhaps as "Spring Fountain Park," is this year more attractive than ever before. The proprietors of the grounds, the Beyer Brothers, are as genial and accommodating as ever, and have not remitted an iota of the care they have always given to these grounds and to the patrons who come from far and near to enjoy a few days or weeks in such lovely surroundings. Besides the splendid Eagle Lake Hotel, under care of Mine Host, Capt. Jones, there is every other convenience for comfort and pleasure to be found at all points of the park. Lovely flowers, sparkling springs of pure cold water, fine shaded walks, scores of lovely cottages with their home-like surroundings, plenty of boats for rowing and fishing, steamers for trips across the lake, and even to go up to the city two miles away. For Boyer Brothers have "sailed across the lake" to the westward, and on reaching the farther side, have cut a wide and deep canal nearly a mile long, so the steamer can go right up to town. Its wharf is close by the crossing of the two railroads on the east side of the city. In fact a train on the north-and-south road, the C., W. & M., now called the "Big 4," can unload its passengers at the crossing and let them take the steamer across the lake to the Park if they prefer. All these things were seen and tested by the fortunate newspaper men and their friends who attended the editorial convention there, June 21 and 22. It was the silver anniversary of the "Northern Indiana Editorial Association," that held its first meeting at Goshen twenty-five years ago. Owing to various causes, the attendance was not large, but the literary and social features were even more enjoyable than usual. June 26, the "Indiana Association of Writers" met at the same lovely resort, and spent the week there.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Christopher Dick, deceased by order of the DeKalb Circuit court, will, on or after sell at private sale the following described real estate to-wit:

August 4, 1894,

The northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section twenty-two, (22) in township thirty four, (34) north of range twelve (12) east, except ten (10) acres off of the east side thereof, and containing thirty (30) acres, more or less.

Terms of Sale: ½ of purchase money cash on day of sale, ½ in 12 months and ½ in 18 months from sale. The deferred payments to be evidenced by the promissory notes of purchaser, bearing 6 per cent interest and attorney's fees, waiving appraisement laws, and secured by mortgage on premises.

Bids will be received at my office or residence in Auburn, Indiana, until sale is made.

The Judicial Convention.

The populists held their judicial convention here last Saturday and nominated John W. Baxter for judge. They had no lawyer in their party and Mr. Baxter it would appear came nearer suiting them than anyone else. They nominated a young man named Dando, from Orland, for prosecutor. We believe he is not a lawyer. Mr. Yotter, of Angola, a bright young attorney, would have accepted their nomination for this place, but was hauled up before the convention and asked if he was in favor of free coinage of silver, and after hearing him define his position, it seemed to be unsatisfactory to some—probably through a misunderstanding of the meaning of his statement so he was turned down and the place given to a man who knows nothing of law. A queer way to "reform the public business," by trying to elect a prosecutor who knows nothing of the law! Of course he will not be elected, but the principle is the same. With a prosecutor who is a poor lawyer, it always costs the county more to prosecute a case, often three times as much. As for their candidate for judge, it looks as if he is going to be elected, for the democrats will probably indorse Baxter at the judicial convention at Waterloo on Friday. Among reasons given by the democrats who wish to do this, is the fact that with an an adverse majority of 600 to 800 in the two counties, the democrats would have hard work to elect a judge, unless they can get one on two tickets. Another reason is that the office is, or should be, non-partisan, and that populists, prohibitionists, democrats and some republicans—quite a few of the last named, even—will give him their support. Some democrats, however, would prefer a straight democrat on the ticket, although we could not probably elect him. The delegates must settle it on Friday at Waterloo, and the COURIER will be satisfied with their selection. But there should be a better man for prosecutor.

NOTES.

The idea of calling on a candidate for prosecuting attorney to define his position on the silver question is supremely ridiculous. Coining silver dollars is not one of the duties of prosecuting attorney. He may try to coin a few for himself, but he don't take in the silver mine owners as partners in the way the populists believe in doing.

WATERLOO.

Lee Stamets and wife spent Sunday in Hudson.

Miss Blanch Kelley is able to ride out in a wheeled chair.

The broom factory is open again and work going on as usual.

Miss Hattie Smith is enjoying her vacation at her home in Waterloo.

Mrs. Phebe Walker has returned to Waterloo to spend her summer vacation.

Misses Allie Phillips and Anna Deventer have gone to Elkhart to visit their sisters.

Mrs. Culbertson and Miss Nellie Barns of Auburn, were calling on friends in town Monday.

Miss Mattie Maxson attended the state musical convention at Ft. Wayne the early part of last week.

Mrs. O. C. Dickinson has returned from Marshall, Mich., where she was visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S Bowers.

Mrs. Hiram Bartholmew and family went to Wolf Lake for a week living in a tent catching fish and mosquitoes and enjoying life.

The men are at work at this place on the new telephone branch from Indianapolis to connect here with the long distance telephone.

Henry Willis received a telegram announcing the death of his sister, Mrs Gilbert at Syracuse, N. Y. He left at once, to be present at the funeral.

Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson started Tuesday for Elkhart to spend the 4th with her son, W. S Dickinson who has a position there with the leading jeweler of the city.

Mr. Baker, our new baker, has a fine new show case, in which his delicious cakes look doubly attractive, and his sales are largely increased by the investment made.

The mother of Dr. Myers, who has been visiting her son and his family, has returned to her home. Mrs. Myers' mother, from Elkhart, is at present visiting the family.

Saturday and Sunday the M. E. church of this place held their regular quarterly meeting. The presiding elder was present, Rev. C. G. Hudson, who preached Sunday Morning and evening.

Waterloo Lodge No 221 I. O. O. F. elected on last Tuesday night officers as follows: N G., John F. Shuman; V. G., Frank Duesler; R. Sec., John Koons; Treas., Philip Plum; Per. Sec., S. Z. Dickinson.

Faith Lodge No. 297 D. of R. on last Wednesday night elected the following officers for the coming term: N. G., Mrs. T. E. Imhoff; V. G. Mrs. George Huber; Sec., T. E. Imhoff; Treas, Mrs. Darwin Soule; Fin. Sec., S. Z. Dickinson.

Mr. McCullough's barber shop was burglarized most completely last Sunday night, every razor being taken and nothing left but one comb. There is thus far not the slightest clue to the thief. Mr. McCullough is from Hudson, and bought out Harley Wareham.

Tuesday evening, June 26, the members of the Minerva club, with their invited guests assembled at the home of Mrs. Mary Morell, to hold a "rose festival," this being the close of the year's work. The rooms were beautifully decorated with roses, as also roses prevailed for corsage and button hole boquets. The exercises for the evening consisted of a paper by the president, Mrs. Juliette Dickinson, subject, "How so Live;" an original story by Mrs. Mary Boozer, and a parlor drama, "The Mouse Trap," by Mesdames Mattie Beidler, Josephine Willis and Julia Plum. Later in the evening a delicious bauquet was served of ice cream, cake, peaches and lemonade. The club not only holds its own as to numbers and interest, but continues to gain in both.

A Farmer Shot.

Albert Rauhaus, a farmer in Cedar Creek township over in Allen county, was seriously wounded Saturday evening, by unknown men. He was just going to bed, and his wife was out in the summer kitchen, when three men pointed revolvers at her and told her to keep still. She sprang past them and ran screaming to her husband. One of the men shot him, but he turned and fought all three, and had he not been stunned by a blow on the head, might have beaten them off. As it was, he was shot three times, and lies in a critical condition. Supposed to be some drunken fellows with a grudge against him.

The Great Strike.

The latest from the strikes is that nearly all roads west of Ohio to the coast are tied up and neither passenger nor freight trains are moving. President Cleveland has decided that the great destruction of property must be stopped and has ordered U. S. troops to Chicago to see that mail trains and perishable freight are moved. Business of all kinds would soon be dead. Millions have been lost already. Here at Auburn we feel it. Goods ordered are not received. The men at Montpelier have struck and trains were delayed or abandoned. No through trains on the Wabash for several days. The whole matter has become a foolish and even criminal affair. Men who insist on destroying property and business should be punished as others of the same class are. There should be laws for arbitration to settle these troubles peaceably if possible, then if mobs refuse to obey the laws, they should be compelled to obey if it takes all the state and federal forces to do it.

First Commencement.

Stafford township held its first school commencement last Tuesday evening. There were three graduates, Laura M. Wilson, Roy J. Maxwell, and J. E. Curtis. The exercises were as good and probably the best for the first that have been held in the county. The productions showed careful thought and preparation and were well delivered. The church was tastefully and profusely decorated with evergreens, cut flowers, and a great variety of choice house plants. The Butler band under the leadership of E L. Fosdick, and a home male quartet furnished the music. The house was very closely seated, every available space having been filled with chairs. Every seat was filled, there was not standing room, many not being able to get into the house. Even under this crowded condition the order was perfect. The exercises were a success in every particular, and all who had any thing to do in their preparation deserve great credit. Especially can this be said of the trustee Mr. Wilson who spared no pains to give the people of his township an educational treat such as they never had before. Every township in the county has now graduated pupils from its schools, and the educational work is making rapid progress, as every honest and intelligent person must acknowledge.

G. H. YESBERA,
THE LEADING CLOTHIER,
AUBURN, INDIANA.

Schools, Past and Present.

AUBURN, IND., June 26, 1894.

Mr. Barns,

DEAR SIR: If you will be so kind as to allow me space enough in your paper, I would like to mention a few things in regard to the day schools of fifty years ago and of the schools of the present day. When I was a school boy it was customary to bar out the teacher about Christmas time, and keep him out until he promised to treat his pupils. I remember one time that we shut the teacher out and asked him to agree to buy us something for Christmas. To this he consented, and wrote on a slip of paper, promising to buy his pupils a bushel of potatoes and a gallon of vinegar. There was not one pupil in that school that could read writing. We supposed it was all right and opened the door. There were young men and young ladies in that school. Who would like to undertake to find a day school in this county where the boys and girls could not read writing? Dear young people of DeKalb county, there is much more expected of you than was expected of us, who never had the advantages that you have had.

Saturday evening, June 16, 1894, I attended the commencement exercises of the Butler township schools, held at Cedar Chapel. Wednesday evening June 20, it was my privilege to be present at the annual commencement of the Grant and Union township schools, held at Norris Chapel. There were six graduates in the common branches at each place. The orations, essays and recitations were good, and the large audience was well pleased. The opening address at Cedar Chapel by Miss Mary Pepple was greatly enjoyed and appreciated by all. The music was grand at both places, and all the exercises were very satisfactory to all.

The trustees of the townships mentioned had spared no pains to make the occasion one long to be remembered by all who were present. It seems to me they did their very best, as this was their last chance on such an occasion during their present term of office.

The county superintendent deserves much praise for the able manner in which he is discharging his duties as superintendant. He seems to feel that he must have the hearty co-operation of teachers and parents, in order to make his work successful, in bringing the schools of the county up to a higher plane of educational usefulness. I was very favorably impressed with the superintendent's remarks to the graduates at both Cedar and Norris Chapel. We who were present were not willing for the graduates alone to have the benefit of his speech, but we all felt that we needed the stimulus of his encouraging and helpful words.

BOOK KNOWLEDGE,

Is not the only thing requisite in a physician. Unless he is born for the business, unless he has the subtle, indefinable power of looking through a man and seeing the disease in its most secret hiding place, he will never be a good physician, even though he graduated from a German university. A man may dissect and vivisect, he may know every detail of human anatomy till he can, by looking at bone heaps and fossils, trace the descent of his ancestry down to the lowest marsupial and beyond, he may know all those things and more, but unless he is born for a physician he will never rise above mediocrity.

An illustration of the great advantage given to a man by an inborn power of diagnosis is seen in the practice of Dr. Fruth, late surgeon in the Provident Medical Dispensary of New York City. This eminent doctor has had, to be sure, all the advantages of thorough college training and widespread experience which the most ambitious physician could desire, but by the side of others who have that fitness and nothing else, he stands out preeminent. His cures are remarkable. They are worked in cases which seem utterly hopeless, and no one, no matter what his malady, should despair until after consulting Dr Fruth. He will be at the Swineford House, Thursday, July 12.

Mrs. Honser, the aged mother of Co. Supt. Merica, was accidentally thrown out of a buggy one day last week, and considerably and perhaps seriously hurt. Her shoulder was dislocated, and finally as a possible result of the shock, she became partially paralyzed. Mr. Merica was immediately sent for, and went over to Garrett, her home, and remained there a day or two. Later. She died Tuesday forenoon and is buried at 9 a. m. today at the cemetery north of Garrett.

Dr. James Squires, of Churubusco, is having another run of bad luck. About two weeks ago he buried a little child, and last week he received a telegram from Angola, that his son, Llyod, who was at school there, had typhoid fever. He went at once and got him home. Mrs. Squires has also been sick several weeks. Being a sensible republican, the Doctor don't blame it on the democratic administration, however. We hope to hear soon that better health prevails in his family.

Mr. Fethers, of Bryan, Ohio, was here last week, and called on Dr. Swartz, and talked also, with a number of our people, about continuing operations in our gas field. He believes with many others who have given it thought, that there is plenty of gas in our territory and that by sinking more wells especially east of town, we would have it in plenty. He is willing to take a large amount of stock in the enterprise, and expects to come over and look into the matter more fully after the hot season is over.

John Lahnum and wife came back for a visit with the friends here last Friday. They have now been in Chicago about two years, Mr. Lahnum being in a position of responsibility and trust in the great Furniture establishment of A. H. The finest rain ever seen here came last Sunday. The first was early Sunday morning, a gentle shower beginning at about 4. Just afternoon, it began again and kept up a steady downpour nearly all the afternoon. Many had feared the long hot spell would close with violent storms. The C. L. S. C. Annual.

The ladies of the Chautauqua Circle held their regular annual reception and commencement exercises at the residence of J. L. Davis last Friday evening. There was a large attendance of the club and their invited guests, and they had the spacious rooms tastefully decorated. The music was mainly by the members of the club, many of whom are excellent in that line. The Club sang the opening song, and then at roll call each responded by a suitable quotation. The address of their president, Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan, was a fine effort, a very scholarly production, well given. Mrs. Moss and Mrs. W. H. McIntyre rendered a fine selection on the piano, and following this was an oration, "Woman," by Laura Ober, one of the club's young members. She did herself and her subject great credit. Mrs. F. J. Yesbera sang a solo, "Marguerite," the well known and ever popular song. No need to say it was well sung, or that it was applauded warmly. Edna Davis recited an original poem entitled, "Chautauqua Years," an effort of more than ordinary literary ability. It was given in a pleasing manner and made an excellent impression on her hearers. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sheets then gave an instrumental duet, Mrs. Sheets playing the violoncello and he, the violin. It was well given and the audience were greatly pleased with it. The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. W. H. McIntyre of the C. L. S. C. graduating class of '91. She spoke well and at ease, making a very pleasant impression. This closed the literary exercises proper. The graduates as named in the program for this year, are Edna Davis, Laura Ober and Miss Lizzie Johnson. An hour or two was then given to social enjoyment, a very attractive part of which was the plentiful supply of lemonade punch, daintily served. The night was warm and the punch very fine and cool, and it maintained an unbounded popularity to the last. There was a splendid lunch of cake, strawberries, ice cream, coffee, etc., and everybody agreed that the Chautauqua ladies are splendid entertainers. This is the third class they have graduated, one being in '91 and the second in '93.

Our Long Distance 'Phone.

Auburn has a new line of wires—ten wires—to come in from the south. It is a part of the great "Long Distance Telephone" system, and comes up from Indianapolis and goes to Waterloo, where it joins the great east-and-west line that has been in use for a year or two. That line, the main one, extends from Chicago eastward to New York and Boston. It has a "test station" at Waterloo, at which, as we understand it, the accuracy of the long distance communications may be tested. The line here comes up from Ft. Wayne, and enters town from the southeast part, coming in along East street on the bottom lands, the same street by which the Ft. Wayne branch of the Postal telegraph comes into town. In this case, however, the line goes on north, still following the bottom lands that border Cedar Creek It is probable there will be some sort of a station or office in Auburn. Men have been hauling the poles away from the Lake Shore freight yards for several days. The rates that are charged on these long distance lines, are, we are told, a cent a mile for the usual five-minute talk. This would mean about $8 for a talk with a man in one of the Atlantic cities. We can't see how they will get business at such prices.

The Hub's Boy's Head-to-Foot Outfit

For several months past our readers have seen the advertisement in our columns of "Boys Head-to-Foot Outfit. $5.00." It includes a suit of all wool clothes, Stanley Cap to match the suit, and a pair of stout and shapely shoes. It is sent on receipt of price, or, if the buyer wants to examine the goods before paying for them he sends $1.00 and the outfit is then sent by express with privilege of examination, then if satisfactory the purchaser pays the other $4.00. If not he announces that he does not want the goods and they are sent back to the express company and the Hub sends the dollar back. Nothing could be fairer than this, and the offer comes from one of the biggest houses in the United States.

Pythian Sisters.

There was a public installation of officers in the K. P. Hall Monday evening by the Pythian Sisters, who occupy the room in common with their brethren of the K. P. order. They had made ample preparation for guests and the hall was full, for everyone goes who is so fortunate as to be invited. The evening's work began with prayer by Mr. Wooton, who is a member, and there were literary exercises and music. The singing was by the Auburn Glee Club and was excellent. C. M. Brown, who is a K. P., delivered a carefully prepared address in which he spoke in friendly terms of the many worthy objects which are sought by the Sisters. Mrs. Phil Plum, of Waterloo, recited an entertaining piece, and after more music came the installation. The ladies, led by Mrs. George Lanning, did this part to perfection. The last act, the march of the little flower girls, was very nice. The little misses bore wreaths and garlands of flowers and bestowed them in proper order, and very gracefully on the several newly inducted officers. At the close, all were invited to partake of lunch which had been prepared at the M. E. church basement. At the church, after a tempting lunch, there was an address by Mrs. W. B. Campbell. It was in her usual able manner, earnest, thoughtful and scholarly. And the Pythian Sisters are, through the COURIER, the recipients of many good words from several scores of grateful guests.

WE never knew an old man who did not believe that his failure was due to some friend swindling him. Talk with any young man, and he knows the story of his father being swindled by a friend; such matters seem to be talked of around the fire side.

CONSIDERING that a Chicago alderman will spend $10,000 to secure an office that pays only $150 a year, it is not at all surprising that a New York police captain should pay the same sum for a $2,750 position. Chicago prices seem to be relatively a little higher than New York's, that's all.

SAN FRANCISCO POST: A new industry has been started in Michigan—the insurance of the lives of babes. The parents take out policies on the little ones, and then expose them to disease. That is what the dispatches say, but we can hardly believe it. If it is a fact, we desire to go on record as favoring a material and everlasting hades.

THE politics of Morocco is much simpler than the politics of this country. We are told that the Sultan was assassinated by friends of his son, and that this son is now the ruler. AMONG the most interesting though melancholy souvenirs of the old Kearsarge are the photographs taken on the scene of the wreck by Captain W. H. Humphrey, of Brookline, who went down in charge of the men who were to have saved the old ship, had not the sea and the pirates completed her destruction. The pictures are principally sea and sea birds, with the Kearsarge represented by fragments of the hull and a stray timber or two, like an avenging hand, pointing skyward.

A BALTIMORE lawyer says that Johnson Island, of which both England and Hawaii claim possession, already belongs to the United States. It was discovered 1857 by an American named Parker, who found a guano deposit on it, which he afterward sold to the United States Guano Company. The Hawaiian government afterward tried to take possession, but our government refused to recognize its claim. President Buchanan, by official proclamation, recognized the claims of the guano company, and this act, by decision of the Supreme Court, makes the island a part of the United States.

THERE is growing to be a strong public opinion that the law in its modern operation has been abused so gravely that a good, shrewd lawyer with no case at all can save a client from proper punishment for months and even years, although it is patent to everyone that no valid reason exists why justice should be delayed a day. Legal "pleading" is now such an intricate and many-resourced art that plain, old-fashioned justice must stumble and grope through wearisome and devious pathways before she can clutch an offender who has sharp-eyed counsel to guide him.

THE marriage of West Point Cadet Lang and Miss Kenkle, the daughter of an enlisted man at the garrison, developed a disgraceful condition of snobbishness among our future defenders. Lang married the girl, who is described as pretty, modest and well educated, on the day that he was graduated. Thereupon he and his bride were boycotted by his classmates, who affected to believe that he had disgraced himself by marrying the girl instead of seducing her. This sort of caddishness among the young cubs who are educated at Government expense goes far to explain the shooting of Hedberg, the jim-jammic performances of Lieutenant Maxwell and other recent exploits of "officers and gentlemen."

POISONS are now more generally used by farmers in fields and orchards than was common in the olden time. One caution in their use can hardly be too often repeated. They should on no account be handled by any who have cuts on their hands or sores on their person anywhere into which the poison may get. When thus introduced into the system the poison goes directly to the blood, and is much more effective and prompt than if taken into the stomach. Only a few days ago we read of a farm laborer who got some paris green in a cut on his hand and died in two hours thereafter. The best antidote for paris green poison is oxide of iron or iron rust. A few cents will buy a bottle in liquid form at any druggist's, and now that paris green is in such general use a bottle of the antidote ought to be in every house.

THE Chicago Council recently passed an anti-cigarette ordinance by a vote of 50 to 2. The ordinance is aimed at adulterated cigarettes and absolutely prohibits the sale within the city of cigarettes containing opium, morphine, glycerine, jimson weed, belladonna, or sugar, with a heavy penalty for violation. Careful analysis has shown that most cigarettes contain one or more of the above substances. They are put in to tickle the palate or increase the craving, and their effects are exceedingly injurious. Even pure tobacco is injurious to growing children, but adulterated cigarettes are deadly. The passage of the Chicago ordinance was largely due to the efforts of the President of the Board of Education, who presented convincing proofs of the evil effects of cigarette smoking upon schoolboys.

THE death of Lord Justice Coleridge recalls some circumstances growing out of his visit to Chicago several years ago, when he was given a banquet by leading members of the Chicago bar, and when he gently but firmly intimated that the gush about the greatness of the self-puffing Anglo-Saxon was not altogether pleasing to him. The fact is, as it was then pointed out, Coleridge was more Celt than Saxon. He was proud of the fact, as are most of the West Country English, particularly those of Devonshire and Cornwall. He maintained that the British civilization was Celto-Saxon rather than Anglo-Saxon, and he inspired a notable array of young literary men, including Conan Doyle and Quiller-Couch with that idea. That inspiration has also had its effect in the later writings of Thomas Hardy, and R. D. Blackmore. Lord Coleridge himself possessed literary abilities of a high order. His tribute to a political opponent—Lord Iddesleigh—printed a few years ago in Macmillan's Magazine, is regarded as an English classic. Other contributions are also of high literary merit.

THE case of Erastus Wiman is a sad, a very sad one. But a few short months ago reputed to be a millionaire, he now is adjudged a felon and occupies a felon's cell. A jury has found him guilty of the crime of forgery, committed in the conduct of business for the firm with which he was connected for some thirty years, which had grown up under his management, and with which he was identified as the heart and soul of the enterprise. It is not for those who believe justice to the wrongdoer is the truest mercy to the whole people to say it would have been better for Mr. Dun not to prosecute under the circumstances. He had a perfect right to do so, and probably argued he was only fulfilling a duty to society in prosecuting the man who had built up his business from little more than nothing to a magnitude that ramified all over the United States and Canada. And yet in view of the facts that the abject letter written by Mr. Wiman constituted the clinching proof of guilt, that without it he might not have been convicted, and that he claimed it was procured from him under an understanding it would not be used against him, his case is a most pitiable one. After all, the position taken by Mr. Dun in the case is not an enviable one, nor will it raise him in the estimation of the average business man.

FIERCE CYCLONE DOES DAMAGE IN MINNESOTA.

Several People Killed and Many Badly Hurt by the Twister—Houses Wrecked and Growing Crops Destroyed—Worst Storm This Year.

Were Three Storms.

Southwestern Minnesota and Eastern South Dakota suffered Wednesday severely from a series of wind storms of cyclonic tendencies. They traveled from southwest to northeast, and there were three of unusual severity.

The westernmost arose in South Dakota and traversed the east end of the State, striking Alcona, Mellette, St. Lawrence, and Aberdeen. This storm did no damage to life or limb, but considerable to property and crops.

The central storm was first heard of at Pipestone, in the southwest corner of the State, before 6 p. m. Its record there was one killed, one injured and serious damage to property in its course. It passed Tracy and Echo without serious effects and was next heard of at Renville, where it was forty rods wide and of corresponding intensity of action. There was another victim here besides many injured and a record of devastation for buildings and property. Litchfield was the next line, but apparently the cyclone there developed several hours later. Two were killed and many injured. The northernmost point in the central part of the storm's path was Collegeville, in Stearns County.

The eastern end started in Windom, Minn., about half-past seven. It reached Sleepy Eye shortly before 8 o'clock. Its intensity was incalculable. At least one was killed and a number injured. It next struck Glencoe, where its work was death-dealing.

Minneapolis caught the tail end of its blow, and it was still twisting. It swept across the city, dipping down to the ground near Lake Harriet, where barns and windmills were wrecked and the debris tumbled into the boulevard. The cyclone did not dip down to the ground again until it reached the outskirts of Northeast Minneapolis, where the house of a gardener named Lemke was lifted completely from its foundations and unroofed. Mrs. Lemke and her daughter were badly bruised. Fortunately the cyclone did not dip to the surface, except in the outskirts of the city. Had these dips occurred in the more thickly populated portions great loss of life would have resulted.

CAREER OF CRIME.

Mrs. Lizzie Halliday Sentenced to Die in the Electric Chair.

The conviction and sentence to death by electricity of Mrs. Lizzie Halliday at Monticello, N. Y., ends one of the most remarkable cases on record in the matter of number of crimes committed by the convicted woman. There are many who believe her insane and in fact this was the defense. It is almost inconceivable that any human being could have committed the crimes Mrs. Halliday is charged with, crimes so brutal and apparently committed for the one purpose of satiating her lust for blood. Readers of this paper will recollect the main details of Mrs. Halliday's life, and the crimes of which she is accused, how she is said to have killed one husband, almost poisoned another and married a third after he had driven his wife to suicide; how she committed arson, causing the burning of nearly a dozen people for a few hundred dollars when she was not more than 20 years old, and finally how she married old Paul Halliday. She locked his idiot son in a barn and set fire to the building, burning it to the ground. She admitted afterward to her husband that she did this to get rid of the young man. Then came the crimes for which she has been convicted. In the latter part of last August Paul Halliday disappeared, and while searching for him neighbors found the murdered bodies of Mrs. McQuillan and her daughter in the Halliday barn. This was in September, and a few days later the remains of old Halliday were found fearfully mutilated, and it was charged his wife was guilty of his death.

LIZZIE HALLIDAY.

THE HALLIDAY FARM HOUSE.

For a long time after her imprisonment Mrs. Halliday refused to eat, and it was necessary for the jail physician to feed her with liquid food. Last November she tried to strangle Sheriff Beecher's wife. Then she set fire to her bedclothes and in December tried to kill herself by cutting her throat with broken glass. It has been necessary to keep her chained to the floor for several months.

REPUBLICAN LEAGUE MEETS.

Annual Convention Held in Denver—Will Next Meet in Cleveland.

Broadway Theater in Denver was crowded on the assembling of the Republican National League convention. The theater was handsomely decorated. Flags and bunting were draped from the gallery, with portraits of Lincoln and Grant at the rear of the stage, and between them a representation of an immense silver dollar. The convention was called to order by President Tracy. After prayer, President F. C. Goudy, of the Colorado Republican League, welcomed the delegates; the Nebraska Glee Club sang a taking new campaign song, after which National President W. W. Tracy, of Springfield, Ill., delivered his annual address. He devoted a good deal of his speech to the tariff and the financial question.

The roll call, which followed the president's address, showed that forty States and Territories were represented, the largest in the history of the organization. Some of the delegations were very large. Iowa reported fifty-four; Kansas, fifty-one; Minnesota forty-four; Mississippi, fifty; Wyoming, fifty delegates and sixty visitors. When Oregon was called the chairman answered: "Here with 16,000 majority." Vermont answered: "Here with 20,000 majority."

In the afternoon the doors were thrown open to the public after the delegates were seated. The venerable Henry B. Blackwell, of Massachusetts, offered a woman suffrage resolution, which went to the Committee on Resolutions. Delegate Herrington, of Arizona, introduced a free coinage resolution and ex-Gov. Prince, of New Mexico, submitted resolutions demanding the admission of New Mexico to Statehood and favoring a bimetallic monetary system. A number of other resolutions on various topics were offered and referred.

Hon. John M. Thurston was called temporarily to the chair and was obliged to yield to a demand for a speech. Letters of regret were then read from Senators Lodge and Cameron, Hon. Thomas B. Reed, Hon. Robert T. Lincoln and others. J. S. Clarkson sent a telegram saying that imperative business matters alone prevented his attendance.

After an extended address by ex-Congressman Moore on "Republicanism in the South," the convention adjourned for the day.

The third session of the convention of the National Republican League was attended by a larger crowd than the opening meeting. A platform was adopted denouncing the Wilson bill and recommending the use of both gold and silver as money metals.

Mr. Tracy, president, and Mr. Humphrey, secretary, were unanimously reelected. One vice president from each State league and an executive committee, consisting of one member from each State league, were elected, and to the executive committee was left the duty of selecting a treasurer and the time for holding the next convention. The committee appointed to select the place at which the next convention shall be held submitted a report recommending Des Moines. This was the signal for a sharp skirmish. The report of the committee was ignored and a number of cities were proposed. Finally a vote was taken, the result being the choice of Cleveland, Ohio, by a vote of 813 to 784. The convention then adjourned sine die.

TO CIRCLE THE GLOBE.

A Crusade of Temperance Reformers, Armed with a Giant Document.

Some years ago the Women's Christian Temperance Union caused to be circulated a petition which aimed to suppress the liquor traffic. It was then determined that when a certain number of names should have been affixed to this petition Miss Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset should be a deputation to visit the various Governments of the world and lay before them this polyglot document. Two million signatures are now attached to the paper, as well as the attestations of various societies, representing 2,000,000 more, and it is believed by those interested that the time is ripe for the dream to be fulfilled. Miss Willard and Lady Somerset have arranged with Rev. Dr. Lum, of London, for a nine months' tour of the world. It is expected that 100 people will be induced to make the trip, and a special steamer will be chartered.

FRANCES WILLARD AND LADY SOMERSET. (Leaders of the crusaders.)

The crusade will commence at the annual convention of the W. C. T. U. to be held in Cleveland next October. The American and Canadian delegation will proceed from Cleveland to Washington, where the polyglot petition will be presented to the President of the United States. The party will sail from New York for London immediately after, and uniting with the English contingent, will participate in a tremendous demonstration at Exeter Hall. After leaving London the first stop will be made at Rome, where the petition will be presented to the King of Italy and to his holiness Pope Leo XIII. From Rome the party will proceed to Greece and from there to Jerusalem, where the petition will be presented to the patriarch of Jerusalem. Cairo will be the next objective point and the document will be shown to the Khedive of Egypt. Turkey will also be on the list of countries to be visited, and after leaving Europe India will engage the attention of the party, likewise Ceylon and Siam. Australia will be the next point and each colony in turn be visited. China and Japan will wind up the tour of the foreign countries and then the party will return to this country. All of the principal objects of interest in the places touched by the party will be visited, and, as the petition will be shown in every country, it is thought that the benefits that will result will bring about a temperance reform throughout the whole world that will be most far-reaching in its effects.

THE SHIP THAT WILL CARRY THE CRUSADERS.

INCOME TAX STANDS.

Senate Defeats Hill's Motion to Strike Out the Section.

The income tax section of the tariff bill was completed by the Senate about 12:30 on Thursday. As the end was neared, Senators Vest and Harris grew nervously anxious. Senator Brice was in the chair, and Senator Harris quietly glided up to him and admonished him to hasten the decisions of questions as fast as possible. Senator Hill entered a motion to strike out the income tax provision. He gave notice in a very emphatic manner that if the income tax should become a law its validity would be tested in the courts. Senator Hill's motion was defeated by a vote of 24 to 40. Hill, Smith, and Murphy, Democrats, voted to strike out. McPherson, who was absent, was paired to vote yea. Six Republicans voted against the motion. These were: Hansbrough, Mitchell, of Oregon; Pettigrew, Power, Shoup and Teller. Senator Morrill announced that he was paired with McPherson, but as both would vote the same way, in favor of striking out the income tax, he would vote aye. Smith then transferred his pair with Dubois to McPherson and Smith voted aye. The Democrats say they are not surprised, as they had the assurance all along of at least six or eight Republican votes for the tax.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

TERM CANNOT APPLY TO THE INCOME TAX.

The Reimposition of This Tax Is a Step Toward Equalizing the Burdens Between the Rich and the Poor—General Political Comment.

Not a Class Measure.

Senator Hill and the other opponents of the income tax never tire of calling it "class legislation." Inasmuch as this tax is levied upon incomes, not upon men, the epithet does not fit. The income-tax-paying class will not be the same for any two years. Some who are fortunate enough to be eligible one year will drop out the next, much to their sorrow. Others who are too poor to be assessed this year, through greater prosperity will be liable next year. The hardship is in not having an income large enough to tax—not in paying a trifle upon superabundance. The real victims of class legislation ever since the close of the war have been the great mass of poor people, who are taxed in their poverty upon their necessaries.

During the war there was created a vast and intricate system of taxation which of necessity took tribute from everybody. The banks were taxed, incomes were taxed, manufacturers were taxed, corporations were taxed, the owners of watches and carriages paid taxes on these luxuries, checks were taxed, while the poor were taxed upon nearly everything that they ate, drank or wore. When the war ended one after another of the taxes on wealth and luxury were repealed, until now only the taxes on spirits and tobacco—the luxuries of the poor—are left. The revenue duties on tea and coffee were removed, but beyond this no relief was given to the poor. Indeed, the tariff taxes were raised repeatedly and steadily until the McKinley bill exceeded the average of the highest war tariff.

The whole burden of national taxation rests upon consumption. And as the amount of necessaries required to sustain existence is nearly the same for poor and rich, the result is a great inequality of taxation. Men pay not according to their ability to pay, or to the benefits which they receive from the government, but by an arbitrary process that oppresses the many for the advantage of the few. The reimposition of the income tax is, as Senator Sherman said in 1870, a step towards "equalizing the burdens between the rich and the poor." It is but a short step. It wrongs none. It will relieve many.

Why People Trade.

There is another thing, which is not so clear to me. How is it that free trade, with foreign nations that pay low prices for labor, can benefit all? How can it but reduce wages to a level with those pauper-labor countries?

First—Labor does not cost more in one country than another as long as immigration is free; that is, wages may be higher in one place than in another, but they cannot remain so, unless the work turned out is in proportion. If high wages meant high cost of production, the converse would be true—low wages would mean low cost of production; and no wages at all—slavery—would drive out of existence any wage-paying institution. But the reverse is our experience of the last century. The last relic of that barbaric institution—slavery—was abolished in 1838, because it did not pay—the wage system superseded it. The reason is that, where high wages exist, it pays to employ labor-saving machinery. Besides, the better the material condition of the workmen as a class, the more industrious and intelligent they are—and intelligence will defeat ignorance, in the competitive race, every time.

But even if the cost of production is higher in one country than it is in another it is difficult to see how free trade can affect wages. If an article is too high-priced to be salable in another country, there is no possibility of trading; no one will buy from a foreigner if the article costs more than would a similar one at home. It is only when both parties can gain that a trade is made; and, in that event, it is impossible to show how either country could lose by free trade.

To protect high wages by taxing immigration would be more sensible, however unjust and selfish; but to levy taxes upon them is quite as absurd as to try to increase the sale of an article in the market by raising its price.—S. Byron Welcome, in "From Earth's Center."

Free Trade Mills.

The working man may be glad that there are a few free trade manufacturers in this country who keep their mills running in all kinds of weather and under all kinds of tariff and who do not take advantage of every proposed reduction of tariff duties to compel their employes to accept lower wages.

Nearly all kinds of glass are manufactured by tariff protected trusts. These trusts have kept about half of their mills closed during the past two years and for several months of each year all have been closed. Under the 100 per cent. protection of the McKinley tariff wages have been greatly reduced and many strikes are now on because of threatened reductions. But there is one important exception. The manufacturers of lamp chimneys do not depend upon a tariff for support, have no trust, have not reduced wages, and have given steady employment to labor. The following is from the National Glass Budget of June 9:

"At a meeting of the lamp chimney manufacturers and a committee of the workers the wage scale for the next fire was agreed to. Few changes were made, there was no friction of any kind, and the previous scale was practically continued. The Western as well as local factories took part in the meeting."

One of the manufacturers is Mr. Geo. A. Macbeth, of Pittsburg, who is said to be the largest individual glass manufacturer in the world. Mr. Macbeth has for years been shipping thousands of dollars' worth of chimneys to all parts of the world, including Germany, where are his chief competitors. He says that with free raw materials he could distance all competitors. He neither believes in protection for himself nor for anybody else. He says "Twenty-five years of tariff demoralization has cultivated a socialistic and paternal idea of Government." It causes manufacturers to bend their "energies to seeing how high prices they could get instead of working out the problem of cheaper production."

Such manufacturers and such men will be the salvation of the nation—if it ever gets salvation.

It Went on the Free List.

The Senators from Maine have had much to say about the sectional character of the Wilson tariff bill while making a sectional cry against its transfer of lumber to the free list. In this instance, at least, their sectional charge wholly misses its mark, as they are quite oblivious of the fact that the interest of the South in the lumber trade is much greater than that of Maine. They say that the reduction of duties on lumber in the McKinley tariff has not been attended by any decline in its price and it is very likely that there will be no great reduction of price under the Wilson bill. At any rate, lumber ought to go on the free list. As for the wages of lumbermen, they are as high in Nova Scotia as in Maine.—Philadelphia Record.

Unjust Cutlery Schedule.

The fear of the Senate tariff revisers that they might actually reform the tariff has led them, in some cases, to outdo McKinley. Several such instances occur in the metal schedule. On some kinds of files the proposed Senate duties are higher than the odious McKinley rates. As usual, these high rates are hidden behind specific duties. It is, in fact, about as safe to give a child powder, matches, and a hammer to play with as to put specific duties into the hands of Congressmen who know next to nothing about the industry to be shielded by such duties. While the rates in the cutlery schedule are not usually so high, the duties are even more mixed, and the injustice and temptation to undervaluation fully as great as in the McKinley schedule. A correspondent of Bradstreet's, in the issue of June 2, says that in the revised Wilson bill "the worst feature of the McKinley law is not only revived but apparently reintroduced in more aggravated form. We apparently no longer have four divisions with a mixed duty, but six, the duty running up and down the scale—first plain ad valorem, then mixed ad valorem and specific, then plain specific, and finally another rate of ad valorem simply. Such a hybrid was never seen before. It is not only undeliorable from any reasonable point of view but it is a greater incentive to undervaluation than the McKinley provisions."

The writer gives a table contrasting the recent cutlery schedules. According to the Senate schedule, a knife which costs 29½ cents abroad pays a duty of 25 per cent., while one which costs 31 cents pays a duty of 25 per cent. plus 12 cents, making the total duty 19½ cents—equivalent to 63 per cent. A knife which costs $1.49 will pay a duty of 26½ per cent., one that costs $1.52 will pay a duty of 49 per cent., one which costs $2.99 will pay a duty of 25 per cent., while one which costs $3.03 will pay a duty of 50 per cent.

Chairman Wilson, knowing more of the dangers of specific duties, placed a 45 per cent. ad valorem duty on all knives. This was much too high, but would be preferable to the Senate conglomeration.

Poverty Breeders.

A tariff is a tariff. Imposed by a Congress or a municipal council, it is an insult to the trading occupation, an obstacle to progress and an impoverishment of the people.

Some State tariffs have been—and are still—teaching a class of particularly quick minds what a tariff does against the true interests of humanity. When a drummer finds a legal contrivance to keep his house out of a territory which wants his goods he sees through the millstone of protection.

If the United States refused to deal with Europe, if St. Louis refused to deal with New York, if Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas and Texas towns refused to deal with St. Louis, if the country stores refused to deal with these towns and if the farmers refused to deal with the country stores, we would have a perfect protective system all along the line. And in ten years we would have poverty and squalor all along the line.

Under that perfect protective system the trader would be squeezed out. Every man would give up the advantages of discovery and improvement. There would not even be a book in circulation.

What point in that protective system would be worse than any other? If one is justifiable or useful the others are. Every bigoted protective law is a sale of a public right to a sordid special interest and one such sale is as good as another. Sell one right and there is a check to civilization. Sell all and the sordid interests themselves are destroyed. We then reach the barren level of universal grubbing of roots and picking of wild berries.

Laws to prevent New York from selling in St. Louis or St. Louis from selling in Nashville are affronts to the mercantile class. So are laws to prevent trading with Europe. All laws of that kind are a reaction toward the dark ages of prejudice and slavery.—St. Louis Republic.

Condemned by All.

Newspapers of all shades of opinion condemn unsparingly the avowal of Mr. Havemeyer that the sugar trust makes contributions to both Republican and Democratic campaign committees with the expectation that its interests will be amply protected. The Baltimore Sun (Dem.) says that "the sooner such combination is shorn of the power to pervert political parties and to degrade American politics the better it will be for the country." The Philadelphia Telegraph (Rep.) speaks of Mr. Havemeyer's statement as "brazen," and adds: "This inquiry has gone far enough to reveal a state of affairs in Washington, the contemplation of which must disgust every honest citizen, regardless of his political views." The Pittsburg Chronicle (Rep.) says: "It is now very easy to understand how the trust had the help of both Democrats and Republicans in the Senate to fix the sugar schedule to its liking. Senator Quay and Senator Brice might be wide apart on politics, but when the sugar schedule came up they were cheek by jowl." The Springfield Republican (Ind.) declared that "the sugar trust was not after fire and police protection in Massachusetts, of course, when it contributed to the Republican campaign fund. It plainly had in mind possible legislation by the State affecting its interests in some way, and took note of which party controls the Legislature here."

Canada's Protected Cordage Combine.

"We want high duties in the interests of Canadian labor," cry the apologists of the protective system in Parliament. But the Glass Combine, the Cordage Combine, and other monopolies sheltered by the Foster tariff have closed factories and thrown hundreds of Canadian workingmen out of employment, for the purpose of destroying competition, restricting production, and enabling them to put up prices and rob the people. That is one way of protecting Canadian labor.—Ottawa (Ont.) Free Press.

GEN. LEW WALLACE.

Brief Sketch of a Distinguished Soldier, Author and Lecturer.

Gen. Lewis Wallace, or "Lew" Wallace, as he is generally called, has won such a distinguished position as a statesman and an author as to blind us to his brilliant record as a soldier. Gen. Wallace was born at Brookville, Ind., in 1827. He was educated in the schools of his native town, served in the Mexican war, and on his return took up the profession of law. He was four years in the State Senate, and had won a large practice when the rebellion began. He entered the service as colonel of the Eleventh Indiana Volunteers, and was made a brigadier general six months afterward. Gen. Wallace commanded the Union center at Fort Donelson. He was censured for not having his division present at the first day of Shiloh. After this his services in the West were unimportant. Disliked by Gen. Halleck, he was given no command commensurate with his ability. After the war he was appointed Governor of New Mexico and subsequently Minister to Turkey. His published works are so well known that it is useless to mention them here. Gen. Wallace is one of our most popular lecturers, and takes high rank among American literary men.—New York Advertiser.

NOMADS OF THE STEPPES.

The Wild, Wandering Kirghis of Asiatic Russia.

Roaming over the plains of Southwestern Siberia, from the Caspian Sea to the Russian-Chinese frontier of the Altai Mountains, are the wild Kirghis tribes, the most barbarous people in all of Asia. They are a pastoral people, their chief occupation being the care of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Time and again the Russian government has made attempts to gather them into towns and teach them the arts of civilization, but the free blood of the plains flows too strongly in their veins and they have successfully resisted all attempts to wean them from their wild nomadic life. The Kirghis are of the Turco-Tartaric race, and the men are rather disagreeable in appearance. The women, however, are rather pretty and are delicately formed.

A KIRGHIS TENT.

The Kirghis live in tents circular in form. The tents are made by covering a dome shaped framework of poles with large overlapping sheets of heavy gray felt. The slightly curved rafters which form the roof radiate like the spokes of a wheel from a large wooden ring in the center of the dome, and are generally supported by a skeleton wall of wooden lattice work, in which is the door. The opening in the roof of the tent admits the air and allows the smoke to escade. The furniture is scanty, the people generally squatting on the ground. The table from which they eat is rarely more than half a foot high.

Slight Security.

The practical value of a great man's friendship is illustrated by the following anecdote: A gentleman who had long been attached to Cardinal Mazarin, and much esteemed by that minister, but little assisted in his finances by court favor, one day told Mazarin of his many promises and his dilatory performance. The cardinal, who had a great regard for the man and was unwilling to lose his friendship, patiently explained to him the many demands made upon a person in his situation as minister, and which it would be politic to satisfy previous to other requests, as they were founded on services done to the state. "My Lord," replied his companion, "all the favor I expect at your hands is this, that whenever we meet in public you will do me the honor to tap me on the shoulder in an unreserved manner." In two or three years the friend of the cardinal became a wealthy man on the credit of the minister's attentions to him; and Mazarin used to laugh, together with his confidant, at the folly of the world in granting their protection to persons on such slight security.

Utilizing Nature's Forces.

Enterprising men have a way of growing land along the marshy shores of Delaware Bay. The plan is to cut the dikes and let the tide rise and fall for a course of years over a considerable area, including some upland. It is found after a while that the dikes may be removed considerably out toward the low tide line, and that many acres of arable land have been gained at a small cost. Marsh companies usually exist for the purpose of co-operation in such work, and there are many quarrels over the land of men that refuse to join the company in making a temporary sacrifice of upland for the purpose of reclaiming submerged marsh. The land thus reclaimed is extremely fertile, but it usually yields a crop of malarial fevers when first brought under cultivation.

A Joke on the Squire.

Squire B—— is the "first citizen" of the New England town in which he lives, and is respected by all classes for his sterling qualities and abstemious habits.

Not long since his business called him to New York, which is as much his home as his native place. He hailed a Fifth avenue stage, and, entering it, found it nearly filled.

Sprawling across the aisle sat a man in that stage of intoxication which renders one careless of appearances. Squire B—— attempted to step over his legs, but just then the stage gave a lurch and he stumbled over them.

To the great amusement of everyone in the stage, the man sat erect, and, with maudlin severity said: "Man 'n your c'ndish'n oughter take er cab."—Boston Post.

Care of the Feet.

The woman who wants to have beautiful feet must never permit her sole to enter a slipper. Like naughty children the feet need constant restraining—they must be held in check. The moment they are allowed freedom they run wild. Tight boots and shoes are foolish and abusive, but in any snug leather an ugly foot may be shaped, and a shapely one kept so. Shoe dealers advice women to get ready for their wedding shoes at the spring-heel age. There is no support to a slipper, and so very little hold that the foot always has the appearance of overflowing it. If the ankles are strong wear low or high-cut shoes; if they are weak wear boots. The foot looks slimmer and the ankles trimmer in a kid boot than any style of footwear.

Fair and Beautiful Lands Across the Sea Give promise to the ocean voyager of health and pleasure, but there is a broad expanse of waters to be passed that rise mountain high in rough weather, and grievously disturb the unaccustomed stomach, more particularly if it is that of an invalid. Moreover, the vibration of the vessel's hull caused by the motion of the screw of a steamer, a change of water and latitude, and abrupt transitions of temperature, cannot, without a medicinal safeguard, be encountered with impunity. For sea sickness, and prejudicial influences of air and water, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a standard safeguard. Tourists, yachtsmen, mariners, commercial travelers, and people bound on a sea voyage or inland jaunt, should always be provided with it. How Vandalia Got Its Name.

Some of the names of towns are arrived at in a peculiar way. For example, the town of Vandalia, in Illinois, which was named in a singular manner. The man who owned the land on which the present town of Vandalia is situated was a man without a great deal of education, and wanted a lawyer friend of his, who was a wag, to give him a name for his new town. The wag suggested that the Vandals were a very noted people, and that he should name his town "Vandalia, or the home of the Vandals." It was at that time the coming metropolis of Illinois and subsequently was the capital of that State, and was named Vandalia, the home of the Vandals;" according to the wit's suggestions.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Cultivated Land.

With the exception of Russia, the United States has more cultivated land within its limits than any other country in the world. According to the latest statistics there are in the United States 220,000,000 acres under cultivation, while Russia is said to have 345,000,000.

BATTLE OF WATERLOO

WHERE THE STAR OF NAPOLEON'S DESTINY SET.

It Was One of the Most Momentous Conflicts in the Annals of History—Complete Annihilation of the Old Guard—Napoleon's Flight.

A Scene of Carnage.

The battle of Waterloo was one of the most momentous conflicts in the annals of history. In other battles larger bodies of men had been engaged and greater numbers had perished; but on this Belgian field of blood the fate not alone of Napoleon but of France and Europe was settled; the greatest military genius that the world ever saw—greater than Alexander, Hamilton or Cæsar—was stricken to the dust and the most disastrous war known to modern civilization was ended.

Napoleon, who, after the capitulation of Paris, had been forced to abdicate and who was allowed the sovereignty of Elba, escaped from detention Feb. 26, 1815, and after touching the soil of France made an enthusiastic journey to Paris. Louis XVIII. fled from the throne upon which he was placed by the combined armies of Europe, and without the firing of a shot Napoleon was again the ruler of France. The news of Napoleon's escape astounded Europe, and the allied powers, then holding a congress at Vienna, promptly declared war against Napoleon. Austria, says John S. C. Abbott, contributed 350,000 troops under Schwartzenberg, England and Prussia furnished an army of 250,000 to act in concert under Wellington and Blucher; Alexander of Russia headed 200,000 troops, and the auxiliaries from the other nations raised the formidable armament to 1,000,000 men. Great Britain appropriated for the prosecution of the war, $90,000,000 for the navy, $139,000,000 for the army, and $55,000,000 for subsidies to foreign powers. The whole war expenses for the year amounted to $550,000,000.

HEROES OF WATERLOO.
[From a celebrated painting by J. P. Knight]

Prussian Defeat at Ligny.

Napoleon by incredible exertions raised an army of 280,000 men to repel the million of bayonets advancing toward the frontiers of France. He decided to take the aggressive, march into Belgium and singly attack the armies of Blucher and Wellington before they had time to effect a union. June 13 he joined all his available troops at the city of Avesnes, on the extreme frontier of France, and in an hour his army was on the march. He dispatched Marshal Ney to take possession of the little hamlet of Quatre Bras and fortify his position. By seizing this position the 100,000 troops under Wellington would be cut off from the 130,000 of Blucher. Napoleon would then march against Wellington and afterward against Blucher. Ney set out on his mission and after a two days' march came within a few miles of Quatre Bras in the darkness of the night. Seeing no enemy Ney allowed his weary troops to rest, concluding to defer seizing the position until morning. He then sent word to Napoleon that the place was in his hands. Meantime Wellington had hurried a strong force from Brussels and during the night had seized Quatre Bras. Napoleon believing that Ney was strongly intrenched advanced toward Ligny and there unexpectedly encountered Blucher at the head of an advance army of 80,000 men. A desperate conflict then ensued. All day long the bloody surges of battle rolled to and fro over the plain. As the sun went down Napoleon was everywhere a victor and the Prussians fled, leaving 10,000 prisoners in the hands of the French and 20,000 dead or weltering in blood. During the battle Napoleon ordered Ney to leave sufficient force to defend Quatre Bras and cut off the Prussians with the rest of his army. But that unfortunate marshal was making bloody but ineffectual efforts to dislodge the British and could not spare a man. Had Ney been in possession of Quatre Bras, as he informed Napoleon, and had he been able to cut off the retreat of the Prussians from Ligny, as he would have been had he been in possession of Quatre Bras, hardly a soldier of Blucher's command would have escaped and Waterloo would never have been.

NAPOLEON ON HORSEBACK.

When Wellington learned of the defeat at Ligny he fell back to effect a junction with the Prussian army at Waterloo. Napoleon, after dispatching Marshal Grouchy to harass the retreating Prussians, advanced to Quatre Bras to unite his forces with those of Ney and to follow the retreat of Wellington. The combined French army amounted to 70,000 men.

On the field of Waterloo, some nine miles from Brussels, Napoleon came up with Wellington's army, variously estimated at from 72,000 to 90,000 strong. Within a few hours' march from Waterloo—at Wavre—Blucher had 72,000 men, so that the junction of these forces would give Wellington an army of 150,000. Wellington's idea was to act on the defensive until the arrival of Bulcher and then both armies would fall upon the French.

NAPOLEON'S RETREAT FROM WATERLOO.

At 11 o'clock on Sunday, June 18, the horrid carnage began. Hour after hour the French soldiers made onset after onset up to the very muzzles of the British guns and were cut down like grass before the scythe. The demon of destruction and woe held high carnival. For many hours the whole field was swept with an unintermitted storm of balls, shells, bullets and grape-shot; while enormous masses of cavalry, in fluent and refluent surges, trampled into the bloody mire the dying and the dead. There were now 40,000 of the combatants weltering in gore. The wide-extended field was everywhere covered with bodies in every conceivable form of hideous mutilation. The flash of the guns, the deafening thunder of artillery and musketry, the groans and the piercing shrieks of the wounded, the dense volumes of smoke, which enveloped the plain in almost midnight gloom, the delirious shouts of the assailants as they rushed upon death, the shrill whistling of the missiles of destruction, and the wild flight of the fugitives, as, in broken bands, they were pursued and sabered by the cavalry, presented the most revolting spectacle of war in all the enormity of its guilt and of its fiendish brutality.

In the midst of these awful scenes, when portions of Wellington's line were breaking, an army of 30,000 men, the advance guard of Blucher's army, led by Bulow, deployed upon the plain. To meet these Napoleon dispatched 10,000 men, and so gallantly did they fight that the Prussians were hurled broken into the woods.

Grouchy's Fatal Delay.

Napoleon was then waiting for Grouchy to come up. He had sent different couriers to summon him to the field, but the messengers never reached the Marshal, and he remained miles away, inactive. Time and again officers, hearing the cannonade of Waterloo, besought Grouchy to hasten to the Emperor's aid, but that officer remained obdurate. He not only did not hold the army of Blucher in check, but he would not even advance to Waterloo. Had he done so and hurled his division of 30,000 men against the allies, the result of that battle would have been different.

Anxious as Napoleon was to be sustained by Grouchy, Wellington was even more so to be re-enforced by Blucher. He knew he could not long hold out against the furious charges of the French, and as the day advanced he looked at the distant hills, whence Blucher would come, if at all, and called out, "Would to heaven that Blucher or night would come!"

NAPOLEON I.
[From the famous snuff-box portrait by Delaroche.]

Just at the critical moment when Napoleon was giving orders for a simultaneous attack the united forces of Blucher and Bulow, 60,000 strong, came pouring on the field. Napoleon's wasted bands were now in the extreme of exhaustion. For eight hours every physical energy had been taxed to its utmost endurance by such a conflict as the world had seldom seen before. Twenty thousand of his soldiers were either bleeding upon the ground or motionless in death. He had now less than 50,000 available troops to oppose 150,000. Wellington during the day had brought up some additional forces from his rear and could now oppose Napoleon with numbers three to one.

Charge of the Imperial Guard.

Everything now depended upon one desperate charge by the Imperial Guard before the Prussians, trampling down their feeble and exhausted opponents, could blend their squadrons with the battalions of Wellington. The scene now presented was one of the most sublime which war has ever furnished. The Imperial Guard had never yet moved but in the path of victory. As these renowned battalions, in two immense columns, descended the one eminence and ascended to the other to oppose their bare bosoms to point-blank discharges from batteries double-shotted or loaded to the muzzle with grape, there was a moment's lull in the storm of battle. Both armies gazed with awe upon the scene. The destinies of Napoleon, of France, of Europe were suspended upon the issues of a moment. Not a drum beat the charge. Not a bugle uttered its inspiriting notes. Not a cheer escaped the lips of those proud, determined, indomitable men. Silently, sternly, unflinchingly they strode on till they arrived within a few yards of the batteries and bayonets which the genius of Wellington had arrayed to meet them. There was a flash as of intensest lightning gleaming along the British lines. A peal of crashing thunder burst upon the plain.

A tempest of bullets, shot, shells and all the horrible missiles of war fell like hailstones upon the living mass, and whole battalions melted away and were trampled in the bloody mire by the still advancing host. Defiant of death, the intrepid Guard, closing up its decimated ranks, pressed on, and pierced the British line. Every cannon, every musket which could be brought to bear was directed to this unfaltering and terrible foe. Ney, in the course of a few moments, had five horses shot beneath him. Then, with a drawn saber, he marched on foot at the head of his men. But the charge of the Old Guard was in vain; it was cut down or hurled back broken and decimated. At the same moment the Prussians came rushing upon the field, entirely overpowering the feeble squadrons left to oppose them.

Annihilation of the Old Guard.

Napoleon threw himself into a small square of the Old Guard which he had kept as a reserve, resolving to perish with it, but his generals besought him to leave the field, and as he turned from the gory scene he took his first step toward St. Helena. This one square, acting as a rear guard, covered the flight of the army. The Prussians and the English pressed it on three sides, pouring into its bosom the most destructive discharges. Squadrons of cavalry plunged upon it, and still it remained unbroken. The English and Prussians, admiring such heroism and weary of the butchery, suspended for a moment their fire and sent a flag of truce demanding a capitulation. Gen. Cambronne returned the immortal reply, "The Guard dies, but never surrenders." A few more volleys of bullets from the infantry, a few more discharges of grape-shot from the artillery, mowed them all down. Thus perished, on the fatal field of Waterloo, the Old Guard of Napoleon.

The allied armies pressed on to Paris; Napoleon a second time abdicated, and on Oct. 16, 1815, he began his exile in St. Helena. On the field of Waterloo the star of his destiny had forever set!

In the Streets of Philippopolis.

Besides the usual open-fronted shops which are found in every Bulgarian town, and where at Philippopolis you may buy old arms (and new ones, for that matter), such as damascened yataghans, knives, etc., at a very reasonable price, a peep into one or two stores of a better description gives one a very fair idea of the food industries of Bulgaria. There you may see cheese of native manufacture packed in large sheepskins, salt from Bourgas, very fair soap made in Philippopolis, and all more or less scented, for toilet or household use, indigenous grains, paprika, etc. In the streets you meet men called "Bozadji," who sell a drink made from millet. They carry a tray at their waists, on which stand mugs and tin vessels containing the drink referred to, Bouza. The streets, too, are interesting on account of the costumes of the various nationalities one encounters. The Bulgarians dress rather quietly, and their distinguishing mark is the "kalpak," their head-dress, but the Turkish men are a marvel of bright colors. Here is one of them: He wears a red fez surrounded by a small bluish turban, a print jacket without sleeves, colored pale pink with a flowered pattern of the same color, but darker; through the armholes his arms clothed in white shirt-sleeves protrude; round his waist is a very broad scarlet waistband or thin shawl, in which his knife is half concealed; dark-blue trousers, white stockings, and sandals. So far as the sexes are concerned, the order of nature is reversed. Look at that Turkish woman as she moves stealthily along, apparently afraid of being seen; from the top of the head to the shoulders, and a little way down the bosom, she is wrapped in a thick white muslin veil or shawl, with only her eyes and nose visible; the rest of her body is a black sack, partaking of the character of a barrister's gown. If you meet a Turkish woman on the high road coming from her field work, she draws her shawl or anything else she can lay hands on over her face until you are past, and so deprives you of admiring a face, which, I am told (for of course I have never been permitted to see one), in nine cases out of ten, is more attractive concealed than exposed! You see little Turkish boys, too, acting as bootblacks in the streets of Philippopolis, but no beggars.

About Footwear.

American workingmen are more lightly shod on the average than those of Europe, and nothing excites more scorn and astonishment in this country than the heavy boots and shoes brought over by immigrants. Shoes thickly studded with hob-nails last perhaps three times as long as the lighter footgear, but the American workingman would feel himself clogged and hampered by such foot weights.

No Barbers There.

Among the Ainu tribe, in Japan, a beard is considered so necessary to beauty that the women tattoo their faces to make up for their beardlessness.

A Cold Air Machine.

It was a hot day. It is not necessary to say how hot. Everybody knows what a hot day is without any further description or explanation. It was a hot day, then, when a man came into the editor's room and cast himself into a chair in an abject condition of hopeless disappointment.

"What's the matter?" inquired the editor as he drew his shirt sleeve across his soaking forehead.

"You know that cold blast invention of mine?" moaned the man; "that one I paid you 75 cents a line to write up for me, and spent $1,000 in advertising generally?"

The editor nodded.

"You remember how I said in the public prints that by introducing it into residences and offices the delightful temperature of a spring morning could be maintained all summer?"

The editor nodded.

"Well," the man groaned, "it's no good after all."

"How no good?" and the editor looked sorry and sympathetic.

"Just no good, that's all," sighed the inventor. "I put one in a flat uptown and as long as the weather was cool, it did nicely, but as this confounded hot spell got hotter, we had to force the cold air faster through the pipes, until, by Jove, the friction of the rushing atmosphere made the pipes so hot that by the time the air reached the register it was at a temperature of 100 degrees, and that last hot afternoon we came mighty near setting the flat on fire."

"What are you going to do about it?" inquired the editor kindly, after a few moments.

"Do about it? Do about it?" exclaimed the man, with a glitter in his eyes, "what shall I do? Send it up to Greenland, I guess, to thaw holes in the Arctic circle," and he raised himself from the chair and stumbled out of the office.

Street Courtesies.

When a traveller visits the second city in Mexico, Guadalajara, and witnesses the refined courtesies practiced by the male conductors on the street cars there he is greatly surprised. Imagine yourself intering a street car in New York or any other city in the United States and before taking your seat bowing, hat in hand, to your fellow passengers, none of whom you have ever seen before. Then suppose yourself arrived at your destination. You rise, smile a friendly farewell to the car in general, shake hands with the conductor, and with a polite inclination of the head take leave of the driver. The number of times I have witnessed such exhibitions of politeness convince me that it is one of the customs of the country.

Making Eyelashes.

It was the Parisian women who were accredited two or three years with the objectionable practice of injecting perfume under the skin, by which the very blood became aromatic, and now to them is ascribed another process, less objectionable, perhaps, but still very questionable. It is a method by which false eyelashes may be made. A fine needle threaded with dark hair, is drawn through the skin of the eyelid, forming long loops, and after the operation is over—which it is said is painless—there remains a beautiful fringe to veil the wearer's eyes.

Australia's New Industrial Problem.

A rather startling industrial development is reported from Victoria, where women have been substituted for men at no fewer than 200 railway stations. The result has been a saving of $150,000 a year in salaries. The average wage paid to a station mistress is $300 per year, whereas "the objectionable male" used to receive $750. But, as the Sydney Telegraph asks: "How is the Victoria woman going to support a husband and family on $100 a year?"—London Globe.

According to Circumstances.

More than a suspicion of cannibalism hangs about the advertisement of a St. Louis man: "Wanted a good girl to cook, and one who will make a good roast or broil and will stew well." Almost as barbarous is a farmer in New York, who posted this notice in his field: "If any man's or woman's cows or oxen gits in these oats, his or her head will be cut off, as the case may be."

"HEAR, hear," is perhaps the most familiar interjection heard during debates in the House of Commons, but how few members know the origin of the phrase. It will be a surprise to many to know that the earliest instance of its use is to be found in II Samuel, xx., 16: "Then cried a wise woman out of the city, 'Hear, hear.'"

TO PASS the time pleasantly in church Morris Whittington and James Brow of Baltimore, supplied themselves with pocketfuls of peanuts and audibly munched them during the service. They were requested to desist, but without avail. Then they were arrested and each fined $10 and costs.

EVERY man believes that he is the only man who gets punished for his sins.

Women as Tea Tipplers.

The statement that the prevalence of insanity in Ireland is largely attributed to the consumption of much ill-brewed tea, has some significance out of Ireland. With it may be coupled the complaint of a husband that he found his wife "tea tipsy" after each one of her "days at home," until she gave up the practice of taking a cup with every visitor. In the latter case the tea was probably not intended to be ill-brewed, but unless it is made fresh every few minutes there must be distilled in the course of a well-attended afternoon a good many cups of harmful tea. The kitchen needs a close watch in this regard. Many pale, anæmic women in domestic service, owe their poor health a most wholly to the practice of incessant tea drinking. The kitchen teapot is perennially on the range. It simmers and stews all day, is filled with water as it is drunk out and the decoction grows stronger and more bitter as the final properties of the leaves are developed.—New York Times.

The Scholar and the Parrot.

A learned scholar possessed a parrot which was always in his study. It sat upon the back of his chair and picked up some phrases in Greek and Latin as well as some of the wise comments the scholar muttered as he pored over his books. Every day students came to the scholar in pursuit of knowledge.

It happened that the scholar fell sick, and for many a day was unable to attend his class. On recovering, he turned to his study and found the parrot from its perch on the back of his chair holding forth to a much augmented class, which stood lost in admiration.

"My friends," said the scholar, "to seem to know a thing, contents you more than to know it really. I resign my charge, and henceforth the parrot shall be your teacher."

And, strange to say, when the scholar left them with the parrot the students were well pleased.—St. Nicholas.

Survival of an Old Superstition.

The old theory that lighted fires in the streets had power to drive away a pestilence has long been exploded, but the Mayor of Bordeaux evidently believes there are occasions when public fires of this kind may be used with advantage. It appears that there is much poverty just now in Bordeaux, as alas, elsewhere, and the Mayor, being seized with pity for the condition of the unemployed, has had huge coal fires placed in certain parts of the city during the recent severe weather. The fires, which were placed, of course, only in the poorer quarters, gave much satisfaction, and thousands availed themselves, while some people even did their cooking by them.—London Daily News.

Burial Customs of the New Zealanders.

The New Zealanders have a singular burial custom, and one that is essentially the same as that of the Parsees of the orient. Unlike the latter, they bury their dead in the earth, but leave them there only long enough for the flesh to decay. When nothing is left but the bones these are carefully cleaned and laid away in natural caves or artificial tombs. The crime of grave robbing or of disturbing the bones of the dead after they have been cleaned and put away is always punished by death in New Zealand and throughout Polynesia.—St Louis Republic.

Just as Recommended

Last fall I was taken with a kind of summer complaint, accompanied with a wonderful diarrhœa. Soon after my wife's sister, who lives with us, was taken in the same way. We used almost everything without benefit. Then I said, let us try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which we did, and that cured us right away. I think much of it, as it did for me what it was recommended to do. John Hertzler, Bethel, Berks Co., Pa. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 30

Relieves a Cold

"One of my customers came in to-day and asked me for the best cough medicine I had," says Lew Young, a prominent druggist of Newman Grove, Neb. "Of course I showed him Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and he did not ask to see any other. I have never yet sold a medicine that would loosen and relieve a severe cold so quickly as that Remedy does. I have sold four dozen of it within last sixty days and do not know of a single case where it failed to give the most perfect satisfaction." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 30

One word describes it—"perfection." We refer to DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures obstinate sores, burns, skin diseases and is a well known cure for piles.

Held Up by Strikers.

It is not often that we in the humdrum country places meet with any exciting experiences. But one never knows what to expect. Or as someone else has said, "It is the unexpected that always happens." We went up to Chicago last week just as the strike and the Pullman boycott were fairly under way. On reaching South Chicago, the trouble began, though it was not serious enough to stop the train. Still there were little delays here and there, and waits of a few minutes at every crossing, and at about all the switches. As the engine slowed up a man or two could be seen climbing into the cab and talking to the engineer. After a little the train would start on slowly, and go ahead till another such place was reached. And so on till we landed in the Grand Central station, where the B. & O. trains land their passengers. It was merely a delay of about an hour. We had two Pullman sleepers in the train. And here was the trouble. The car builders of the great Pullman sleeping car factory at Pullman, in the edge of Chicago, had gone out on a strike for higher wages. Pullman is rich and besides had plenty of cars lying idle and did not care to build more, so he did not care much whether the men struck or not. So the strikers, in order to hurt him, are making war on all the roads that use his sleepers. They call this a "boycott," a name that comes from a labor trouble in Ireland several years ago when Capt. Boycott, in trying to get rid of some renters who did not pay, found the peasants cutting of his supplies from all directions, in order to force him to leave. In the present case we find the various railway men formed into brotherhoods and unions, and especially the "American Railway Union," that may include men in all branches of the service. The brotherhood of switchmen especially have been trying to help the Pullman strikers, by refusing to switch trains or cars of these roads that use the Pullman coaches. In the labyrinth of tracks the various roads have in the city of Chicago the switchman is a very important thing in getting trains into and out of the city. On the same evening, Thursday, we started on the return trip with a long train containing, among others, three Pullmans and several mail and baggage cars. We left the big station about five minutes late, and felt our way along very carefully till we had gone about four miles, when as we approached the crossing of the Panhandle tracks near Western Avenue, it was noticed that the train slowed up carefully. Then instead of going ahead across the tracks, it continued waiting. Many passengers finally got out and went forward to see what was the trouble. We found that the switch that should let us across the tracks had not been turned and we could get no further till it was opened for us. This could have been done very easily at that time, as but few people were present. But the switchman sat in his little house, utterly indifferent to the wants of the big, long train, in which a hundred or more passengers were sweltering, for the day was hot, and the acres of tracks and cars of all sorts around us, seemed almost at a melting heat. The trainmen would do nothing, and even the engineer sat on the steps of his cab, less than 100 feet from the switch, and refused to lift a hand. All railroad men belong to some "brotherhood" or order, and were to a certain extent sympathizers with the strike. And they knew, too, that if they opened the switch the switchmen and their friends would yell "scab," "traitor," and make life a burden for them. Soon the crowd began to increase, and while the actual strikers present were not numerous, their friends and even the women and larger children turned out to cheer them on. Two or three policemen were on the ground from the first, and at every place along the tracks coming out of the city, were to be seen squads of these peace officers waiting to prevent any trouble. We were about an hour later joined by eight more policemen, who were brought to assist in keeping order. That was all they were permitted to do. As the crowd grew larger they grew more enthusiastic, and whenever a man was found who did not agree with them there was a hot argument. But there was no sign of violence, for they had everything their own way. We presume however, that if anyone had turned the switch when the crowd was at its best, there would have been serious trouble. The women and children of the neighborhood gathered around and leaned over the fences, or stood among the tracks, while the half grown boys covered the tops of freight cars, flats and gondolas. There must have been nearly 1,000 all told, and as the neighborhood is one of the toughest in the city, the gathering was by no means a very select one. As the long wait increased, the boys in the crowd grew quite funny at the expense of the unfortunate passengers, and kept up a running fire of coarse wit, or what they believed to be witty: "Why don't you go to bed?" "You fellers seem to like Chicago, by the way you stay here." "Why don't you go on?" "Pretty nice part of town. Don't ye think so?" And so on for hours. It may have been quite enjoyable for the denizens of that part of the city, but the sweltering passengers, especially several tired mothers with uneasy children, all of whom longed to get home, did not appreciate the sociability of their entertainers. But it was no use to complain. Patience and endurance were better helps. We had been stopped at about half past seven, and it was half past eleven when we got away. The conductor had sent word up to the city offices, and a special car was brought down to the rear of our train, and a high up B. & O. official, who did not belong to any "brotherhood" turned the switch. We proceeded slowly till past South Chicago, and from there it was plain traveling. This experience will give our readers some slight idea of the actual working of a "strike." As we said at first the strike was begun in the car works at Pullman. Then not succeeding there, they asked other unions to assist by preventing the use of any Pullman cars, believing this would compel the Pullman Co. to come to terms. Since the night in question nearly every road in the country has had trouble. Some cannot run a train of any kind. And by Saturday last, they had to stop running freight, for the strikers had made a fight even on freights. This last idea is a senseless and needless outrage. Freights have nothing to do with Pullman. But millions of dollars will be wasted and tens of thousands of men who are willing to work will be thrown out of a job. Great suffering will result. Hundreds of car loads of fresh meats, bananas, berries, ice, and other perishable things are sidetracked all over the country, their contents being wasted. Fruit may become scarce and high, and may not be got at all. Those who deal in these goods will lose, laborers will not be needed to handle them. Railroads must discharge their men, or let them remain idle and without wages. Business in many lines all over the country will come to a standstill unless the trouble is soon settled. In fact it is largely at a standstill already. And all this because Pullman and his men could not agree on the wages of the men who were building the cars. The workmen probably have a grievance, but holding up trains full of innocent and helpless passengers, and blocking the wheels of trade and industry, and causing immense losses and suffering, will neither gain them better wages nor any sympathy.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recomendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

The Action of Chloroform.

The impression held by Dr. George F. Shrady as to the greater safety of chloroform in young people, relatively, than in old, is of note in connection with the case of a boy patient, about 9 years of age, whom he saw in consultation with two other physicians, and who was to undergo an exploratory operation for a wound of the head sustained in falling down stairs. He passed very easily under chloroform anæsthesia, when suddenly he ceased breathing, the eyes became glassy, and death pallor quickly spread over his face. Bystanders said the boy was dead, and Dr. Shrady was ready to express the same opinion, but concluded to institute artificial respiration at once, and continued it 20 minutes before obtaining any sign of life—respiration had entirely ceased, the radial pulse could not be felt, and the only evidence of life had been a few convulsive heart beats.

Suspension by the feet was tried as well as the inhalation of nitrate of amyl. The case appeared desperate, and though tempted repeatedly to abandon his efforts Dr. Shrady was finally rewarded by the return of consciousness. This was his first unpleasant experience with chloroform, although constantly on the lookout for it. It demonstrated in a striking manner the rapidity and force of its action at a time when danger was perhaps least expected. The patient's heart was sound, the chloroform of guaranteed purity, and every precaution observed.—New York Tribune.

Raining Cats and Dogs.

Many explanations have been given of the origin of the expression "raining cats and dogs." One is that it is a perversion of the French "catadoupe"—a waterfall—"it is raining a catadoupes," or cataracts. Another explanation is that the male blossoms of the willow tree, which are used on Palm Sunday to represent the branches of palm, were called "cats and dogs" in some parts of England, where they increase rapidly after a few warm April showers, and the belief prevailed that the rain brought them.

Others trace the saying to northern mythology, in which the cat is said to have great influence on the weather, and sailors still have a saying, "The cat has a gale of wind in her tail," when she is unusually frisky. Witches that rode upon the storms were said to assume the form of cats, and the stormy northwest wind is called "the cat's nose" in the Hartz mountains even at the present day. Then the dog is a symbol of wind, which in old German pictures is figured as the head of a dog or wolf from which blasts issue. The cat, therefore, symbolizes a downpour of rain; the dog, strong gusts of wind, which accompany it, and so a rain "of cats and dogs" is a heavy rain with wind.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Spit Snake.

There is a snake belonging to the small family causidæ, inhabiting Africa, that is said to have the power of ejecting its venom to a short distance. This snake is called by the Dutch Boers "spuw slang," or spit snake. When this snake erects its teeth, the pressure of the maxillary bone on the gland causes the venom to flow in drops, and it may be quite possible that by discharging air from its mouth the poison may be blown some distance. But this information and observation of these Dutchmen may be taken cum grano salis, or we might fall into the same errors as the ancient Munchausen, Pliny the elder.—New York Times.

Dream Warning of Death.

There is a family well known in literary circles in New York of which one member, an old lady, has had 12 or 13 repetitions of a dream that she was carrying a child a long and weary distance up hills and over rough paths. Whenever the dream occurs, some member of the family dies shortly afterward. It is not connected with previous knowledge of ill health, for in one of these instances the death has been that of a person supposed to be perfectly healthy, sitting at his study table at work, and carried off quickly by a stroke of apoplexy. The last instance of this dream was just before the death of a well known newspaper man in this city last winter.—Chicago Post.

Cats Among the Egyptians.

The tutelar deity of cats was Diana, and according to Plutarch the cat was not only sacred to the moon, but was an emblem of it. Hence cats were treated with peculiar consideration in the land of the Pharaohs, the death of one being regarded as a great family misfortune. Egyptian cat funerals were celebrated with the greatest pomp and ceremony, their late owners showing respect by shaving off their eyebrows and wearing sackcloth for nine days. In the time of Moses it was a capital crime to kill a cat, and we are told by Diodorus how a Roman soldier who killed one was tried, sentenced and finally put to death.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

So many of our readers do not have daily papers that we will give a short account of this deplorable matter for their benefit. After what we said last week, the magnitude of the trouble can be easily seen. At the time we published, all the yard men at Montpelier had struck and refused to couple to cars or do any switching. They made it difficult to get trains by that place. There is a train made up at Montpelier and another at Peru each morning, and they go through here early, meeting at Butler. One or two mornings last week, these trains could not run. About the same time, the Lake Shore Branch here, as well as the main line, had to refuse the most of the freight offered, as they could not feel certain that it would get through after leaving their lines. They were not even certain as to the time when their own lines would be stopped, for about that time some "Union" men had come down from Chicago and stopped at Elkhart and there organized a branch of the "American Railway Union," so as to take in the switchmen and other yard men at that place. It worked as they had intended, for there was trouble at once. At Chicago the Lake Shore had already had trouble. Toward the last of the week, the roads at Fort Wayne were tied up, the men having generally struck, though they could give no better reason than that they sympathized with other strikers. Friday, only a few daily papers came down from Chicago and those got here by express. There was lively bidding for them, and some good prices are reported. A story came from the Junction that one man offered a train boy 50 cents for a copy, but was beaten by another man, who gave him a dollar. We cannot vouch for this, however. We got the usual papers from Ft. Wayne that morning. But on Saturday morning none came on the usual train via the Wabash from South Whitley, to which point they usually went over the Nickel Plate. However, we got them, for the Journal with its usual business enterprise, sent a man across the country with 600 copies, 300 for Garrett and 300 for Harry Trent man at this place. They found rapid sale. All the day before, there had been wild rumors of increased trouble at Chicago, and in the afternoon there went over the wires accounts of rioting and bloodshed. These were confirmed by the Saturday morning papers. The strikers and their sympathizers, including the hoodlums that always hang around a strike to take advantage of the cover it gives them for plunder and crime. The work of direct destruction began in earnest. Hundreds of cars, loaded as well as empty, were fired where they stood on the sidetracks. Some were loaded with half spoiled fruits, meats, etc., and some with goods not perishable. But all went. This occurred at many points wherever a given road had sidetrack on which such cars had been pushed or left by strikers or left by trainmen who were afraid to pull them further. The Wisconsin Central lost 60 cars, the Panhandle 225 and so on. To give our readers a more complete idea of how the work of destruction would start up and be carried on, we clip from a telegraphic report of what happened on the Panhandle Friday evening.

Shortly after 5 o'clock Friday evening an immense crowd of men, women and boys were seen coming from the stock yards toward the networks of tracks at the crossing of Forty-seventh street. The mob was augmented every minute by a seemingly never ending string of the strikers and their sympathizers and about 6 o'clock fully 4,000 people were massed along the tracks from Forty-fifth street. They were the stock yards crowd, and intent on a repetition of last night's destruction and the few police who remained on duty were utterly powerless. They were not even noticed by the strikers who went to work at once. "Down the track," was the cry and with a rush the mob started southward. Bunches of waste were stolen from switchmen's shanties and soaked with the "dope" used in oiling the cars, made an excellent torch. At Forty-seventh st. five car standing on the Grand Trunk tracks were the first to meet destruction. Some of them were loaded. This did not deter the frenzied crowd from their work, and the seals were broken and the doors slid back. A bunch of burning waste was thrown inside quickly ignited the contents, and in less than three minutes the five cars were blazing fiercely. Without waiting to see that their work was complete, the crowd surged on. They kept to the Pan Handle tracks and at Forty-ninth street came upon six more cars. These were fired in a twinkling and on went the crowd. In the Garfield boulevard yards of the company four tracks were full of freight cars, more than half of which were loaded. At this crossing is located a switchman's tower and this was first fired. Then the mob turned its attention to the cars on the sidings, but for some reason fired but one of them—a car of dressed beef which had been started eastward several days ago. They suddenly stopped their incendiarism and turned their attention to tearing up switches. After a number had been rendered useless the mob continued on its way southward. At Fifth-eighth street is situated the station house of the combined roads. This was fired and quickly destroyed. A strong wind was blowing and the flames were quickly spread across three or four tracks which were filled with cars. The railroad people say that there were fifty cars there, forty of which were loaded. All were soon a mass of flames. About thirty of the cars were filled with coal and the heat was intense. Fifteen of the cars contained meat from the big packing houses of Armour, Swift and Nelson Morris. By this time the fire department had been advised of the fires further north on the tracks and had sent their forces there. But on learning of the seriousness of the situation at Fifty-eighth street, they abandoned their fight further northward and came to the scene of the conflagration, which promised to be serious.

Upon the approach of the fire and police departments, the mob turned about and started for the city. On their way to Forty-seventh street they set fire to all cars they had missed in their hurried trip southward. No water could be obtained near the Garfield boulevard yards and the cars are slowly burning up. It was noticed that the leaders of the mob were mostly foreigners, and as they retraced their steps, a few of the leaders started off in the direction of the stock yards.

Soldiers were sent to different points where it was thought they would be needed, but in most cases the strikers avoided them. They would collect at other points, where were cars on the sidetracks, and begin again the word of destruction. At one point they found 350 cars, and these were all burned, and the tracks were ruined by the fire. There were fires in so many places that the firemen could not fight all, and so could save but part of the property. The mob was made up largely of Bohemians, Poles and Italians. And so it went on in various parts of the city: And when men would try to repair the tracks or remove obstructions, they were mobbed and many were seriously hurt.

In various parts of the great city, troops, both from the regular army and the Illinois state militia, were posted, and these, with armed deputies, police, etc., made up a total of about 10,000 armed men. But the city is one of vast proportions and even this force could not protect all points. The mob got wild to destroy things and would rush off to unprotected points and apply the torch or overturn cars, before the police or soldiers could get on their track. They would stop a milk train, or any other, sidetrack it and leave it to spoil, and do a thousand things like that without any cause for it. The original quarrel between Pullman and his men was utterly forgotten and there seemed no other motive for acton but the wanton destruction of property. The value destroyed that evening is said to be over a million. Not far from 500 cars of all kinds, including a very few Pullman sleepers, were burned, and as about half were loaded, it will be seen that the destruction was fearful. At many other points in Illinois and Indiana, all sorts of railway employes struck. At nearly every town in this state, that has a railway division the men went out. This included the men at Garrett. There they had everything ready on Friday and by Saturday morning, all the men were out. They have been complaining over there for a year or two that they did not have work enough. Now they quit what little they had, and did it of their own free will. Queer things happen. Saturday morning the various roads sent out wrecking trains with a force of men to clear the tracks where the fires had been the night before, and replace the broken and twisted rails. The strikers gathered about and interfered, and as they had done the day before, upset box cars on tracks that were still in shape to use if not obstructed. The men who were clearing the tracks had to stop at several points, but would begin work again when police or soldiers came to protect them. Finally, the trouble came, when a wrecking train and crew were trying to clear a track south of the stock yards. The mob kept jeering the men and the soldiers and finally began throwing stones and coupling pins. The militia charged on them and drove them back, aided by the police. But as the soldiers fell back again toward where the men they were guarding were at work, the mob followed. A stone hit an officer of the militia on the head and knocked him down. The captain, who had kept his men in perfect control, then seeing that nothing else would save his handful of men, ordered them to fire. Only one volley was fired, but it was terribly effective. Six or seven were mortally wounded, and one man, a noted criminal, killed outright. As many more were wounded. The mob scattered at first, but again started towards the troops, but were again scattered by a charge, several being wounded by bayonet thrusts. A company of U. S. regulars was near by and several other companies of militia, and these, with additional policemen, prevented any further serious damage at that point. At other points, several times that day, there was trouble, though not much more shooting. The work of clearing tracks went slowly on, but freight trains could not be started, and such as had not been burned, lay on the sidetracks, many with perishable contents, spoiling. On Sunday, the city of Chicago was rather quiet, as the fight of Saturday showed the mob that they must obey the laws as other people have to, still some property was destroyed. But at Hammond, just across the line in Indiana, there was trouble. Seven or eight railroads run through Hammond and there are many employes. In the morning early, they began holding up passenger trains and making the engineers leave their cabs. A company of U. S. regulars came down from the city and drove the mob away. But they would not stay away. Just then the sheriff got a stirring dispatch from Gov. Matthews, saying that state troops were on their way and that the whole power of the state would be used to enforce the laws and punish lawlessness. The mob were silent as he read it to them and kept away for some time But about 4 in the afternoon another train came in from the city with more regulars. The mob overturned a lot of cars to obstruct the track, and refusing to stop, were fired on. One man was killed and several others hurt.

Notes on the Strike.

As the strike was interfering with the U. S. mails and with commerce between the states, it became evident that the government at Washington would have to take a hand in the trouble. Especially as Gov. Altgeld of Illinois seemed to be very slow, if not actually in sympathy with the mob. Several railroads asked the U. S. courts for injunctions to prevent mobs from interfering with their traffic. Judges Wood and Grosscup both granted injunctions and issued restraining orders, directing strikers and all others not to interfere with the running of trains. Soon after, the authorities at Washington decided to make this general in its effect, and Attorney-General Olney sent out similar notices. President Cleveland also notified the commanders of the regular army to be ready to help to enforce the order if needed. Later on the soldiers at Ft. Sheridan near Chicago were moved into the city and camped on the lake front, and at other convenient points. Some were put on guard at the U. S. building, which is the postoffice and custom house, so as to be sure the work there was not interfered with. After a few days, Gov. Altgeld sent Cleveland a letter asking to have the regulars removed as the state troops could take care of things. Cleveland replied that he had ordered troops into the city on the showing of the federal courts that United States interests and inter-state commerce business were being interfered with and that proper protection was not to be had. He hinted plainly, also, that the U. S. had no intention of interfering with the plain duty of the governor to keep peace in the city. So the troops remained and helped materially to prevent bloodshed, and stop the violence and destruction. The trouble would never have gone as far as it has if the governor had promptly checked the first acts of mob violence. Altgeld is no man for governor of a great state. He should be classed with Waite, the man who disgraces the governor's office in Colorado.

Unfortunately men are always found to excuse these strikes, though they invariably result in violence, destruction of property and bloodshed and seldom yield an iota of good to the laboring man.

At Ashley there was a complete tie up Monday evening. A train loaded with passengers was stopped and compelled to stay over till next day. The crew were taken by the local union and "persuaded" to "jine" that body. They were then cared for, but the passengers had to go on on another train, a mail train, no others being allowed to run.

In Chicago a man who had been out of work for six months got a striker's place But the strikers pounced on him, and were likely to kill him, when his wife shot the man who had him down.

Mr. James Barnes,
Auburn, Indiana.

FRIEND:—I suppose you, as well as some of the rest of my friends in Auburn and the surrounding county, will be somewhat surprised to learn that I am again in the East. I like it here very much more than when I was here before. I expect to remain here until next summer and am then thinking of returning to Ft. Wayne and start in the jewelry business. I will complete my course here next April and am well pleased with my undertaking. I left Ft. Wayne April 17 for this place. I am now with the firm of S. M. Mellin and Co., 510 South 20th street, Philadelphia, working here after college hours. Would be pleased to hear from any one in or near Auburn. The weather has been very sultry for past few days. I got two weeks vacation in July and expect to spend a part of the time at Long Branch, N. Y., and Atlantic city. Will close, with best regards to all, I remain, very respy.,

QUIET AT CHICAGO.

PRESENCE OF TROOPS ALLAYS RIOTS.

No Serious Outbreaks Occurring and Everybody Hopes That Lawlessness Is Over—Gompers Won't Go to Chicago—Anarchists Arrested.

The Strike Situation.

A special from Chicago, dated Monday, says: Everything is quiet here and the feeling grows that there will be no more serious rioting. The roads are all moving their passenger trains and a number are starting their freights. It is quite clear that the mobs of yesterday were composed chiefly of idlers from the packing houses and that very few railway men took part. President Cleveland's proclamation and the order of President Debs to his followers to avoid any lawlessness seems to have been very effective.

Two national presidents have arrived in the city and had a conference with President Debs and the other officers of the American Railway Union. They are John McBride of the Mine Workers' Association, and W. D. Mahon of the National Association of Street Car Men. These make five national officers that are now in the city, the others being General Master Workman Sovereign of the Knights of Labor, J. W. McKinney of the Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, and O'Connell of the machinists. The five will have a conference and agree upon some plan for concerted action.

Wabash trains were delayed in reaching the city, and finally came in on the Fort Wayne tracks. The detour was necessary because a bridge at Clark station had been burned out during the night. The bridge was a small affair, but its destruction blocked the road. Rioters are supposed to have fired the trestle during the night. Its destruction was discovered before any trains were due, and the danger of an accident was averted.

At an early hour this morning some boys and idle men who had gathered at the Forty-ninth Street crossing of the Grand Trunk road threw stones at a squad of State militia stationed at that point. The latter first made a charge upon the mob and then, on a renewal of the stone throwing, fired a volley on the crowd. The crowd escaped into the adjoining houses, and it was not learned whether any one was hurt.

The impression was general about military headquarters to-day that the proclamation of the President, to say nothing of the firing of the troops Saturday and Sunday, has had a telling effect on the riotous element as well as on the sensible people who have taken heed and stayed away from localities where trouble is likely to occur. No serious reports of violence by mobs congregating were received at Gen. Miles' office, and this was taken as an indication that the situation was generally quieter.

This afternoon the Baltimore and Ohio road, under escort of United States troops brought in a heavy train loaded with coal for the city water works. It is said that had it failed to get in the works would have been compelled to shut down.

General Miles this afternoon issued a general order to troops directing them, under the President's proclamation, to disperse rioters.

The situation at Cleveland, Toledo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, Danville, and other Western cities is quiet.

Gompers Won't Go.

New York special: Copies of the resolutions passed in the meeting in Chicago, which declared that his presence in Chicago was imperative, were shown to Mr. Gompers, and after he had looked at the question in every light Mr. Gompers said to an Associated Press reporter: "I have nothing whatever to say on the labor question or upon anything the federation may or may not do, but I am not going to Chicago until I am sent for. My duty is now here; and here I shall remain until I am called away."

Pope Leo.

Rome special: In spite of the extreme heat, the Pope maintains his strength and keeps in good health. His holiness has, however, reduced to a minimum the number of audiences to private persons. The Pope is much affected at the spread of anarchy and extra precautions have been taken to protect the vatican against the possibility of a bomb outrage.

Seven Anarchists Arrested.

Palermo special: Seven Anarchists were arrested here on the charge of being concerned in a plot to murder influential citizens. Among the men selected to be killed was Governor Lafarina, who was the promoter of the popular address of sympathy presented to Prime minister Crispi after Lega had attempted to assassinate him.

Will Remain at Their Posts.

At a meeting held at Roanoke, Va., of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, employes of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, it was decided by that body to remain at their posts and to take no part in the strike.

Postponed.

The Iowa Republican State Convention was postponed from July 11 to July 25, and may be later, on account of the strike.

Drowned Bathing in a Pond.

Charles Boggs, of South Kokomo, Ind., was drowned while bathing in a stone quarry pond.

Lumber Destroyed.

The lumber yards of J. H. Worden, Cedar Springs, Mich., caught fire and were completely destroyed. Two million feet of lumber were burned. The loss is covered by insurance.

Abuse of Power.

A dispatch from Sofia Bulgaria to the London Daily Telegraph says that ex-Premier Stamboluff will be indicted for general abuse of power and for opening private letters.

Crushed to Death.

Daniel Flenner, a prosperous farmer living near Millville, Ohio, met a horrible death. He was a member of the firm of Flenner Bros., who owned and operated, in harvest season, a threshing machine and road engine. At noon Flenner was walking along side of this engine while crossing a wooden bridge that spanned a small creek in the village of Millville. The structure suddenly gave way under the heavy weight and Flenner, miscalculating the direction in which the engine threatened to fall, jumped to the right. A second later and his shapeless body was imbeded in the stones and gravel of the creek's channel the engine having fallen upon him. The victim leaves a family of little children.

Women Fight a Duel.

Buffalo (Wyo.) special: The streets of this city were speedily cleared of people recently, who dodged into doorways and alleys to escape stray bullets fired from revolvers in the hands of two women duelists, Mrs. W. A. Angus and Mrs. Eva Bye. Both of the participants in the affair are prominent socially and the affair has created a sensation. Mrs. Angus is the wife of "Red" Angus, the Johnson County Sheriff of "rustler" fame. Both of these woman have been at daggers' points, it is said, over a family affair, and trouble has been expected some time. After emptying their guns they retired to reload, but were prevented from continuing further hostilities. Mrs. Bye had Mrs. Angus arrested.

Aerial Accident.

A terrible accident ended the races at Riverview Park Joliet, Ill., and cost a life. "Prof." Jones, of Bloomington, was to make a balloon ascension and parachute fall. The balloon was anchored between two trees. The wind was blowing strong and the ropes broke. Jones held to the balloon, which went up, dragging him through a tree and tearing his clothes off. At a height of forty feet he was forced to let go and fell to the ground, breaking both arms and one leg. The bones projected in every direction. A doctor in the grand stand pronounced Jones injured internally. Blood was running from his nose and mouth.

Fatal Explosion.

Kamloops (B. C.) special: Word has just been received of a fatal explosion on the North Thompson River, fifteen miles north of here. The steamer Queen left for Lewis Creek with eight persons on board. The explosion occurred when the steamer was near Brickyard. Five persons were drowned. J. E. Sauer, engineer Martin, and Captain Richie were saved. The latter was badly injured. It is reported that there was a quantity of dynamite aboard intended for use in the silver mines. It is thought by some that the dynamite exploded. Other accounts say that the boiler exploded.

Trade Review.

R. G. Dun & Company's Review of Trade says: The interruption of business by the railroad strike is such that the usual signs, bright or gloomy, have little value. The Senate passed the tariff bill in such shape that no one ventures to risk much on its final passage without further alteration. Speculation in products has turned largely upon temporary uncertainties, but meat products have ruled higher, with a threatened famine here and the probability that large quantities will be spoiled at Chicago. With improved crop prospects wheat is depressed 1½c.

Five Men Buried.

A fatal mine accident occurred in No. 4 slope of the Susquehanna Coal Company at Nanticoke, Penn. Five men were engaged in timbering the roof in a tunnel, when, without any warning, about ten tons of coal and rock came down upon the workers. All were buried in the debris. Evan Adams was taken out dead. Joseph Naslieby, George Hanley, Antony Zulick, and George Van Arsen were badly injured. Haney and Zulick died soon after being taken out.

Anarchist Plots.

Rome special: The Popolo Romano states that the authorities are in possession of the proofs of an Anarchist plot directed against Premier Crispi of Italy; President Carnot, of France; Alexander III, Czar of Russia, and other heads of European Governments. The same authority states that all these were to have been killed in the same week.

The Fisherman's Wife.

At Zanesville, Ohio, Charles Burch was fishing in the river at the bottom of a steep bank when he was startled by a crash, and the body of his wife lay at his feet. She had come to call him to supper, and fell thirty-five feet down the bank. Her neck and both arms were broken and she died instantly.

Too Impatient.

Near Portsmouth, Ohio, Wm. Morrison, a prominent farmer, aged 26, was killed by the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of Hiram Sowards, an employe, while preparing for the reception of a gang of hobos from Kelley's army, said to be approaching his house.

Ten Were Killed.

Madrid special: News has been received here of the derailing of a passenger train between Lezana and Bilboa, the capital of the Province of Biscay, six miles from the mouth of the Nerva. Ten persons are reported to have been killed and twelve injured.

Tin-Plate Scale Signed.

Pittsburgh special: The tin-plate scale has been signed at a conference of the manufacturers and workmen. This with the settlement of the sheet scale, affects 16,000 men and forty mills in the country. A general resumption will take place next week.

NECESSARY AND JUST.

THE PEOPLE APPROVE OF THE INCOME TAX.

Senator Hill's Tirades Against It Have No Force—Sherman in Parallel Columns—A Theory Contrary to Facts—The People Not Afraid.

Popular with the Masses.

Senator Hill's speech against the income tax contains nothing new that requires a long answer and nothing old that has not been abundantly answered time and again. The Senator says that the Democratic National Convention did not declare in favor of an income tax. Neither did it declare against it. The necessity for an income tax or for any new imposts was not then apparent. A deficiency of $78,000,000 was not dreamed of.

But the national convention did pledge the party to reduce the taxes on the necessaries of the people. The party cannot do this without putting new taxes on luxuries. For twenty years it has been a shibboleth of Democracy to "tax necessaries lightly and tax luxuries heavily." What more concrete expression of luxury can there be than a superfluous income? A tax on large incomes is the only tax that can result in no possible hardship to any. It is the only form of tax that is certain to fall upon those alone who have the money to pay it with and to whom payment will be no burden.

Senator Hill declaims against it as a "war tax." With $190,000,000 of annual expenditures upon war account how is it possible to avoid war taxes? Is not a 50 per cent. tariff a war tax? Are not our internal taxes on liquor and tobacco a survival of war imposts? An income tax is necessary because the government must have more revenue. It is just because it conforms to the right principle of taxation—to levy taxes with a view to the ability of men to pay and to the benefits which they receive from the government. It is Democratic because it is equitable, because it will enable the government to lessen the taxes upon the necessaries of the people, because it divides the burden according to the strength to bear it.

Tirades against the income tax cannot turn back the tide in its favor. The bill is faulty. The exemption should be raised and the tax made progressive. The logic of law demands this. But even as it stands the income-tax provision is the strongest section of the bill. It is useless to oppose it, as the votes in the Senate have demonstrated.

Our Destiny—Free Trade.

The New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, a trade organ which looks at the tariff question from a practical business standpoint, entirely divorced from party feeling, sums up the inevitable trend of events in words that carry the weight of sound reason and sober sense. "The last thing the supporters of the protective principle can afford to do," it says, "is to ignore the force of the factors that have evoked the majority policy. That policy is the fruit of a natural process of industrial evolution, and not a mere freak of party sentiment. It owes nothing to politics but perversion and bemuddlement. New material conditions have caused it and will perpetuate it; and neither the blunders of the reformers nor the efforts of their opponents can much longer prevent the changed industrial situation from finding due expression in the National statutes. Should the McKinley status be prolonged through the defeat of the Wilson bill or by its early repeal after enactment, the postponement of the reform could be but temporary; for the stimulus of the protective scale of duties would so increase competition and augment production as to force prices to the level the protectionists are so anxious to avoid. By necessities arising from the drift our national development is taking with constantly increasing force, we are destined to become, at no distant day, the leading manufacturing nation of the world. That condition carries with it an indefeasible necessity that prices shall range as low in the United States as in the other great manufacturing nations. When that comes, of what avail can high duties be? We shall no longer have high prices to protect; our interest and success will then depend supremely upon cheapness. With the tendency coming upon us with the speed and force of a tidal wave, what is the true policy for our industrial interests? To demand high duties, and thereby invite an overwhelming over-production for which we have no outlet, or to gradually prepare ourselves for conditions that will enable us to sell in any market of the world? These are questions that deserve the most unbiased and earnest consideration manufacturers can bestow upon them."

A Theory Contrary to Facts.

Protectionists agree that the protective tariff question is entirely a question of wages. It is in this way that they account for the difference in wages between this and foreign countries. They neglect to note that the United States affords an apparent exception to the general rule, that wages are high where tariffs are low and that wages are low where tariffs are high. This is true when free trade England or Belgium is compared with the protection countries of Europe, or when the high protection countries of Europe, such as Italy and Russia, are compared with the lower protection countries, such as France and Germany. In 1890, before New Zealand dropped protection, and before all of the Australian colonies had adopted protection against all other colonies, wages were higher in Australia than in New Zealand. Now, since New Zealand has adopted free trade and a heavy tax upon big land-owners, and since protection walls barricade each Australian colony from each other and from the rest of the world, wages have become higher in New Zealand, and a strong tide of immigration has set in from Australia to New Zealand.

Such facts as these ought to shake the protectionist's theory of wages. Apparently, however, he is undisturbed by the fact that his rule holds true in one case and is untrue in nine cases. But does his rule hold true in the case of the United States? That wages are higher here than in European countries is not denied; but it is denied that our citizens are more protected than are the citizens of continental Europe. Our protective tariff wall is high, but it does not extend around the different States. Inside of this wall is the greatest free trade country of the earth—greatest in extent of territory and of unhampered commerce. Let Europe tear down her internal tariff walls and build one around her whole territory and wages will materially increase all over Europe.—B. W. H.

Why Tom Johnson Is Skeptical.

"Of all the nonsense talked against the reduction of tariff taxes, the claim that they benefit the workingman is most transparent. The effect of these taxes is to increase the price of everything that the workingman sells his labor for, since the money he gets is only the medium with which he obtains what is the real object of his labor. Granted, which is only true in a comparatively few cases, that such taxes increase the profits of his employer. Do employers pay larger wages when they get larger profits? I do not, and even philanthropists do not. In Johnstown, where our mill is located, we have been paying for years in wages 30 or 40 cents a day more than our neighbors. I do not say this with the view of arousing any sympathy or claiming any credit. We did it, not because we loved our men better than others loved theirs, but for the plain business reason that it paid us to do so. We had the pick of the men. To-day we are paying for common labor $1.50 a day, while our neighbor, the Cambria Iron Company, members of the steel-rail pool, is paying 85 cents a day. We do this because we believe that we get a better return by paying $1.50 a day than we would if we paid 85 cents."—Hon. Tom L. Johnson, M. C., manufacturer of steel rails, Johnstown, Pa., Jan. 11, 1894, 53d Congress.

Protection Must Go.

Nothing could better illustrate the degenerate character of the United States Senate than a recent squabble between Republicans and sham Democrats concerning the relative merits of protection by bounty and protection by tariff.

The fight was over the sugar schedule. Senators from the Southern States, where sugar planters are potent in politics, insisted upon having the tariff form of thievery, while Republicans as strongly contended for the bounty scheme of plundering taxpayers for the enrichment of sugar men. The spurious Democratic Senators argued with some measure of truth that the tariff method of increasing profits in the sugar industry is the more popular since it is an indirect tax on the people.

That is to say, consumers are robbed without knowing it, while by the bounty plan there is no attempt to conceal the fact that public money is given to build up a private business. It will be observed that in this controversy, which was conducted with perfect seriousness and gravity, the mere question of right or wrong was eliminated. The problem before the Senators was the economics of public theft—whether it was wiser to adopt the expensive yet safer plan of tariff robbery, or the brazen but less costly mode of bounty pillage.

The spectacle should be a humiliating one to Americans. Democrats, especially, who believe in commercial freedom as one of the unalterable tenets of their party, and who look upon the "protective" theory in any degree or under whatever pretext as legalized stealing, will be more than ever convinced that "free trade and direct taxation" is the one honest policy by which their party can save itself from defeat and dishonor.

To them the pressing duty of the hour is to drive from official life, for all time, Democratic protectionists; men who hold to the monopoly doctrine in principle and repudiate it in name; who prate about the duty of Government protecting us from foreign competition by the lying plea of higher American wages, and the equally false one, borrowed from British Tories, of "fair trade."

Never before has it been so clear to real Democrats that the tariff must be so adjusted or disposed of that private interests shall no longer be tempted to tamper with legislation at Washington. So long as one hog industry may collect from the people one per cent in bounty or by tariff there will be a thousand other hog industries to bully and bribe for an increasing share of the spoils.

At the bottom of this disorderly, corrupting and panic-breeding struggle is the Republican system of special privilege by bounty and tariff, a system, that must soon be wiped out if free institutions in this country are to be preserved.—Chicago Herald.

Sherman vs. Sherman.

(John Sherman in Senate, June 22, 1870.)	(Same Sherman in Senate June 22, 1894.)
Here we have in New York Mr. Astor with an income of millions derived from real estate, accumulated year after year by the mere family pride of accumulation, and we have alongside of him a poor man receiving $1,000 a year. What is the discrimination of rather than pandered the law in that case? It is altogether against the poor man. * * * Everything that he consumes we tax, and yet we are afraid to touch the income of Mr. Astor. Is there any justice in it? Why, sir, the income tax is the only one that tends to equalize these burdens between the rich and the poor.	There was in the income tax a touch of the worst and most vicious form of socialism. In this country, where all men are equal, this tendency towards socialism, this arraying of the poor against the rich, should be discouraged by public men to. With respect to all this talk of the enormous accumulations of wealth within recent years he said he did not believe there had been any accumulation of wealth within the last five years. He sketched the enormous growth of wealth that had followed the building of railroads and the development of the country's resources. But now railroad property was becoming like turnpike and bridge property. Railroads were practically operated now only for the people. Scarcely any railroad stocks were valuable; railroad fortunes were disappearing like snow before the summer sun.

Does Protection Explain These Differences?

Wages in woolen manufactures (census 1890.)—Ohio, yearly, $196; Connecticut, yearly, $335. Connecticut higher than Ohio, 70 per cent.

Wages in cotton manufactures.—North Carolina, yearly, $135; New Jersey, yearly, $255; New Jersey higher North Carolina, 88 per cent. In New York, $216; Massachusetts, $258.

Weekly wages of cotton spinners in Lowell, $9.41; Nashua, $12.53; New Bedford, $12.84. (Table presented by Lowell spinners asking for an advance in wages, October, 1892.)

Pay of common laborer.—Atlanta, Ga., 75 cents an hour; Galveston, Tex., 20 cents an hour.

Carpenters.—Providence, R. I., 25 cents per hour; New York, 39 cents per hour.—Wisconsin Labor Bureau.

Weekly product per worker of weavers.—Germany and Switzerland, 466 yards; England, 706 yards; United States, 1,200 yards.—Prof. Schulze-Gavernitz.

"We pay twice as much for labor in this country as is paid abroad, therefore we get twice as good results from that labor. Labor which brings poor pay brings poor results."—New York Press (protectionist), Oct. 3, 1888.

The People Not Afraid.

The Democratic party won in 1892 because of the boldness of its platform. Its tariff declarations were not ambiguous; they were plain and to the point. The party is in its present lamentable condition because through its leaders in the Senate it has acted in violation of the pledge of that platform. The only way it can win back public confidence is by maintaining the same bold stand or taking a bolder one, discharging its unfaithful servants, replacing them with good ones, and going into the next campaign with a candidate worthy to carry on the great work so well commenced by Cleveland.—Freeland Tribune.

RUIN AT THE FAIR.

SEVEN MAMMOTH STRUCTURES SWEPT AWAY.

Administration's Golden Dome and Corona Fall in Ashes—Manufactures Building Razed to the Ground—Large Portion of the Exposition Grounds Devastated.

A Sea of Flame.

A year ago the Court of Honor of the fair "White City" stood in unrivaled splendor upon the shore of Lake Michigan, and thousands reveled in its beauty. Thursday night it passed away in fiery splendor, and thousands mourned its fall. Blackened and twisted arches of iron, with their girders sagging under the weight of torn sheets of roofing, rear their skeleton forms where the buildings of the beautiful city once stood. Beneath them lie huge mounds of smoldering ruins frosted with a waste of snowy ashes. Tangles of wire the misshapen hulks of fallen statuary and long rows of blistered columns mark the outlines of avenues and drives. The parapets, the bridges, and the wide sweep of staircasing which flanked the buildings have been licked up by the fire to the water's edge. Every other attack of the elements, fire, wind, or water, was as nothing before this all-devouring tornado of flame which swept from end to end and laid low every important building left standing by the wrecker. The World's Fair buildings are in ruins.

Beginning with the huge weather-beaten remains of the terminal station at the south of the grounds, the fire sped rapidly northward, and in the course of its progress completely destroyed the following structures:

Terminal Building.
Administration Building.
Mines and Mining.
Electricity.
Manufactures.
Machinery.
Agriculture.
Stock Pavilion.
Philadelphia Cafe.

One man lost his life in the flames and another received burns from which he may die. Besides these a number of persons received minor injuries.

Saved by a Change of Wind.

The firemen made no attempt to save the buildings after they were once ablaze, but devoted every effort to prevent the fire from spreading. The transportation and government buildings were saved only by the most persistent efforts of the firemen. At one time it looked as if all the buildings at the north end of the grounds would be swept away, but a change of the wind from the southwest to the northwest prevented the flames from advancing.

A dispatch from Chicago says that a few minutes after 6 o'clock Park Policeman John Reynolds saw two spirals of blue smoke curling lazily upward from a window in the southwestern corner of the Terminal Building. Hastening over to the spot he burst into the building through a broken door. A stifling gust of smoke rolled out. Penetrating to the center of the building he saw a point of flame shoot upward from under a stair-case in the corner. Fanned by the breeze from the open door the whole end of the structure was a mass of flame in less than a moment. Reynolds ran rapidly across to machinery hall and turned in an alarm. When he returned the fire was playing hide-and-seek in the ornamental cornices. It had not yet felt its power. By some strange fatality the crew of the World's Fair station was a mile away extinguishing a little blaze at the corner of 71st street and Stony Island avenue. It was a full half hour after the first alarm sounded before the first feeble stream broke into spray at the eaves of the tall building. It was too late. The fire had found its power. The walls of the terminal station which still remained standing gaped wide with cracks through which glowed the volcano of fire within. The flames lighted up whitely the faces of the thousands of spectators who came streaming out of the park from every street. Some of them shouted "Fire," "Fire," at the top of their voices, but they could not be heard above the roar of the flames. The dry building with its lath and staff roof and wooden girders burned like tinder. A billowy cloud of smoke arose slowly until the upper end of the cloud resembled a huge balloon, the top of which was first crimsoned with the rays of the setting sun. Suddenly the northern wall of the building fell with a crash, and there was an illumination of fire-works greater than any that ever graced a summer evening during the Fair. Nothing could stay the flames, and they swept on until all the buildings in their fiery path were in ruins.

THE HIGHWAYS OF COMMERCE.

Some Interesting Figures on American Railway Systems.

There are more miles of railway track in the United States than in all the other countries of the world combined. These are the figures: United States, 172,000 miles; Europe, Asia, Africa, South, Central and British America and Australia, 167,000 miles. The number of locomotives in use on American railways is 85,000; passenger cars, 25,000; mail and baggage cars, 8,000; and freight and coal cars, 1,200,000.

The railways of the United States carry in a year 503,000,000 passengers, and transport 800,000,000 tons of freight. The disparity between the two branches of transportation is much greater than it is in Europe, for the foreign railways carry twice as many passengers as do the railways of the United States, whereas the earnings from freight or "goods" trains, as they are called abroad, just about balance. In this country the earnings from freight business are about three times greater than from passenger business.

The railways of the United States earn from all sources of revenue about $1,200,000,000 in a year. About two-thirds of this is disbursed in expenses, and the balance, $350,000,000, represents the net profit. Two-thirds of this, however, goes to pay interest on bonds of guaranteed stock, leaving about $100,000,000, or one-twelfth of the whole amount earned, for the payment of dividends and for necessary improvements.

PASSED THE SENATE.

MEASURE GETS A MAJORITY OF FIVE VOTES.

Senator Hill Casts the Only Democratic Vote Against It—President and Federal Judges Must Pay Tax on Their Salaries—To Take Effect August 1.

Vote of 39 to 34.

In the midst of intense excitement, after having been debated for three months and one day, the tariff bill, amended to take effect Aug. 1, 1894, passed the Senate by a vote of 34 to 39—a strict party vote, except Mr. Hill, who voted with the Republicans against the measure. The Populists divided their strength, Kyle and Allen voting in favor of the bill and Peffer and Stewart against it.

At the very opening of the last day of the great struggle, says a Washington dispatch, Mr. Harris, in charge of the bill, announced that it would pass that day, or there would be no Fourth of July for the Senate of the United States. Until evening there were no sensational incidents. A hard, but hopeless fight was made by the Republicans under the leadership of Mr. Sherman to place wool on the dutiable list. Through the instrumentality of Mr. McLaurin (Dem., Miss.) the action of the committee of the whole in exempting the salaries of United States Judges and the President of the United States from the operation of the income tax was reversed in the Senate.

A very important piece of legislation in the shape of an anti-trust law was placed on the bill as a rider without even so much as a division. It was designed, as Mr. Voorhees, Chairman of the Finance Committee, said, to insure integrity in execution of the law, it being admitted that any tariff system afforded abundant opportunity for the formation of trusts and combinations.

The galleries were filled to overflowing, many prominent ladies and gentlemen being present to witness the final disposal of the bill, and the scene was truly a brilliant one. Half a hundred members of the House were on the floor. It was amid such surroundings that the climax occurred, when Senator Allen, of Nebraska, denounced the Democratic members of the Finance Committee and charged them with bad faith in taking advantage of his ignorance of parliamentary procedure to induce him to offer the amendment, thus releasing their Democratic colleagues under the caucus agreement from voting for them. He intimated that he had been tricked.

Mr. Vest, on behalf of the committee, hotly denied the charges, and upbraided Mr. Allen. Mr. Manderson, Mr. Allen's Republican colleague from Nebraska, seemed to enjoy the plight of his associate, and warned him to beware before he again allied himself with the Democrats. Mr. Jones of Arkansas also challenged the truth of Allen's statements, and scored him for attempting to place the committee in a false light. For an hour after the excitement caused by this exchange of criminations occurred, the proceedings were extremely dull.

Hill Denounces Income Tax.

As the hands of the clock drew toward the hour of 10 the final speeches began. Mr. Allen, somewhat to the wonderment of the galleries after his outbreak early in the evening, told the Senate why he had concluded to vote for the bill. The most dramatic incident of the night occurred when he took his seat and Mr. Hill arose and in ringing and fervid tones entered an eloquent protest against the "income tax," and arraigned his party associates for being false to their party pledges and their country. The Republicans drew around him as he spoke, the galleries leaned over as he dealt his sledge-hammer blows. When in conclusion he declared theatrically that he would not support the bill a wave of applause, quickly checked by the Vice President, swept over the gallery. A final word of protest followed from Aldrich, Chandler and Manderson. The bill was placed upon its passage and the roll was called.

Upon the announcement of the vote, 34 to 39, the galleries cheered, and amid a scene of rejoicing the Senate adjourned over the Fourth of July.

CHAPTER XVI.

"GRIEF FILLS THE ROOM UP OF MY ABSENT CHILD."

Sir Cyprian had told himself that, in coming to Marchbrook, nothing was further from his thoughts than the desire to see Constance Sinclair; yet, now that he was so near her, now that he was assured of her unhappiness, the yearning for one brief meeting, one look into the sweet eyes, one pressure of the gentle hand that used to lie so trustingly in his own, grew upon him hourly, until he felt that he could not leave Marchbrook without seeing her. No motive, no thought that could have shadowed the purity of Gilbert Sinclair's wife, had his soul's desire been published to the world, blended with this yearning of Sir Cyprian's. Deepest pity and compassion moved him. Such sorrow, such loneliness as Constance Sinclair's was unutterably sacred to the man who had loved and surrendered Constance Clanyarde.

Sir Cyprian lingered at Marchbrook, and spent the greater part of his days in riding or walking over familiar grounds. He was too much out of spirits to join Lord Clanyarde in the slaughter of innocent birds, and was not a little bored by that frivolous old gentleman's society in the winter evenings by the fire in the comfortable bachelor smoking-room, the only really snug apartment in that great bare house. Every night Sir Cyprian made up his mind to depart next morning, yet when morning came he still lingered.

One bright, bleak day, when there were flying snowstorms and intervals of sun and blue sky, Sir Cyprian—having actually packed his portmanteau and made arrangements for being driven to the station to catch an afternoon train—took a final ramble in Marchbrook park. He had not once put his foot on the soil that had been his, but he could get a peep at the old place across the railings. There was a melancholy pleasure in looking at those wintry glades, the young firtrees, the scudding rabbits, the screaming pheasants, the withered bracken.

The sun had been shining a few minutes ago. Down came the snow in a thick driving shower, almost blinding Sir Cyprian as he walked swiftly along the oak fence. Presently he found himself at the end of the Monks' avenue, and under the classic temple which was said to be built upon the very spot where the Benedictines once had their chapel.

Ten years ago that temple had been Cyprian Davenant's summer retreat. He had made it his smoking-room and study; had read Thucydides and the Greek dramatists there in the long vacation; had read those books of modern travel which had fired his mind with a longing for the adventures, perils and triumphs of the African explorer. Twenty years ago it had been his mother's chosen resort. He had spent many a summer morning, many a pensive twilight there by his mother's side, watching her sketch or hearing her play. The old-fashioned square piano was there still, perhaps, and the old engravings on the walls.

"Poor old place," he thought; "I wonder if any one ever goes there now, or if it is quite given up to bats and owls, and the spirits of the dead?"

He stopped under the stone balcony which overhung Marchbrook, on a level with the eight-foot wall. In Gilbert Sinclair's—or his architect's—plan of improvements this classic summer-house, a relic of a departed taste, had been forgotten. Sir Cyprian was glad to find it unchanged, unchanged in any wise, save that it had a more forlorn and neglected air than of old. The stone-work of the balcony was green and gray with mosses and lichens. The frame-work of the window had not been painted for a quarter of a century. The ivy had wandered as it listed over brick-work and stone, darting sharp-forked tongues of green into the crevices of the decaying mortar. Sir Cyprian looked up at the well-remembered window, full of thoughts of the past.

"Does she ever come here, I wonder?" he said to himself; "or do they use the old place for a tool-house or an apple shed?"

Hardly, for there fell upon his ears a few bars of plaintive symphony, played on a piano of ancient tone—the pensive Broadwood dear to his childhood—and then a voice, the pure and sweet contralto he knew too well, began Lord Houghton's pathetic ballad, "Strangers Yet."

He listens as if he lives but to hear. Oh, what pathos, what profound melancholy in that voice, pouring out its sweetness to the silent wall! Regret, remorse, sorrow, too great for common language to express, are breathed in that flood of melody. And when the song is done the singer's hands fall on the keys in a crashing chord, and a wild cry—the sudden utterance of uncontrollable despair—goes up to heaven.

She is there—so near him—alone in her anguish. She, the only woman he has ever truly loved, the woman for whom he would give his life as freely as he would spill a cup of water upon the ground, and with as little thought of the sacrifice.

The lower edge of the balcony is within reach of his hand. The century-old ivy would afford easy footing for a less skilled athlete. To climb the ascent is as simple as to mount the rigging of his yacht.

In a minute, before he had time to think, he was in the balcony, he had opened the French window, he was standing in the room.

Constance Sinclair sat by the piano, her arms folded on the shabby old mahogany lid, her drooping head resting on her arms, her face hidden. She was too deeply lost in that agony of hopeless grief to hear the rattling of the frail casement, the footstep on the floor.

"Constance!"

She started up and confronted him, pale as ashes, with a smothered scream.

"My dearest, I heard your grief. I could not keep away. Only a few minutes, Constance, only a few words, and I will leave you. Oh, my love, how changed, how changed."

A flood of crimson rushed into the pale face, and as quickly faded. Then she gave him her hand, with an innocent frankness that went to his heart, so like the Constance of old—the pure and perfect type of girlhood that knows not sin.

"I do not mind your hearing me in my sorrow," she said, sadly. "I come here because I feel myself away from all the world. At the house servants come to my room with messages, and worry me. Would I like this? Will I do the other? What carriage will I drive in? At what time? A hundred questions that are so tiresome when one is tired of life. Here I can lock my door, and feel as much alone as in a desert."

"But, dear Mrs. Sinclair, it is not good for you to abandon yourself to such grief."

"How can I help it? 'Grief fills the room up of my absent child,'" with a sad smile. "You heard of my loss, did you not? The darling who made life so bright for me—snatched away in a moment—not an hour's warning. I woke that morning a proud and happy mother, and at night—— No, no one can imagine such a grief as that."

"I have heard the sad story. But be sure Heaven will send comfort—new hopes——"

"Don't talk to me like that. Oh, if you knew how I have had Heaven and the Bible thrown at my head—by people who talk by rote! I can read my Bible. I read of David and his great despair: how he turned his face to the wall, how he wept again for Absalom; and of the Shunamite woman who said: 'It is well,' but David had many children, and the Shunamite's child was given back to her. God will not give my darling back to me."

"He will—in heaven."

"But my heart is breaking for want of her here. She will be an angel before the throne of God—not my Christabel. I want my darling as she was on earth, with her soft, clinging arms—not always good—naughty sometimes—but always dearer than my life."

What could Sir Cyprian say to comfort this bereaved heart? He could only sit down quietly by Constance Sinclair's side, and win her to talk of her sorrow, far more freely and confidingly than she had talked to her father; and this he felt was something gained. There was comfort in this free speech—comfort in pouring her sorrow into the ear of a friend who could verily sympathize.

"Dear Mrs. Sinclair," said Sir Cyprian, gravely, when he had allowed her to tell the story of her bereavement, "as a very old friend—one who has your welfare deep at heart—I must entreat you to struggle against this absorbing grief. I have seen your old friend Doctor Webb, and he assures me that unless you make an effort to overcome this melancholy, your mind as well as your body will suffer. Yes, Constance, reason itself may give way under the burden you impose upon it. Perhaps no one else would have the courage to speak to you so plainly, but I venture to speak as a brother might to a fondly loved sister. This may be our last meeting, for I shall go back to Africa as soon as I can get my party together again. You will try, dear friend, will you not, for my sake, for the sake of your husband——"

"My husband!" she exclaimed, with a shudder. "He has billiards, and guns, and racehorses, and friends without number. What can it matter to him that I grieve for my child? Somebody had need be sorry. He does not care."

"Constance, it would matter very much to your father, to all who have ever loved you, to yourself most of all, if you should end your life in a lunatic asylum."

This startled her, and she looked up at him earnestly.

"Unreasonable grief sometimes leads to madness. Despair is rebellion against God. If the Shunamite in that dark day could say 'It shall be well,' shall a Christian have less patience—a Christian who has been taught that those who mourn are blessed, and shall be comforted. Have faith in that divine promise, and all will be well."

"I will try," she answered gently. "It is very good of you to reason with me. No one else has spoken so frankly. They have only talked platitudes, and begged me to divert my mind. As if acted charades, or billiards, or bezique, could fill up the gap in my life. Are you really going to Africa very soon?"

"Early in the new year, perhaps; but I shall not go till I have heard from some reliable source that you are happy."

"You must not wait for that. I shall never know happiness again in this world. At most I can but try to bear my lot patiently and put on cheerful looks. I shall try to do that, believe me. Your lessons shall not be wasted. And now, I suppose, we must say good-by," looking at her watch; "it is time for me to go back to the house."

"I will not detain you; but before I go I must apologize for my burglarious entrance by that window. I hope I did not frighten you?"

"I was only startled. It seemed almost a natural thing to see you here. I remember how fond you were of this summer-house when I was a child. I have so often seen you sitting in that window smoking and reading."

"Yes, I have spent many an hour here, puzzling over the choruses in 'Prometheus,' and I have looked up from my book to see you scamper by on your pony."

"Pepper, the gray one," cried Constance, absolutely smiling; "such a dear pony! We used to feed him with bread and apples every morning. Ah, what happy days those were!"

It touched him to the core of his heart to see the old girlish look come back in all its brightness. But it was only a transient gleam of the old light which left a deeper sadness when it faded.

"Good-by, Constance," he said, taking both her hands. "I may call you that for the last time."

"Yes, and when you are in Africa—in another world, far from all the false pretenses and sham pleasures that make up life in this—think of me as Constance, the Constance you knew in the days that are gone—not as Gilbert Sinclair's wife."

He bent his head over the unresisting hands and kissed them.

"God bless you and comfort you, my Constance, and give you as much happiness as I lost when I made up my mind to live without you!"

He opened the window, and swung himself lightly down from the balcony to the turf below.

CHAPTER XVII.

A BALCONY SCENE.

Gilbert Sinclair and his chosen set—the half-dozen turfy gentlemen with whom he was united by the closest bond of sympathy—had spent this December morning agreeably enough at a rustic steeple-chase nine miles from Davenant. The race was an event of the most insignificant order—unchronicled in Ruff—but there was pleasure in the drive to and fro on Mr. Sinclair's drag through the keen frosty air, with an occasional diversion in the shape of a flying snow storm, which whitened the men's rough overcoats and hung on their beards and whiskers.

Just at the hour in which Sir Cyprian and Constance were bidding each other a long good-by, Mr. Sinclair was driving his sorrel team back to Davenant at a slashing pace. He and his friends had enjoyed themselves very thoroughly at the homely farmers' meeting. The sharp north wind had given a keen edge to somewhated jaded appetites, and game pie, anchovy sandwiches, cold grouse, and boar's head had been duly appreciated, with an ad libitum accompaniment of dry champaigne, bitter beer, and Copenhagen kirschen wasser.

The gentlemen's spirits had been improved by the morning's sport, and the homeward drive was hilarious. It was now between three and four o'clock. There would be time for a quiet smoke, or a game at pyramids, and a fresh toilet before afternoon tea, opined such of the gentlemen as still held by that almost exploded superstition, a taste for ladies' society. The more masculine spirits preferred to smoke their Trabucas or infantas by the harness-room fire, with the chance of getting the "straight tip" out of somebody else's groom.

James Wyatt was the only member of the party whose spirits were not somewhat unduly elated, but then Mr. Wyatt was an outsider, only admitted on sufferance into that chosen band, as a fellow who might be useful on an emergency, and whom it was well to "square" by an occasional burst of civility. He was one of those dangerous men who are always sober, and find out everybody else's weak points without ever revealing his own. He was Sinclair's ame damnee, however, and one must put up with him.

Gilbert was driving, with Sir Thomas Houndslow, a gentleman of turf celebrity, and late captain of a cavalry regiment, next him, smoking furiously, while Mr. Wyatt sat behind the two, and joined freely in their conversation, which inclined to the boisterous. How calm that smooth, level voice of his sounded after the strident tones of his companions, thickened ever so slightly by champagne and kirschen wasser!

The chief talk was of horses—the sorrels Gilbert was now driving—the horses they had seen that morning—with an inexhaustible series of anecdotes about horses that had been bought and sold, and bred, and exchanged, including the story of a rheumatic horse, which was a splendid goer in his intervals of good health, and was periodically sold by his owner, and taken back again at half price when the fit came on.

James Wyatt admired the landscape, an enthusiasm which his companions looked down upon contemptuously from the serene height of stolid indifference.

"There's a glade," cried the solicitor, pointing to an opening in the undulating woodland, where the snow-wreathed trees were like a picture of fairy-land.

"Pretty tidy timber," assented Sir Thomas Houndslow; "but for my part, I could never see anything in trees to go into raptures about, except when you've sold 'em to a timber merchant. Shouldn't like to see cremation come into fashion, by the by. It would spoil the coffin trade and depreciate the value of my elms and oaks."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Circumstances Alter Cases.

"As a general thing," said a man, "it is an annoyance to have anybody sitting alongside of you or back of you look over at the paper you are reading; still, it makes a difference who it is. I have seen a man who was reading a paper hold it carefully so that another person could read it. I saw a case of this sort the other day in a railroad car. A lady who had been sitting looking out of the window leaned forward suddenly to look at something in the newspaper which the gentleman in the seat in front of her was reading. He had just turned a page, and something on the fresh page caught her eye. It appeared to interest her greatly. It was a long article, and she could not have read more than half of it if the gentleman had not moved the paper a little to one side, which he did apparently quite unconsciously, keeping on reading all the time himself and holding the paper very steady. At last the lady finished the article that she was reading. With a sigh she leaned back in her seat again and looked out of the window once more, all the time quite oblivious of the man. He didn't flop the paper over as though the end of an episode had come; he looked again at one or two articles on that page, and then turned to the next one, just as though nothing had happened."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Leaves of Theo."

Theophile Gautier, the French author, was gifted with an extraordinary memory. Whatever he had heard or seen remained engraved upon his mind.

On the day on which the two first volumes of Hugo's "Legende des Siecles" were published, the author dined in Gautier's company at the house of another friend, all allied more or less closely to the tribe of romanticists, admirers of Victor Hugo, and counting upon finding a feast of good things in his new work.

In the course of the talk Gautier remarked, "Let us prove what we advance. I will recite 'Les Lions' to you." And in a clear voice, his eyes gazing steadfastly as though he were reading from afar a book visible to himself alone, he recited the whole piece, not repeating himself once, never hesitating, and not mistaking a single syllable.

Yet he had read it that morning for the first time.

Many times his friends, doubtful upon some points of history, language, geography, anatomy or art, referred the matter to him, and received immediate satisfaction. They used to say then, "We have only to turn over the leaves of Theo."

Lord Hannen and the Undertaker.

Lord Hannen the distinguished English judge whose death was recently announced, was known as a very stern and strict ruler of his court; no man dared take a liberty with him, and he was never known to be hoaxed except on one occasion. A juryman, dressed in deep mourning, serious and downcast in expression, stood up and claimed exemption from service on that day as he was deeply interested in a funeral of a gentleman at which it was his desire to be present. "Oh, certainly," was the courteous reply of the judge, and the sad man went. "My lord," interposed the clerk as soon as the ex-juryman had gone, "do you know who that man is that you exempted?" "No." "He is an undertaker."

How It Was Done.

The flute took its name from the fluta, an eel caught in Italian waters, which has seven spots like finger holes on its sides.

AURORA, Ill., was the first city in the world to illuminate its streets with electricity. The wires were placed in position in 1881.

ART IN AMERICA.

The Younger Painter Aroused to the Necessity of Individuality.

John C. Van Dyke gives a careful review of "Painting at the Fair" in the Century. Owing to the fact that art education had to be obtained abroad, we are at the start influenced by foreign elements, he says. The influence is to our gain in craftsmanship, but it is to our loss in originality. Parisian ideas and notions of art may be better than our own, but the point is, they are not our own, and, if we repeat them, we are playing the parrot—imitating, and not creating. American painters are not disposed to be servile followers. On the contrary, the effort is toward being distinctly and individually themselves, but artistically they are hampered by many Gallicisms or worldisms, just as politically a good piece of American legislation is checked by forced consideration for some foreign vote. In both cases there is a compromise not altogether pleasing to either party.

We come nearer to having an American school of art in landscape than elsewhere. There is a decisive note even from the younger men. In fact, there is much hope to be placed in the large band of young landscape painters at present working in this country. They have skill, and as they grow older they will gain the conviction that our pictorial view is the only one for them. It might be added, without national pride, that, as regards landscape, it is the best one now extant in the schools, and that it has little or nothing to gain from the view of others.

Policy as well as patriotism should induce an American to be an American, for there is little advantage in trying to be anything else. The chief value of a nation's art, aside from its being good art, lies in its nationality, its peculiar point of view, its representation of a time, a climes and a people. We shall never have any great art in America unless it is done in our own way and is distinctly American. We shall never be accounted great because of our doing something like some other people, nor by fashioning that which is best in others into an electric cosmopolitanism.

Happily our younger painters are rousing to the necessity of individuality in their work. Year by year their styles deepen, one in refined color, another in pure line, another in brush work, another in largeness of conception, another in delicacy of sentiment. It is these added individualities that produce nationality in art when there is homogeneity in fundamental thought and aim. We have not just now so much of the latter as could be wished for, but we are likely to come to it by degrees. That there is to be great production in painting in this country during the next quarter of a century is almost a foregone conclusion, and it cannot be doubted that our painters will find American life their strongest inspiration.

The Menken and Dickens.

A little book is associated in the oddest way with Dickens—"Infelicia," by Adah Isaacs Menken. It is dedicated to him, and the authoress printed a facsimile of his letter acknowledging the compliment. These verses are sought by the bibliophiles, and are essential for any complete collection, the book fetching about £2. I have heard Dickens relate in his richest comic manner the incidents of this introduction. The lady at one time was the talk of the town from her performance of Mazeppa, when she appeared bound to her untamed and fiery steed—of course, a very pliant, well-broken quadruped—in the airiest of raiment.

"Boz" was one night seated in the stalls looking on, when her business manager, a Yankee, stood before him with a pressing invitation from the fair and massively built equestrienne to come round and see her. The emissary, in the usual nasal tone, represented that this meeting was the dream of her (the equestrienne's) life. The author politely waived off the interview, deprecating the compliment; but the manager returned with more pressing insistence, and "Boz" had to yield. He gave a humorous sketch of his interview and the lavish incense that was offered to him. "The dream of her life" was still insisted on, but unluckily I have forgotten the details. The lady had literary instincts, and her verses are full of fire. Sometimes, we are told, they have been "attributed to Swinburne."

She later transferred her adoration—strange to say—to the elder Dumas, and I possess that rarest and most curious of curios, a photograph representing her and the grand novelist standing together. Later, I think, she married the pugilist Heenan. Altogether, an odd history.—The Gentleman's Magazine.

A Marine Wonder.

One of the marine wonders of the world is the great barrier reef of Australia. The stupendous rampart of coral, stretching in an almost unbroken line for twelve hundred and fifty miles along the northeastern coast of Australia, presents features of interest which are not to be equalled in any other quarter of the globe. Nowhere is the action of the little marine insect, which builds up with untiring industry those mighty mountains with which the tropical seas are studded, more impressive; nowhere are the wonderful constructive forces of nature more apparent. By a simple process of accretion there has been reared in the course of countless centuries an adamantine wall against which the billows of the Pacific, sweeping along in an uninterrupted course of several thousand miles, dash themselves in ineffectual fury. Inclosed within the range of its protecting arms is a calm inland sea eighty thousand square miles in extent, dotted with a multitude of coral islands, and presenting at every turn objects of interest alike to the unlearned traveler and the man of science. Here may be witnessed the singular process by which the wavy, gelatinous living mass hardens into stone, then serves as a collecting ground for the flotsam and jetsam of the ocean, and ultimately develops into an island covered with a luxurious mass of tropical growth. Here again may be seen in the serene depths of placid pools extraordinary forms of marine life, aglow with brilliant colors.

"I get a good many expressions for my sermons from hearing those fellows on the cheap seats talk to the umpire."—Indianapolis Journal.

The Basis of the Dance.

The basis of the dance, and, therefore, to a great extent, of the lyric, poetic, and dramatic faculty, is closely bound up in like manner with the choice in pairing. The minuets of the blackcock, the aerial antics of the peewit, the meeting places and ballrooms of so many grouse and other game birds, the strutting of the peacock, the display of the argus pheasant, the coquetting of butterflies, the strange courtship of spiders—all these, which are familiar to students of nature, give us the raw material of the rhythmic faculty.

The Australian bower birds even consult regular bowers, decked with feathers and shells and bright-colored berries to conduct their courtship in, and these bowers, dedicated to social gatherings, are entirely distinct from the nests of the particular families. I need hardly point out how closely in many cases such antics resemble the tribal dances and games of savages. And they are always accompaniments of the pairing season.—Fortnightly Review.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.....JULY 12, 1894.

DEBS AND PULLMAN are the two chief conspirators in the present rebellion. Both should be punished.

MARTIAL law was not proclaimed in Chicago by President Cleveland. It was merely an order, coupled with some friendly advice.

SCIENCE has enabled us now to freeze the air. It takes 296 below zero to do it. About everything has now been frozen to something like a solid, except hydrogen gas.

THE Ft. Wayne Journal got out a Monday m rning edition this week, a thing we believe they never did before. But it shows enterprise in an emergency like this. For a day or two it was the only daily we could get.

ALTGELD, governor of Illinois wrote a "sassy" letter to President Cleveland, and the latter "sassed back." But Cleveland was right Altgeld is too friendly with anarchists, or he would have put down the riot at an early stage and Cleveland would not need to take a hand.

LABOR bills already before congress. One wants the president to appoint three arbitrators, the U. S. Commissioner of Labor to be the fourth, and the governor of the state in which trouble occurs, the fifth. Another plan is to let the courts do the "arbitrating," or else appoint the arbitrating.

MCNAGNY can decline a re-nomination now at any time. Those who claim to run him now admit he cannot be re-elected and they dont seem to care. They have squeezed the lemon and are now ready to throw away the rind. Even the drunken dead beat of the Clipper has grown cold.

DEBSISM must go. If the curses of hundreds of thousands of men thrown out of employment by his senseless order to the "American Railway Union," to strike and keep others from working—if these curses were carriages, Debs and his anarchistic followers could ride as far as Coxey did.

NEITHER Editor Willis nor Editor Bliss has pledged himself to vote for or against the free coinage of silver, if elected to the legislature. This rumor was a device of the common enemy, the wily prohibitionists, so we are told. We make this statement to relieve the strained condition of an excited public.

STATE legislatures should now make laws to prevent strikes and tie ups. Let us have arbitration or some such plan made legal and binding, so that differences between labor and capital may be settled without damage to the general public, and without bloodshed and anarchy. Then the general government should enact similar laws, so as to supplement and assist those made by the states.

WORLD'S fair buildings were burned last Thursday. Some fire bug started it in the big building that was used as the "Terminal station." The wind was southeast and swept the flames toward the administration building. By the time help came it was too late, and the beautiful administration building, the most elegant structure in the world, lay in ruins, together with the large buildings near it. These are, the "Mines and Mining," the "Electricity," the "Machinery Hall," "Agriculture," "Stock Pavilion," "Philadelphia Cafe," and last, the great 31-acre structure, the "Manufacturers and Liberal Arts." Only a change of wind saved the buildings farther north.

These McKinley Times.

Hon. Thomas G. Sherman in a recent address to the workingmen at Patterson, N. J., summarized the cause of the industrial depression as follows:

What laws are in force?

Republican laws.

Who, when the panic began, held nine-tenths of the offices through which those laws were administered?

Republicans.

Who hold most of these offices to-day?

Republicans.

Who passed the tariff bill now in existence?

Republicans.

Who passed all the tariff laws which have been in existence for the last 30 years?

Republicans.

Is there more or less protection to American industries in force to day than there was in the first year of Harrison's administration, when we are told that everything was so prosperous?

More protection by about one-third to one-half. The protection on woolen goods is about 50 per cent higher; on iron and steel, 50 per cent higher; on flax, 16 per cent higher.

What have the Republicans been telling us for the last 30 years was the cause of American prosperity?

The Morrill tariff.

Is there more or less protection given by the tariff to-day than was given by the great Morrill tariff?

More by 100 per cent, more on iron and steel by 80 per cent, more on silk by 60 per cent, and more on flax manufactures by 100 per cent.

Chicago a Great Camp.

A trip to Chicago Tuesday, showed one the serious condition of things in that city, caused by the great strike that is on. After the fighting of Saturday, as told in another article in this issue, it was believed the worst was over, or at least that there would be no more rioting But the military and the police as well as numberless U. S. deputy marshals, have the city in charge and so far have kept good order, by force. When our train reached South Chicago, we stopped and waited two hours or more till No. 8 on the B. & O. coming out of the city with an escort of regulars should meet us. While waiting, several freights came out, each guarded by policemen, one on nearly every car. They looked dirty, wornout and disgusted. When No. 8 came out, its guard of regulars and deputy marshals was in a separate train, running ahead of it. This special headed about, and went into the city ahead of our train, keeping always in sight. It was a queer sensation for the passengers. At each point of supposed danger, we found squads of police or regulars, and now and then a picket "outpost" with its shelter tents and a mounted orderly ready to call up help from other points if there was trouble. On reading the Grand Central station, our soldiers got out, and with their long swinging way, marched back to the camp on the lake front, and fresh men took their places for the next train. On the lake front, there is a continuous camp from the new Art Institute south to within a short distance of the big new passenger station of the Illinois Central railroad. The white tents make an attractive scene while in all the open spaces are the wagons of camp material, provisions etc, with the cavalry horses in the rear, tied to or near the fence that separates the Central tracks from the camp grounds. At several points opposite the cross streets, the field batteries are stationed, the guns trained to sweep the streets running westward into the city. There is one field Hotchkiss gun, and the rest are ordinary small field pieces. It looks warlike. Along in front of the fine buildings, like the Auditorium and its annex, as well as in front of the great residences all the way to the south, great crowds of spectators watch the strange scene. All day long, they are there, new crowds coming to take the places of those who leave. A double row of sentries is on duty all the time. One row is in the street near the curb on the side next to the buildings, and the other on the wide walk next to the camp. In the center of the city one seldom sees a soldier, except some young member of the state militia who has got a pass to come up town But in other parts, one is liable to come suddenly on an unoccupied space full of the state guards, for several thousand are on duty. The state troops have uniforms like ours. But the regulars are a plain looking set of men, very serious and in earnest and generally older than the militia. They have evidently seen hard service before, and are neither nervous, nor "stuck up," Their blue coats and pants are somewhat soiled, and they wear brown, soft slouch hats, which are not pretty, but sensible and comfortable. They all wear brown leather leggins. In marching there is seldom a command given. They don't seem to need any The city is quiet, but depressed. Business almost stopped in some lines. People seem afraid to come to town, and once there, hurry and get away. Provisions are getting scarce. One little Italian fruit seller, said he had to sell bananas at "two for a nick" on account of the great strike instead of three. Potatoes that retailed at 80 cents ten days ago, are now worth from $2 to $3, and are getting scarce; so with provisions in several lines. There is a sort of fear pervading the city and all its business Coal being scarce many factories have stopped; many elevators in the big buildings do not run for the same reason. Many business houses, having nothing to do have discharged hands or given them a layoff. All these causes combine to prevent labor from finding employment, and the usual results of a strike are in this case greatly aggravated, for instead of securing employment for 1000 men, it throws out of work twenty times that number. Then the destruction of property. For miles along the tracks after leaving the Grand Central station two or three miles behind us, we found evidences of the riot. Box cars overturned, smashed, roofs off, doors off, some totally or partly burned, and in one place for a mile we saw a blackened and still smoking mass of ruins. From one track to four tracks full of cars had been burned and nothing left but the irons. Trucks covered the red and twisted rails. There must have been 300 cars burned in this place. Some were loaded with grain, for they were still blazing, though fired last Friday night. The situation is improved, but still alarming. Nearly every roads is starting its trains on time, but under guard of soldiers. The riotous element, whether strikers or not, keeps in the back ground, for they feel the state and national government are in earnest. But they are there yet. Wednesday morning nearly all the labor organizations were ordered to go out and thus all business will be either stopped or greatly delayed. Tuesday evening, E. V. Debs, the president of the American Railway Union whose orders "to strike" have caused a good deal of this trouble, was arrested on an indictment of conspiracy against the United States. His other officers were also hauled up and each was released on $10,000 bail. The Knights of Labor were ordered out all over the country yesterday morning. So the matter stands. We do not fear any more bloodshed, but the city of Chicago may be in a state of siege for a week or two. All her best citizens and business men have joined the "law and order union," to help preserve life and property and sustain the government. All over the city we meet this new patriotic order, for the men were a small U. S. flag pinned to the lapel of the coat.

For Prosecutor.

Louis J. Gengler, of Garrett, has been in the active practice of the law for several years and always has cases in court each term. He has bes des been deputy prosecutor for several years, and has shown himself prompt, earnest and conscientious in the discharge of his duties. We look to see him poll a heavy vote and hope to see him elected. Of all the men now running for this important office, we believe he is the best qualified.

Obituary.

Diana Bodey, a daughter of Christian and Elizabeth Bodey, was born in Rockingham county, Va., March 12, 1816. Two years after her birth her parents emigrated with a colony to Champaign county, Ohio. That was a new country, and she had there to endure the hardships and privations of early pioneer life. In the year 1833 she was united in marriage to Henry Merica, of that county, which union was blessed with a large number of children, of whom nine survive her and mourn at her departure.

On February 19, 1859, her husband died and the care of the family was put on her shoulders. In 1864 she married her second husband, David Houser, of Keyser township, DeKalb county, Ind. She also moved to this place on the farm, and remained there until 1882, when they removed to Garrett, Ind., where she lived until her death. Her second husband died Jan. 4, 1891.

On June 15, 1894, she was thrown from a buggy in front of her house, and had her right shoulder dislocated. The doctor reduced this dislocation, and considered her otherwise not seriously injured. She got along apparently very nicely until a week before her burial; on Thursday, June 28, she had a severe paralytical stroke on her right side. Though she seemed to be conscious, she could not speak.

She died peacefully at 10:35 o'clock, July 3, 1894, at her home in Garrett, where her children waited on her. She always took special interest in the welfare of her children and grandchildren, which was duly appreciated by them. Although she lived in her own house alone, she said that she was not a single night alone, without one of her children or grandchildren being with her.

Mrs. Houser was brought up in the Luthern church and was a faithful member in the same until she moved with her second husband to Keyser township DeKalb Co., Ind., where they joined the Reformed church in the year 1867 in which church they remained members until their death. Her age was 78 years 3 month and 21 days. The funeral service was held in the Union church about 2½ miles northwest from Garrett, conducted by Rev. Geo. Engleman, of Auburn.

FOOTBALL IN MALAY.

A Game That Might Give Our Own Players a Few Pointers.

Among the Malays football has been in existence from time immemorial, but it is with them essentially a game, as, for instance, battledoor and shuttlecock is with us, and it is not a contest. The football is rather smaller than that used at Eton and is made of wicker work. Those who join in the game arrange themselves in a wide circle and kick the ball from one to another with the inside, or, at times, with the flat of the foot. The object of the players is to keep the ball passing about without its ever touching the ground or the hand of any one. Great dexterity is shown in this performance, and the ball is usually kicked to a very respectable height. There seems to be no penalty exacted from a player who may kick the ball badly or fail to kick it at all.

We had our own game of football, and the Dutchmen, assisted by two members of our team, scored two goals to our four. During the game the natives collected in still greater numbers, and at its termination they begged us to allow them to have a game among themselves. To this we assented, and two of us acted as captains of the sides, numbering about 30 players apiece, most of whom stripped to the "sarong," and wrapped it round their loins, leaving the rest of their bodies bare.

The ball was started, and then followed one of the most extraordinary games of football that has ever been seen. The game soon ceased to be a game at all and became a veritable battle.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seemed too rough for jest.

Hands, arms and even teeth, were used on all sides, blood flowed freely, and scattered about the field were soon to be seen the wounded, I might almost say, the slain. As some fell exhausted to the ground they were removed, and their places in the fray were taken by others, who pushed forth eagerly from the crowd of spectators.

Shouts of victory and groans of defeat rent the air, and at length things became so serious that the two captains were obliged to seize upon the ball and bolt with it to the pavilion. The game thus came to an end, and the players withdrew to their homes, with the excited crowd following at their heels. This must have been regarded as a red letter day by the native community of Medan, and the visit of the "Orange Puteh" (Englishmen) will be remembered among them for some time to come. We received a hint next morning from the authorities that the natives must not be allowed to take part in our games.—Fortnightly Review.

Grip and Camphorated Oil.

During grip days camphorated oil does much good. It will often entirely dissipate symptoms of an influenza cold, to which persons who have had grip seem peculiarly liable. Rub across the forehead over and between the eyes. It is a relief, too, for the pains in the legs, which remain long after the attack is over. Rub with it around the muscles and knee joints, over and under. For this trouble, or for an exhausted condition following overwork, take one-half bay rum, one-fourth water and the rest spirits of ammonia, and rub the body well all over, particularly the legs and feet, and arms and hands.—New York Times.

A Costly Ton of Coal.

On Jan. 10, 1789, 13 men brought a wagon with a ton of coal from Loughborough in Leicestershire, to London, as a present to the then Prince of Wales. When they were emptied into the cellar, the clerk of the cellars gave them 4 guineas, and as soon as the prince was informed of it his highness sent them 20 guineas and ordered them a pot of beer each man. They performed their journey, which is 111 miles, in 11 days, and drew the coal all the way without any relief. —London Tit-Bits.

In June there will be many

WEDDING BELLS.

Many wedding belles in June have placed so much confidence in this store that their entire outfits have been bought of us.

The Silks Suit Them

The Gray and Tan woolen stuffs suit them. The Fans, Gloves, Handkerchiefs, Millinery, Hosiery, Underwear, and Little Things

Are here in plenty. No need to go farther away to find what is wanted.

Young Housekeepers

Are Knowing People. They know what suits a new home. They know of

Our Lace Curtains, our Opaque Curtains, our Silkoline and Madras Cloths, our Bed Spreads, Table Cloths, Napkins, Towels, Rugs and New Carpets.

This store is known all over DeKalb County as a Truth-Telling store. This is the way our business is carried on here. If any article bought of us is not as represented, your money goes back. It goes back without hard feelings. A pleasure with this Dry Goods Store is to please people. The prices are the lowest, the goods are the best the world can produce.

MARKED REDUCTIONS THIS WEEK.

Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, of Chicago, were here last week visiting her people, the family of I. M. Johnson.

Several ladies of the St. Joe, W. C. T. U. attended the local meeting at Charles Eckhart's last Friday.

Dr. Johnston, dentist, has the new method of filling teeth without pain, as well as painless extraction of teeth.

The Hollister House used a dozen chickens for its Sunday dinner, and it wasn't an extra day for chickens either.

Wm. Walsworth east of town fell off a hay rack last Friday and was considerably hurt, but is getting along all right now.

Some of our readers out west will be interested and pained, to hear of the death by suicide, of Ira Grant at Columbia City, last week.

All Chicago extra papers will be sold and delivered at regular price of 2 cents per copy. Harry Trentman, agent, at the Glazier News stand.

There will be an ice cream festival at Green's Corners, south of Sedan Saturday evening of this week. All are invited to come and enjoy the occasion with them.

Buy your buggies of Kutzner & Myers at their feed barn on West Sixth street, Auburn Come and see us and we will convince you that we sell at prices to suit the times.

Headache is the direct result of Indigestion and Stomach Disorders. Remedy these by using DeWitt's Little Early Risers and your Headache disappears. The favorite Little Pill everywhere.

Willie Campbell came up here from Logansport last week. He had been at Ft. Wayne to celebrate the glorious old Fourth, and the trains went back on him, as the strike was on. So he came up here.

T. F. Anthony, ex-postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of Mystic Cure, and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by Robbins & McCord, Auburn. Ind.

The Fayette Normal University has an advertisement in this issue, Those who are thinking of attending a Normal or College should not fail to send for catalogue and make a careful study of the excellent features of this school. 27tf

W. H. McIntosh has a fine Yucca plant that is now in bloom for the first time. It is sometimes called "Spanish Daggers," though it belongs to the lily family of flowers. It presents a lovely appearance with its long stem of white flowers.

"Give me a light. I've used a box of matches on this cigar." "Throw it away and smoke a Bill Head. Once lit, it will burn clean down to the stub.

C. C. Boyer is meeting with marked success in selling his gasoline attachment for wood stoves. He is having an oven of his own design, made to suit the requirements of the burner, and he feels sure that it will prove a success in every way.

Kutzner & Myers have a first-class livery establishment at their barn on West Sixth street. They are always prepared to fit out their patrons with a good rig of any sort, and at fair rates. Don't forget them when you need a rig to go anywhere.

Beautiful faces at Clapp's

Mrs. Wallace Webster, of Minneapolis, has been here for a time, visiting her sister, Mrs. J. E. Rose. She started a few days before the strike began, and so got through without trouble. She had visited her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Nimmons, near Butler, before coming to Auburn.

The Garrett Clipper never did know anything, and never will. It last week tried its hand at quoting well known political records, saying that J. D. Leighty beat Free Kelley by only 15 votes. It would have been easy to turn to the election table of 1886, where it could be seen the proper figures are 113.

Don. Lawrence took a trip into Ohio the other day and had quite a number of experiences for a short trip. In going from here to Logan and back there were three accidents in which his train figured more or less. In one case they struck a man driving across the track, killing the horse and driver and smashing the buggy.

RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY:—"Mystic Cure" for rheumatism and neuralgia, radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action pon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

Bliss says he didn't get anything for organizing the "Great American Compact" last year, nor for the Industrial Legion this year. Better see to it, that the new secret society for farmers, the "Sons in-law of Industry," that will next spring be "organized" to take the place of the then defunct "Industrial Legion," has some fees attached to the "work." If he gives free of cost, another summer of his valuable time, people will have to go about discussing the question "Which is better from a grammarian's point of view, to say 'Bliss is busted,' or 'Bliss is bursted?'"

Kendallville Standard:—When an engineer and fireman, who were sent out over the Wabash with a train, reached Ashley Wednesday, they were taken from their engine by a lot of strikers, railroad employes, escorted about the place, compelled to perform all kinds of acrobatic feats and given orders to leave town. In the evening they turned up at Corunna and Wednesday morning arrived in this city and telegraphed the Wabash officials to send them a pass home to Chicago. Not receiving word from their request, they boarded a box car on the first Lake Shore west-bound freight for Chicago. They expressed themselves as being fairly disgusted with themselves, the railroad officials and railroading as a means of livelihood.

Butler Review:—A tramp was seen searching in the weeds near the east Lake Shore water tank Saturday and claimed that he had lost $26 and not miss it until he reached Toledo and then returned to look for it.

Schaab & Murphy have moved into their new room, the Tarney building three doors south of their former location, but in the same block. The room has been nicely fitted up for them and will give them a superior location.

Our street crossings are getting into a terrible shape. How would it do for the town board to give it a little attention. A man who kicks out a pair of shoes against the end of a plank does not feel very well when he goes to pay his taxes.

"I always objected to Harry's smoking in the house, but since he began using Kessler Bros.' Receipt, I let him smoke in any room. They are so fragrant,"

There was quite a healthy gathering of the republican wire-pullers here Saturday. As they do not advertise their meetings as democrats do, we cannot say what they met for. Owing to the strike those from Butler came in with a team.

Judge Adair, of Columbia City, was here last Thursday to try a case in court. We were pleased to receive a friendly call. He and his wife are among our most valued friends of the early days, and it gives us great pleasure to see they have made life a success. The Judge ranks high in our courts.

After using the big Columbian postage stamp for a year, it is hard to come down to the little weak-eyed red stamp again. They do look so small and feeble, that one hardly feels like trusting them to carry an important letter from here to New York. Still, they seem to get there, or will when the strike don't interfere.

We received on Monday, the announcement of the marriage of Miss Georgia Shiffer to Oliver P. Fike at Leipsic, Ohio, July 3. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Shiffer well known Auburnites a few years ago. How time flies! The marriage of Mr. Shiffer's daughter will remind many of this important fact. We send congratulations and good wishes.

There was a rapid ringing of the fire alarm bell Sunday evening, and the engine, hose cart and trucks were whirling down Main street at a wild rate. It was a fire in the coal sheds at the Wabash elevator, and was easily put out. Had it happened in the night, there might have been serious damage. Someone seems determined to destroy the company's property, as their coal has be fired several times.

Home and Country (New York) for July has for a frontispiece "The Three Sisters," a reproduction, in half-tone, of the famous painting by Bouguereau. The illustrated articles are: Elsie. A Story of the Revolution, by W. Delano Eastlake; Women in Gardening, by Hattie M. Clark, M. D.; Six Weeks on the Nile, by Reynold Moody; A. Ward of the Government Indian Jim and Issue Day, by Capt. Lawrence Fish, and The Ruler of the Toilet-Table. Something About Combs, by Francis Lauding; and Major-General Henry Warner Slocum, Soldier and Citizen, with portrait by O. O. Howard, Major General U. S. A. These and many other articles in prose and verse make this issue of the magazine unusually interesting and enjoyable. Published by Jos. W. Kay, at 53 East 10th Street, New York. Subscription, $2.50 a year.

The Glazier House had the contract for boarding all the men working on the new telephone line. They were 26 in all, and reached here Saturday evening. They had been working south from Waterloo. Some Waterloo men were also helping to dig holes. They reached town Tuesday digging southward.

Pearl Kelley, now at Omaha, Neb., was to have been here to spend the Fourth and make an extended visit, but on reaching St. Louis, the road was tied up, and she had to return home. It was a great disappointment to the people here, and no doubt to her also. We hope "when this cruel war is over" she will try it again.

Lieut. Defrees, of the U. S. army: "It is surprising to me how strong Gov. Matthews stands with the people of Indiana. Almost any number of republicans have told me that they regard him as one of strongest governors we have ever had. The secret of his success lies in the fact that whenever he makes up his mind that a thing is right he has the sand to carry it out."

EVERGREEN CEMETERY is incorporated under the laws of Indiana for the purpose of keeping the grounds in repair. The directors are authorized to make assessments against lots and to collect the same either by suit against owners or by advertising and selling lots. As all lot owners are equally interested in keeping the grounds in order at as little expense as possible it is desired that all pay when due without waiting to be notified. A penalty of ten percent is added to all deliquents and must be collected. The directors have extended the time for payment to July 1, and all payments made prior to July 30th, will be treated as having been paid June 30. 28-30 F. E. DAVENPORT, Secretary.

The annual catalogue of Indiana University is out and a copy has just been received at this office. It is neatly printed and contains a beautiful lithograph of the proposed Kirkwood Hall, now being erected on the new campus. The attendance is 638, being larger by 66 than ever before. Of these 40 are graduated students. The students are from 20 states, and 81 counties out of the 92 of Indiana are represented. There will be 121 courses presented next fall. There are now 45 teachers and additions will have to be made at the next meeting of the Board in June. The University has doubled its attendance in the last four years. All University publications will be sent on application to President Joseph Swain, Bloomington, Ind.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The nickel social of the Presbyterian church, will be held at the home of Mrs. Barnes on south VanBuren street on Friday afternoon of this week. All are cordially invited to be present.

The Hub's Boy's Head-to-Foot Outfit

For several months past our readers have seen the advertisement in our columns of "Boys Head-to-Foot Outfit. $5.00." It includes a suit of all wool clothes, Stanley Cap to match the suit, and a pair of stout and shapely shoes. It is sent on receipt of price, or, if the buyer wants to examine the goods before paying for them he sends $1.00 and the outfit is then sent by express with privilege of examination, then if satisfactory the purchaser pays the other $4.00. If not he announces that he does not want the goods and they are sent back to the express company and the Hub sends the dollar back. Nothing could be fairer than this, and the offer comes from one of the biggest houses in the United States.

RIOTERS SHOT DOWN

Blood is Shed in the Great Railroad Strike.

MOBS IN A WILD FURY

State Troops Called to Stop Acts of Violence.

Thousands of Soldiers and Police Will Oppose the Law-Breakers—Deadly Contests Have Already Taken Place — Strikers Madly Desperate — Authorities Determined—President Cleveland Resolved to Crush Out the Rebellion—Militia from Other States Will Be Ordered to Chicago if Such a Move Be Necessary.

The long-expected armed conflict began in Chicago Friday morning. Human lives have been sacrificed. Blood stains the ground at the suburb Kensington, and the mob, in a frenzy of rage, rioted throughout the Illinois Central yards, committing unheard-of depredations on the property of the company. A great force of police was dispatched to the assistance of the deputy marshals and deputy sheriffs, who, though using their revolvers with deadly effect, were unable to break the spirit of the mob. Four of the strikers are reported killed and many others wounded. Engineer Geogan, of an incoming Ft. Fayne train, was held up at 31st street and stoned almost to death. The rioting broke out early in the morning. With the opening of day returned the fury of the strikers which manifested itself so viciously at the stockyards Thursday night.

But the scene of the principal tumult changed from Lake to Kensington. In the town which lies over against the Town of Pullman and is inhabited principally by laboring-men and their families the mob began to gather in force. Before the morning was half over it had grown to such size as almost to overshadow the large force of deputies on the ground. Then the outrages began. The officers stood in a frightful hail of stones and coupling-pins. Bodies of the rioters charged repeatedly on the marshals and the Sheriff's men. Freight trains were derailed and thrown across the tracks. Thousands of strikers came over from Pullman and engaged in the work of destruction. At 11 o'clock there was rioting and fighting from the Pullman buildings to the Chicago and Eastern Illinois crossing—a territory a mile and a half in extent. The mob seized the milk train of the Illinois Central and upset the cars after detaching the engine. Then a dare-devil switchman leaped into the engine-cab, pulled the throttle wide open and sent the locomotive flying with frightful force into the wreck. After this all trains were blocked.

At this point the position of the officers became unbearable. They were struck with heavy missiles. They drew their revolvers and fired into the mob. The firing became general, many of the rioters retaliating with shots from pistols. In a melee on the Cincinnati express four strikers were fatally shot by special officers of the Michigan Central.

Mayor Hopkins was appealed to early, and he sent Inspector Hunt to the battle-ground. He also united with Sheriff Gilbert in wiring Gov. Altgeld, apprising him of the alarming situation. The Governor promptly responded by calling out the entire First Brigade, I. N. G. Two other regiments were also ordered to Chicago in case re-enforcements were necessary. Local authorities also made a vigorous appeal to Gen. Miles, in command of the Federal troops, to send an adequate force to Kensington.

Wild Mob in Control.

The mob was in complete control along the lines of the railways and in the Stock Yards district. In Packingtown 10,000 men congregated and swore that not a train of any kind should pass them. And they kept their oaths. At Fortieth street an engineer who attempted to drive his locomotive through the crazy multitude was dragged from the cab of the machine and beaten nearly to death. Along the Rock Island and Lake Shore track thousands of men congregated, overturning cars, wrecking switches and doing everything in their power to prevent the passage of trains.

The few soldiers on duty at those points were jeered and hooted at and the mob dared them to shoot. With most admirable patience the soldiers endured all this in silence and the crowd became merry at their expense. So much had the troops endured that some of the more turbulent of the rioters thought the soldiers would never turn their guns on their tormentors.

At 6 o'clock Friday evening some 10,000 armed men were in the field against the strikers, with orders to "shoot to kill."

Washington dispatches say that the administration regards the situation in Chicago as serious in the extreme. The President is in constant communication with General Miles. The law must be obeyed, and President Cleveland will see that it is obeyed if it takes every soldier in the regular army to compel obedience.

FLAMES MAKE HAVOC.

Unparalleled Scenes of Riot, Terror, and Pillage in Chicago.

All the previous efforts at lawlessness were eclipsed Friday night by a single fire. Not less than 800 box and other cars were burned up, together with tons upon tons of coal and numerous switch-houses and towers. An area laid with tracks two miles long by half a mile wide, occupied by the Panhandle yards at Fifty-fifth boulevard and Western avenue were fired and destroyed. The loss, at the lowest estimate, amounts to $1,000,000. It was about 7 o'clock when a mob of 6,000 visited the yards, howling like demons. From this moving mass of shouting rioters squads of a dozen or two departed, running towards the yards with fire-brands in their hands. They looked in the gloaming like specters, their lighted torches bobbing about like will-o'-the-wisps.

Soon from all parts of the yard flames shot up and billows of fire rolled over the cars, covering them with the red glow of destruction. The spectacle was a grand one. Thousands besides the strikers and the incendiaries were attracted by the great bonfire. Before the cars were fired those filled with any cargoes were looted. The strikers, helped by their women, broke into every locked car and took from them everything portable. The men and women stripped the cabooses of cushions, desks, and other furniture, and were seen hastening through the night with their ill-gotten plunder. Some of the cars were loaded with household furniture, and women were seen walking away with bedding on their heads. Children carried chairs away, and men helped to steal benches and car seats. There were 150 cars of coal in the yards. Women plundered them, carrying the black diamonds away in their aprons, taking off the skirts of their dresses and shawls and filling them with coal. It was pandemonium let loose, the fire leaping along for miles and the men and women dancing with frenzy. It was a mad scene, where riot became wanton and men and women became drunk on their own excesses. The mob had its own way, played its game of devilry without interruption, unmolested by any semblance of authority.

STRIKE SWEEPING EASTWARD.

A. R. U. Decides to Tie Up Every Line Entering Cleveland.

Slowly but surely the great railroad strike is sweeping eastward. After an all-night session of the members of the A. R. U. at Cleveland, Ohio, in which every road running into the city was represented, it was decided to tie up every line centering in Cleveland. At 10 o'clock every road leading into the city, with the single exception of the Nickel Plate, had felt the effect of the strike, and freight traffic on all lines was more or less congested and the suspension of passenger traffic in many cases seemed imminent. The Nickel Plate had generally abandoned passenger trains for the West in consequence of the tie-up on the western end of the road.

PRESIDENT DEBS' STATEMENT.

He Issues a Manifesto on the Strike and Its Causes.

President Debs, of the American Railway Union, has issued an address to the public on the strike situation and the causes that led to the present trouble. It recites the course of Mr. Pullman with his employes, the repeated refusal of Mr. Pullman to arbitrate, asserts that the union asks for nothing beyond the consent of Mr. Pullman to refer the disputee question to an impartial committee. It asserts that the railway companies organized to uphold Pullman, and that the strike has extended from line to line because the railways have so supported Mr. Pullman. It says that the union has been and is now willing to arbitrate. As to his own part in the strike, Mr. Debs said that it was not ordered by himself nor by any other individual. He had never ordered nor called anybody out. Under the rules of the A. R. U., members could only strike when a majority of their number so decided. One vote of the delegates in this instance was unanimous. Wherever men have struck they have done so of their own will. He had simply served the notice after the men had determined to quit.

STRIKERS IN CONTROL.

Railway Companies at Sacramento, Cal., Absolutely Helpless.

A San Francisco dispatch says that the strikers at the Oakland yards and along the Mole and on the narrow gauge lines effectually maintain the blockades on all lines running down the Mole. Wherever the strikers find a live engine they promptly take possession of it, rake the fires, blow off the steam and leave it dead on the tracks. After the failure of the State troops to dislodge the strikers in the depot yards at Sacramento it is reported that the United States Marshal expressed an intention to declare martial law and dispatch United States regulars to the scene. The striking railroad men placed Oakland under siege. They are absolute masters of the ferry system. They have stopped the trains on both lines and connection by rail with all the cities across the bay has been cut off. They have seized the railroad yards at West Oakland; they are in possession at the Oakland Mole. Not a wheel is moving.

GOV. WAITE'S COMPLAINT.

He Says the Federal Constitution Is Being Violated.

Gov. Waite, of Colorado, has addressed a letter to President Cleveland, complaining that the United States deputy marshals have been ordered to make arrests without warrants or other process of law. Waite claims these acts are in violation of the Constitution. A similar letter has been addressed to Judge Moses Hallett, of the United States District Court. Gov. Stone, of Missouri, is also in bad humor over what he terms the impertinent interference of the United States authorities in local affairs in regard to the strike of railway employes. He says Missouri can protect property and preserve peace without assistance from Washington.

Notes of the Strike.

There is a fruit famine in Philadelphia.

Big Four employes at Anderson, Ind., went out.

Union men in Buffalo wear the white ribbon.

It is claimed that the railway telegraphers will be called out.

Men in the Panhandle yards at Logansport, Ind., have gone out.

Michigan division Big Four shop and train men struck at Wabash, Ind.

The Erie Railroad shops at Kent, Ohio, were closed and about 300 men discharged.

On the Chicago and Eastern Illinois mail was carried from Brazil, Ind., to local stations on handcars.

The St. Paul and Duluth switchmen quit, and clerks and other employes are making up the trains.

Brotherhood men at Nashville have officially notified the railroads they would stand by the companies.

The grievance committee of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers on the Lake Shore has been called to Chicago.

Traffic is suspended on the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham, the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis and the Iron Mountain Roads.

In obedience to an order from General Master Workman Sovereign, the longshoremen's branch of the Knights of Labor struck at Portland, Ore.

The coal operators and miners of the Springfield (Ill.) sub-district are unwilling to make any concessions in many cases. In twelve out of twenty-two shafts in the district, however, the operators have acceded to the miners' demands.

STRIKE HAS SPREAD

Labor Agitation Assumes National Dimensions.

THOUSANDS NOW IDLE

President Cleveland Issues a Warning Proclamation.

Advises All Good Chicagoans to Get to Shelter and Commands the Mobs to Disperse—Regulars Rout Frenzied Mobs at Hammond, Ind.—Bloody Riot at Forty-ninth Street, Chicago — Troops in the West Rebel—Refuse to Be Hauled on Trains Operated by "Scabs"—Nation in a Turmoil.

Despite the presence of United States troops and the mobilization of five regiments of State militia; despite threats of martial law and total extermination of the strikers by bullet and bayonet, the great strike inaugurated by the American Railway Union held three-fourths of the roads running out of Chicago in its strong fetters, and at the end of the second week of the strike traffic was more fully paralyzed than at any time since the inception of the tie-up.

Comparatively few roads were running out of the city, while freight traffic was completely paralyed. Several of the Western and Northwestern trunk lines were running trains intermittently, while those running east, southeast and south were virtually dead.

The Dearborn street station was closed to traffic and practically deserted, the roads running out of that station being completely at the mercy of the strikers. The Michigan Central was forced to abandon all trains. The Illinois Central was in the same fix. The Rock Island and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern lines were completely tied up, their tracks having been blockaded by wrecked cars strewn along miles of the two lines by the mob which had possession of the territory traversed by the tracks. The Chicago and Alton Road was running occasional trains at the Chicago end of the line, but was blockaded at Kansas City and intermediate points. The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy system alone did a comparatively uninterrupted business. Suburban traffic was in a complete state of asphyxiation, and freight traffic was absolutely at a stand-still. With the exception of an occasional car or two moved by the aid of the military not a wheel was turning. Such was the situation at the end of the second week of the greatest labor disturbance ever inaugurated in this country.

Strike Becoming Expensive.

The strike is getting to be a costly affair, not only for the railroad companies but for Uncle Sam, who in addition to the regular army force on duty is paying for a still larger force of deputy United States marshals. According to the record kept in Marshal Arnold's office in Chicago, 1,686 deputy marshals not railroad employes and 500 railroad employes had been sworn in, making a force of nearly 2,200 deputies now in the pay of the Government. The pay of each deputy is $2.50 a day and expenses, making the cost of each man about $3.25 a day, or a total a day for the entire force of about $6,600. Inasmuch as the list of deputies is being constantly increased, Mr. Pullman's little dispute with his employes is costing the Government a pretty penny.

In the meantime the prices of meat and provisions supplied by the West have advanced in price one-third to the Chicago consumer, while train load after train load of perishable freight lost its value because it could not be moved to its destination. A potato famine exists which has made potatoes a luxury at $6 per barrel. The strike has wrought hardships on millions, has visited untold losses upon the companies and those grappling with them, has led to harsh measures by the government and in other ways has been most injurious. In view of the hard times, and following so soon after the great coal strike, this present trouble only puts back the return to better days, so long delayed and so eagerly awaited. In many ways Mr. Pullman himself will find the conflict costly and annoying. In one particular will he always have reason to regret it. This is in the decision of some of the companies using Pullman cars to do without them and to manufacture a substitute in their shops. This will be a great blow to Pullman and the city he has built up on the outskirts of Chicago.

KEEP OUT OF RANGE.

President Cleveland Admonishes Chicagoans to Obey the Law.

A proclamation practically declaring martial law in Chicago was decided upon after a full discussion in the Cabinet meeting at Washington. It is as follows:

WHEREAS, By reason of the unlawful obstructions, combinations, and assemblages of persons it has become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings the laws of the United States within the State of Illinois, and especially in the city of Chicago, within said State; and

WHEREAS, For the purpose of enforcing the faithful execution of the laws of the United States and protecting its property, and removing obstructions to the United mails in the State and city aforesaid, the President has employed a part of the military forces of the United States.

Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby admonish all good citizens and all persons who may be or may come within the city and State aforesaid, against aiding, countenancing, encouraging, or taking part in such unlawful obstructions, combinations, and assemblages; and I hereby warn all persons engaged in or in any way connected with such unlawful obstructions, combinations, and assemblages, to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes.

Those who disregard this warning and persist in taking part with a riotous mob in forcibly resisting and obstructing the execution of the laws of the United States, or interfering with the functions of the government, or destroying, or attempting to destroy, the property belonging to the United States or under its protection, cannot be regarded otherwise than as public enemies.

Troops employed against such a riotous mob will act with all the moderation and forbearance consistent with the accomplishment of the desired end; but the necessity that confronts them will not with certainty permit discrimination between guilty participants and those who are mingled with them from curiosity and without criminal intent. The only safe course, therefore, for those not actually unlawfully participating is to abide at their homes, or at least not be found in the neighborhood of riotous assemblages.

While there will be no hesitation or vacillation in the decisive treatment of the guilty, this warning is especially intended to protect and save the innocent.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

All Trades Go Out.

By order and authority of the allied trades of Chicago, a general strike of all union wage earners was declared. Delegates of all the unions had met to consider the advisability of inaugurating a sympathetic strike. The session had lasted until after midnight and it was about decided to delay the contemplated walk-out when President Cleveland's proclamation was received and read to the assemblage. The last words of the document had not passed the reading clerk's lips when the whisper went round, "If we don't order the strike now we will be prevented from meeting to carry out the plan in the future." Then they acted promptly. The proclamation settled the question that five hours' debate could not.

BLOOD AT HAMMOND.

Regulars Put a Bullet in One Man's Heart—Three People Wounded.

Ten days ago the strikers at Hammond, Ind., promised to allow trains to pass through their town without molestation, and in consideration of this pledge State troops ordered there by Gov. Matthews were sent home. Sunday the rioters broke their word, and as a result United States soldiers shot down four persons, one of them being killed instantly. Riot broke forth in Hammond late Saturday night and raged until 3:30 p. m., when the shedding of blood brought the mob to a realization of the folly of resisting United States authorities. Blood was shed as a direct result of an attempt on the part of the strikers to interfere with the operation of a wrecking train in charge of Capt. W. I. Hartz of the Fifteenth Infantry. The train had been sent out to clear the Monon tracks of the box cars, passenger coaches, and other obstructions placed there by the rioters.

SCENE OF DESTRUCTION AND PILLAGE IN THE PANHANDLE YARDS.

MANY SHOT DOWN.

Frenzied Mobs Fights with a Squad of the National Guard.

In defending a wrecking train and crew on the Forty-ninth street tracks of the Grand Trunk Railroad at Loomis street in Chicago, Saturday, the police and a company of militia fired into the crowd. They had been stoned and shot into the mob indiscriminately. The soldiers also charged with their bayonets. One man was fatally and seventeen, including three women and a baby, more or less seriously wounded.

Lieut. Reed and thirty-eight men of company C went out from the Dearborn station about 2:45 on a wrecking train. Their duty was to guard the train and prevent interference with the workmen on the part of the rioters. No difficulty was met with until the crossing at Forty-seventh and Loomis street was reached. Here the train stopped and the laborers went to work to lift a box car which was lying across the tracks. A crowd of 10,000 was gathered about the crossing and at once began to threaten violence.

The squad of militia formed in line to protect the workmen. At once the mob pressed forward. Lieut Reed ordered a charge with bayonets. A Pole who was leading the mob swept the first bayonet aside and shouted to his mad followers to come on.

The order to fire was given. It was a close range, and five volleys were necessary before the mob fell back sufficiently to allow the militia to escape to their cars. The engineer had steam up, and as soon as the soldiers were on board he pulled the throttle open and sent the train flying back toward town.

He was none too soon. The wild mob recovered from the confusion into which the firing had thrown it, and with cries of fury rushed after the train. For half a mile the cars were followed by the rioters, who only stopped when they found it impossible to keep up with the train.

Gen Miles at once ordered two companies of regulars and fifty deputy United States marshals to the scene.

MINERS SACK STORES.

Illinois Rioters Destroy Coal Company's Goods—Many Towns Threatened.

The general merchandise store of the White Breast Fuel Company at Ladd, Ill., was thoroughly looted Saturday night by a mob of 1,200 alien miners from Spring Valley. The stock was valued at $30,000 and will be a complete loss. The mob was composed of Lithuanians, Poles, Belgians and Italians, being of the same class that has caused the depredations at Spring Valley, and most of them the same men. The attack upon the company's store was not only for the purpose of securing plunder, but with a view to entirely destroying the property of the coal company. The strikers have become so emboldened by their successes that they made known their plan for the future. It is the sacking of the buildings of coal companies, the destruction of the machinery and the burning of the mines. No one in the locality doubts that this plan has been fully agreed upon. This work, the miners assert through their leaders, will be accomplished. Ottawa citizens volunteered to assist the Sheriff. The Mayor of Peru called a meeting of the citizens, and an armed organization of 150 men was formed to protect the city. Gov. Altgeld was asked for 100 stand of arms. The Sheriff swore in a home guard of 250 men, and firearms and ammunition were issued to all.

SUMMARY OF THE SITUATION.

The Pullman Strike Has Now Grown to National Dimensions.

From an incipient strike affecting only a few hundred men in the town of Pullman has evolved a disturbance which to-day is national in its scope. The entire industrial world is threatened with complete suspension. Labor in all parts of the country is debating the question of lending aid to the American Railway Union. If it decides in the affirmative the result may be a material change in the socio-economic conditions of the country. While Chicago is still the center of the disturbance, the following summary of dispatches from various points shows the magnitude to which the trouble has spread:

Baltimore has not been reached by the sympathetic wave.

Buffalo hourly expects a general tie-up of railroads entering there.

In West Virginia the cause of the Chicago strikers is generally espoused.

In the South Alabama is the greatest sufferer. Troops are necessary to preserve order.

After a ten-hour session, the members of the A. R. U., at Peoria, resolved to strike.

Pittsburg is watched with great interest by both sides. It is an important railway point and it is a stronghold of trades unions. As yet, however, the town has not played an active part.

BIT OF THE LAKE FRONT CAMP.

At Fordham a battalion of the First Regiment twice charged on rioters who had become demonstrative.

Members of the American Railway Union on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe system have been ordered out.

Engineers and firemen of the Alton have declared off the strike and will be restored to their former positions.

The Second Regiment, Tennessee National Guard, has been ordered to prepare to move at a moment's notice.

A thousand more of Uncle Sam's boys in blue arrived at Chicago, Monday, to re-enforce those already in the field.

A. R. U. men at Toledo will strike and are making strenuous efforts to secure the co-operation of the brotherhoods.

The railroad blockade is complete in California except at a few points in the south. Vast quantities of fruit are rotting.

Captain Reed's troop of cavalry arrived at Billings, Mont., from Fort Custer, and immediately camped on railroad property.

At Salt Lake, Utah, the situation is unchanged. Four companies of the Sixteenth infantry received orders to move and left for Ogden.

The engineer and fireman of a Wabash train were seized by strikers at Ashley, Ind., and compelled to take oath to at once leave town.

The West is giving in to the strike. Tacoma, Wash., is thoroughly in sympathy with the Chicago strikers. Even the militia has refused to ride on trains manned by nonunion men. So strong is the feeling out there that fathers of the soldiers who "went out" avowed they would disown their sons if they rode on a train manned by "scabs."

FIRST REGIMENT, I. N. G., TO THE FRONT.

Montana, Utah, Oregon, Iowa, California, Washington and Idaho are more or less affected by the strike, which is spreading to allied trades.

Resolutions condemning both Pullman and Debs and indorsing the President's action were adopted by the Champaign (Ill.) Citizens' Association.

Department Commander McDowell has offered the services of the Grand Army veterans of Illinois to Governor Altgeld to aid in suppressing disorder.

St. Louis is wavering. Many men who joined the strike a week ago have shown a disposition to return to work. Others insist on carrying the war to victory.

Ohio may become the center of war. Cleveland, Cincinnati and other towns in the State are warm in support of President Debs' course. Traffic has been interrupted for several days.

Chicago Typographical Union appropriated $1,000 for relief of the Pullman strikers, and sent a message to President Cleveland appealing for withdrawal of Federal support to corporations.

The regular army of the United States consists of upward of 20,000 men. Only half of these would be available for active service in the field. It would take 10,000 men to guard the government property throughout the country. Then the militia can be called upon. It is made up exactly of 110,796 men. But one labor organization alone, which threatened to strike, numbers 150,000 men.

Nearly every town in Illinois is experiencing trouble. To the railroad strike is added the terror of miners' outbreak. In LaSalle citizens have been obliged to arm themselves and organize for protection of stores, public buildings and other property. At Cairo, on the Illinois Central, 500 railroad men are idle and business in all lines is suspended. Signs of a change for the better are wanting. For obvious reasons the condition in towns in Illinois cannot be changed until the trouble in Chicago is at an end or better than it is now.

Getting at the Facts.

Attorney—You are the President of the Dazzling Sun Gas Company, are you not?"

Witness—I am.

"Now, sir, for the purpose of getting at the facts in this case I am compelled to ask you what it costs the company per thousand feet to manufacture gas?"

"That, sir, is a matter of no concern to you and has nothing to do with this case."

"I insist upon knowing."

"I prefer not to answer, sir."

(To the Court): "Your honor it is absolutely necessary to get the figures."

The Court—The witness will answer the question.

"Now, then, I will ask you again, sir. How much does the manufacture of gas cost the company by the thousand feet."

"I haven't any idea. I have nothing to do with the business affairs of the company, sir, except to draw my regular quarterly dividend of 5 per cent."—Chicago Tribune.

The Real Demon of the Marsh

Is not a spook, but a reality. It is neither a "bogie" nor a "kelpie," nor any other of those spirits which the credulous have supposed to haunt the banks of rivers and streams after dusk. Its name is malaria, and though invisible, it is very terrible and tenacious when it seizes you. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters drives it away, nor will it attack those whose systems are fortified with the great medicinal defensive agent. The miasmatic mists of early morning, the vapors exhaled at eventide may be safely breathed by those protected by the Bitters. In the tropics where every form of malarial disease threatens the sojourner, and is particularly virulent when developed, the Bitters is the best reliance of the inhabitant. For dyspepsia, liver complaint, lack of vigor, appetite and sleep; for rheumatism and nervousness the Bitters are a sure and safe remedy.

Equal to the Occasion.

Count Raphael Cohen, head of the famous Belgian banking firm, who purchased his title of Count, has a tendency to drop the name of Cohen and to retain that of Antwerp, Anvers being the Gallicised equivalent of Antwerp, Count and Countess C. d'Anvers sounding much better than Cohen of Antwerp. Old Baron Oppenheim, who was aware of this weakness on the part of the Antwerp Cohens, finding, on one occasion, their names inscribed on the register of a hotel as "Comte et Comtesse C. d'Anvers," wrote his own name immediately underneath as "Baron Q. de Cologue."

ARE ROYAL NOBODIES

EX-KINGS AND EX-QUEENS LIVING ON PAST MEMORIES.

Princely Micawbers Who Are Industriously Waiting for Something to Turn Up—Lives Spent in Scandalous Dissipation—Europe Overrun with Them.

They're a Worthless Lot.

There are a good many royal personages in Europe out of a job, and outside their "noble" blood there are very few of them who have much of a claim upon public interest. A few no doubt have to some extent interested themselves in science, art and literature, but the great bulk of them are like Dickens' Micawber, waiting for something to turn up.

PRINCE VICTOR NAPOLEON.

Take the descendants of the Bonapartes, for instance. None of them has so far amounted to anything, nor is it probable that any of them will distinguish himself. Prince Victor Napoleon, at 31, and Prince Louis Napoleon at 29, are about as useless young men as one could imagine. They are of very slender intellectual capacity, have no serious occupation whatever, and are simply living on their names, with the aid of a pension subscribed by the remaining adherents of the Bonaparte family. The Empress Eugenie has wearied of supporting them and has cut off their supplies, leaving them a charge upon other Bonapartists.

The Orleanist Princes.

The Orleanist princes are not much better, though the head of the family, and the once possible successor to the French throne, the Comte de Paris, did cast off his inertia and come over to this country to aid in the struggle for the maintenance of the Union. The Duc d'Aumale is, perhaps, the best of the lot, but the Duc d'Orleans has repeatedly dragged the family name in the mire, one of his escapades being his notorious pursuit of an opera singer in Vienna. The Orleanists are pretty well fixed financially; in fact, are wealthy. They are exceedingly avaricious, however, and have repeatedly evicted tenants from the miserable tenement houses owned by them, and cast them out into the street to live or die, as the case might be.

DUKE D'AUMALE.

A Dissolute Ex-Queen.

Paris is the Mecca of deposed monarchs and worthless princes, the most notable member of its royal colony, perhaps, being ex-Queen Isabella of Spain. She is probably the most dissolute woman of royal blood in Europe—at least has borne that unenviable reputation for many years. Though well advanced in years, she still clings to her old associations, and her unsavory character has made her a marked woman even in the French capital. In every respect she is the opposite of her daughter, the Infanta Eulalia, who captivated the hearts of the American people during her visit to this country.

EX-KING MILAN.

Don Carlos, the representative of the Carlist party in Spain, is a gentleman whose fame is chiefly of an undesirable kind. Among his other exploits was the theft of his wife's diamonds. Investigation disclosed the fact that he had pawned them, but the discovery did not seem to particularly annoy the blue-blooded Don Carlos, who treated the whole matter as one of the pardonable pecadillos of a gentleman of leisure.

Russia's Royal Nobodies.

The Grand Dukes of Russia and other members of the imperial family, with the exception of Grand Dukes Alexis and Vladimir, amount to very little. The Czarowitz, Nicholas, has up to date given no evidence of his capacity for properly administering the great power which will one day be his, and but for the accident of birth would be a nobody. Scandals in which the names of his imperial relatives were mixed up have been of frequent occurrence at the court of St. Petersburg, and at no court in Europe is there wilder dissipation.

The imperial family of Austria is not much better off than that of Russia, intellectually or morally. There are scores of archdukes and archduchesses, but with the single exception of the Archduke Albrecht none of them amounts to anything. Albrecht, who is nearly 90 years old, achieved undoubted fame as commander-in-chief in the war of 1866, and particularly on the battlefield of Custozza. Aside from him, none of the imperial family has accomplished anything worth talking about.

A Crazy, Kingly Crown.

The mental weakness of the ruling family of Bavaria is a matter of international knowledge. King Ludwig drowned himself, his brother and successor, King Otto, is supposed to be unbalanced; the Empress of Austria, Otto's cousin, is scarcely better off, and of all the family only Leopold, the regent, is altogether free from the family taint.

The princes of Saxony are far from being great men—in fact, are very little men in comparison with their predecessors. The Duke of Saxe-Meiningen is the exception to the rule, he having interested himself in theatrical matters and carved out a name for himself as one of the greatest theatrical directors and advisers in Europe.

Ex-King Milan, of Servia, is a political and moral nonentity. He has a mania for gambling and other dissipation, and that is practically all that can be said about him.

An Object Lesson.

People living in the vicinity of Fostoria, Ohio, have had an uncomfortable reminder of the power of earth's hidden forces. A gas well had been drilled to the depth of three hundred and fifty feet and the well had just been cased. The drillers heard the roar of gas as the drill tapped the reservoir, and ran for their lives from the derrick, but none too soon, as the ponderous drill was hurled like a shot from a gun to a height of nearly one hundred feet above the tree tops. The casing quickly followed, and was scattered and bent in a tangled mass. No sooner had the ponderous volume of gas given vent to its strength than it ignited from the fires of the boiler near by and a steady volume of fire shot up over one hundred and fifty feet high. Enough oil was thrown out with the gas to make a lake of fire about the well. The surrounding land is boggy, and for a quarter of a mile around the well in many places the gas is coming up through the earth with such force that ground and water are thrown to a height of ten feet or more, and these patches resemble boiling springs. The water gurgles and dances from the escape of the gas fully a quarter of a mile away from the well. The entire woods is filled with the gas coming through the ground, and people have left the place, fearing at any time that the entire vicinity may spring into a mass of seething flames. The roar of the gas can be heard for nearly ten miles. Nothing like it has ever been known. It is in entirely new territory, and is supposed to be a crevice or pocket which will soon blow itself out.

Telegraph is Universal.

The most widely separated points between which a telegram can be sent are British Columbia and New Zealand. The telegram would cross North America, Newfoundland, the Atlantic, England, Germany, Russia (European and Asiatic), China, Japan, Java and Australia. It would make nearly a circuit of the globe, and would traverse over 20,000 miles in doing so.

ROMAN SACRIFICES.

Red-Haired Puppies Went Up in the Spring to Encourage the Crops.

We learn from Festus that the Romans sacrificed red-haired puppies in spring, in the belief that the crops would thus grow ripe and ruddy; and there can be little doubt that these puppies, like the lamb sacrifice at Holme and King's Teignton, were a substitute for an original human victim. Prof. Ramsey, the great authority on Phrygian custom, believes that Attis was at first represented by a human victim, who "was probably slain each year by a cruel death, just as the god himself died," and Mr. Fraser has shown that Attis was essentially a god of vegetation, that one of his epithets was "very fruitful," that he was addressed as "the reaped yellow ear of corn," and that the story of his sufferings, death and resurrection was interpreted as the ripe grain wounded by the reaper, buried in the granary and coming to life again when sown in the ground. Adonis, again, is one of these gods of vegetation, originally represented, no doubt, by a human victim.

The famous Gardens of Adonis were baskets or pots filled with earth in which wheat, barley and flowers were sown at the time when the women were mourning over the dead Adonis. To this day, in Sicily, at the approach of Easter, the women sow wheat, lentils, and canary seed in plates, which are kept in the dark and watered every two days. When the plants shoot up "the plates containing them," says Mr. Fraser, "are placed on the sepulchres which, with effigies of the dead Christ, are made up in Roman Catholic and Greek churches on Good Friday, just as the Gardens of Adonis were placed on the grave of the dead Adonis." Mr. Fraser has also pointed out the marks of a similar element in the worship of Osiris. He was a deity of vegetation, the first to teach men the use of corn, and his annual festival began with the ploughing of the earth.

In one of the chapels dedicated to Osiris in the great temple of Isis, at Philae, the dead body of Osiris is represented with stalks of corn springing from it, and a priest is watering the stalks from a pitcher. Mr. Fraser suggests that the legend of the mangled remains of the god being scattered up and down the land "may be a reminiscence of the custom of slaying a human victim * * * and distributing his flesh or scattering his ashes over the fields to fertilize them." Indeed, Manetho tells us that the Egyptians used to burn their red-haired men and scatter their ashes with winnowing fans.—Fortnightly Review.

Catch Questions.

If a goose weighs ten pounds and a half its own weight, what is the weight of the goose? Who has not been tempted to reply on the instant fifteen pounds?—the correct answer being, of course, twenty pounds. Indeed, it is astonishing what a very simple query will sometimes catch a wise man napping. Even the following have been known to succeed.

How many days would it take to cut up a piece of cloth fifty yards long, one yard being cut off every day?

A snail climbing up a post twenty feet high ascends five feet every day and slips down four feet every night. How long will the snail take to reach the top of the post?

A wise man having a window one yard high and one yard wide, requiring more light, enlarged his window to twice its former size, yet the window was still only one yard high and one yard wide. How was this done?

This a catch question in geometry, as the preceding were catch questions in arithmetic. The window was diamond-shaped at first, and was afterwards made square.

As to the two former, perhaps it is scarcely necessary seriously to point out that the answer to the first is not fifty days, but forty-nine; and to the second, not twenty days, but sixteen—since the snail who gains one foot each day for fifteen days, climbs on the sixteenth day to the top of the pole and there remains.

A man walks around a pole, on the top of which is a monkey. As the man moves, the monkey turns on the top of the pole so as still to keep face to face with the man. Query:—When the man has gone around the pole, has he, or has he not, gone around the monkey?

The answer which will occur at first sight to most persons is that the man has not gone around the monkey since he has never been behind it. The correct answer, however, as decided by Knowledge in the pages of which this momentous question has has been argued, is that the man has gone around the monkey in going around the pole.

It Didn't Work.

I was standing before the stamp window at a surburban postoffice the other day, waiting for a woman to get through, that I might invest half a dollar in carmine chromos of our country's paternal. The woman who had the attention of the clerk, had a package upon which two of the adhesive portraits mentioned had been affixed, and she desired to learn if they were sufficient to carry the package on its way. The clerk weighed the parcel and asked if it was a newspaper. "Yes," replied the woman, "a newspaper with a pair of mittens inside." "That makes it merchandise," said the clerk, "it will require four cents more." "I'll not pay it!" she exclaimed. The clerk simply smiled. Meantime the woman fished out four more stamps. "There is no writing in it, is there?" asked the clerk. "Only a short note," says the woman, as she gently laid the stamps upon her tongue, gum side down. "O, then it will be letter postage," said the clerk, "sixteen cents." "I'll not pay it," ejaculated the woman, grabbing the parcel and starting for the door with an air of outraged innocence. It was a case of ignorance merely. No wrong was intended and it was foolish, therefore, to get angry at herself.—Arkansaw Traveler.

VERAGUA has got a job. The Government of Spain has given it to him. The gentlemen who have been collecting a relief fund for the duke may now call it off.

THE best work need not look for common credit.

He Didn't Get the Encore.

An old actor said recently:

"Nothing is funnier in my eyes than the easy way in which singers, dancers, and vaudeville people generally respond to 'encores' nowadays.

"It sounds like a paradox to say that a person can take a thing which they don't get, doesn't it?

"Yet, that's what these performers do.

"It wasn't that way when I was young.

"I remember the case of an ambitious singer in a company with me, who was billed to warble a ballad.

"He wanted to be well prepared for his recalls, so he brought up three different suits of clothes and dumped them at the wing behind a screen.

"Then he rushed around and got two good-natured actors—I was one of 'em—to help him make his 'quick changes' at the proper moment.

"When he went on for his first ballad, attired in a dress suit, we waited behind the screen, quaking with apprehension, for fear we shouldn't be quick enough or shouldn't do everthing right.

"He was a new man with us.

"Well, he finished his third verse of 'Robin Ruff and Gaffer Green,' bowed, sauntered off the stage, and then made a mad rush for the screen, throwing his coat one way and his vest the other.

"We held a blue velvet coat for him to slip into, but he never slipped.

"For not one sound came from that audience!

"I shall never forget the poor fellow's face as he heard the continuous rounds of silence, and saw the stage manager drop the curtain on his scene.

"We helped him to gather up the unnecessary togs, though I assure you that I felt like a pallbearer at a funeral."—New York Recorder.

Whence Came Umbrellas?

Our name for the umbrella being obviously taken from the Italian ombrello, naturally refers us to Italy as the source from which we have derived that useful article. If we had obtained it intermediately from France, we would, doubtless, have taken with it the name of parapluie, which in the present use of the implement is a more expressive and proper name than that of ombrello, which signifies a "little shade," and refers to the original use as a defence against the sun, rather than to its present use as a shelter from the rain.

There seems to be no doubt that the umbrella was first introduced into Italy from the East, and from thence found its way into the other countries of Europe. It seem also that the applicability of the instrument as a defence from rain was quite an afterthought, and that it was originally, as in the East, only used to protect the person from the rays of the sun.

A Soft Spot in the Iron Duke.

The Duke of Wellington, when he was driving the French out of the Peninsula, was obliged to be very strict with his men. One day three soldiers were caught in the act of committing a crime, and were tried by court martial and ordered to be shot. They were each tied up to the branches of a tree by ropes under the armpits. A firing party was brought, fired a volley, and then retired.

Now, the Duke had caused the provost marshal to put only powder in the guns of the firing party, though none of the condemned men, nor even those who fired, knew of it. The three soldiers were then secretly dressed in the uniform of another regiment, and entered as recruits under other names; and thus was life saved, discipline kept, and hardly a man in the army was the wiser.

Flies Responsible for the Slaves.

Flies are largely responsible for the slave trade in Africa. The technical name of this African fly is tsetse. It is commonly called the "elepnant fly." Its sting is fatal to horses, mules, oxen, and dogs. The ivory traders cannot bring any domestic animals into the country to transport their ivory to the coast. The transportation must be done by natives, and as the dealers can buy negroes at a low rate and sell them at a considerable advance on the coast, the custom of buying stout young men among the natives, loading them with ivory and sending them to the coast and there selling both the ivory and the negroes was long ago established. It will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to break up the traffic so long as that pesky fly is found in the elephant country.

Boilers.

What will prove a most useful industrial development is the application of electricity to the cleansing and preservation of boilers. The method employed is the sending of currents periodically through the shell of the boiler. By this means the scale formed on the shell and tubes is disintegrated and easily removed.

A SINGLE pair of robins have built a chain of eleven nests linked together by means of dried orchard grass on a girder in a tobacco shed on the plantation of Howard Pitkin, East Hartford, Conn. The string of nests was built last spring.

Healthiest City in Europe.

This is, according to the latest statistics issued by the German Imperial Health Department, Berlin, whose death-rate is only 16.3 per 1,000. The unhealthiest in the world is Alexandria, which, despite its unvarying fine weather, its 300 fountains, and its soft sea breezes, has a death-rate of no less than 52.9 per 1,000. London occupies a favorable position with a rate of 20.3; but Stockholm and Christiana are better off, with rates of 16.9 and 19 respectively. Rome, on the other hand, prepared for the advent of the doctors by running up a death-rate of 27.6 and Venice emulated this example with a rate of 30.1. A bird's-eye view of the sanitary situation of Europe shows that it is the damp, chill, cloudy North which is healthy; and the dry, warm, sunny South which is unhealthy.

Ready Witticism.

Mine host of the Cavour was standing at the door talking to M. Jacobi, says Howard Paul. At that moment a man passed.

"Talk of literary style, there goes a fellow noted for his finished sentences!"

"Indeed!" said Jacobi. "Is he a novelist?"

"No," retorted Phillipe; "he is an ex-convict."

On another occasion, when the twain were chatting, Jacobi remarked,

"Some men are hard to see through."

"Yes," replied mine host of the Cavour; "but you can see through almost any man when you get half a dozen glasses in him."

Cleansing Matting Toughens It.

A good quality of matting can be cleaned, and so far from injuring it, it will become tougher from the application of water, and will wear better, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer. A large kitchen table should be placed in the yard, with a hose at hand. Scrub the matting with a moderately stiff brush and any good soap, using warm water; then rinsewell with the hose. A tablespoonful of ammonia to each pail of suds will give a clear look, but a large amount will yellow it. Scouring with bran water gives a good result, and for a monthly washing while on the floor, there is nothing better than salt and water.

The Size of the Land.

"This is a great country," said the "uncommercial traveler." "I recently spent a couple of weeks in beautiful Denver. On the last day of my stay, in talking with a bright-looking resident, who, following custom, took his meals at a restaurant, I naturally inquired, 'Do you come from the East?' 'Oh, yes,' he replied, 'I am an Eastern man.' 'From where do you come?' was my second natural question. 'From Topeka,' was the answer given with calm assurance. Since that I have been wondering if I lived in the East, West, or in what part of the vast country I did live."

Sunflowers and Bees.

Wherever a field of sunflowers is grown, its owner should set up an apiary. It is one of the best bee pastures known. Its luscious and numerous nectaries yield an abundance of the best and most palatable honey. Any one who has passed near a clump of sunflowers in full bloom must have noticed what a buzzing the bees keep up round them, and what a strong scent of honey they exhale. This fact ought to induce many to make an experiment in this direction. We may yet see fields of sunflowers as common as those of oats or rye.

Just as Recommended

Last fall I was taken with a kind of summer complaint, accompanied with a wonderful diarrhœa. Soon after my wife's sister, who lives with us, was taken in the same way. We used almost everything without benefit. Then I said, let us try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which we did, and that cured us right away. I think much of it, as it did for me what it was recommended to do. John Hertzler, Bethel, Berks Co., Pa. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 30

DR. FRUTH, 170 Oakwood Boulevard, Chicago.

SAILED THE SEAS 38 YEARS.

One of His Experiences.

For thirty-eight years Capt. Loud followed the sea, most of that time as master of a vessel, and upon retiring from the water was appointed by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to superintend the seal fisheries in Alaska, which position he held five years. He relates one experience as follows:

"For several years I had been troubled with general nervousness and pain in the region of my heart. My greatest affliction was sleeplessness; it was almost impossible at any time to obtain rest and sleep. Having seen Dr. Miles' remedies advertised I began using Nervine. After taking a small quantity the benefit received was so great that I was positively alarmed, thinking the remedy contained opiates which would finally be injurious to me; but on being assured by the druggist that it was perfectly harmless, I continued it together with the Heart Cure. Today I can conscientiously say that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure did more for me than anything I had ever taken. I had been treated by eminent physicians in New York and San Francisco without benefit. I owe my present good health to the judicious use of these most valuable remedies, and heartily recommend them to all afflicted as I was."—Capt. A. P. Loud, Hampden, Me.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Cure are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, express prepaid. They are free from all opiates and dangerous drugs.

BUTLER.

Our water works are burning wood, and find it cheaper than coal.

The Fourth passed off quietly in Butler, many of our people going to other places visiting.

Harvest in the country and the railroad strike has made our town a little dull the past week.

E. W. Foadick has placed a new plate glass front in his business building on west side of Broadway.

Many of Butler's worthy railroad people who had removed elsewhere, are improving the Wabash tieup by spending a few day at their old home.

Quite a number of our people are camping out at Cold Springs at this time. Rev. Cain preached there last Sabbath, and many of our people spent the day there.

James M. Hook, son of Martin Hook, living two miles north of town, died last Saturday afternoon. His death came not unexpected, as he has been seriously ill for some time.

Mrs. Sarah Nelson's dwelling had a close call from fire on the morning of the fifth, catching near the ground, perhaps from a fire-cracker. It was extinguished before serious damage resulted.

Charles Culbertson, living six miles northwest of Butler, had his new barn that was built last year, burned last Thursday night, with all its contents amounting to about $500. Cause not known. Insured in Co. Mutual in greater part.

A sad case of drowning occured near here last Friday. Samuel May, son of Adolph May, of this place, with his brother and a boy named Krouse, a grandson of James Chambers, went to what is known as Perkey's, or Kepler's Mill, about 8 miles north, for the purpose of fishing. They went out on the water in a leaky boat, and from some cause, the boys can't explain it, it capsized for them. They all escaped except Samuel May, who was drowned. The water was shallow and it is supposed he had a cramp, and was unable to help himself, and a lack of presence of mind on the part of his comrades, and perhaps that of Mr. Chilcotes, who was close by, resulted as above stated. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church last Sunday.

CONCORD.

Della Koch has a pet bear.

Richard Ervin is on the mend.

Will Smurr has the boss corn field.

Philip Layman is gradually growing weaker.

Mrs. M. Gibford and Alice Draggoo drove to St. Joe Saturday.

G. W. Draggoo and James Johnson were in Spencerville Saturday.

The wire worms are still destroying several acres of corn on muck land.

Lily and Rosa Jones, of Edgerton, O., spent the Fourth with sister, Birdie Fetters.

Sol. Barney and John Leighty Jr., of St. Joe, drove up to Concord Saturday afternoon.

Sol. Barney and daughter, Violet, drove up to the home of his brother-in-law, J. B. Gibford, Sunday afternoon.

A man from Butler was taking orders for silverware, and some of our young men gave quite large orders. We wonder, yes, we wonder.

C. H. Bliss and Cal. Husselman spoke to a good crowd at Smith's grove, near Concord, July 4, and were followed by a man named Weeks, from Hicksville. The Glee Club and band boys made good music.

Report has it that a St. Joe boy took possession of a livery rig belonging to White & Draggoo, of St. Joe, and stole another boy's girl, then went to the social, pretending to be as honest as the minister. But Draggoo came up and fastened on the rig, but the Spencerville boy was sweepstakes in taking her home.

WATERLOO.

Miss Verna Darby is entertaining friends from the east.

Mrs. Emma McFarrand, nee Fisher, of Ft. Wayne, is here on a visit.

Fred. I. Willis is home for a vacation. He is employed in Indianapolis.

Mr. Armstrong is home again and Mrs. Armstrong and the girls are happy.

Mrs. Edward Ettinger and son, of Angola, are at the old home for a few days.

Mrs. May Kunz and son Homer, of Toledo, O., are guests in the family of Geo. Shoner.

Miss Della Wheeler has returned from Kendallville where she was the guest of Miss Inez Johnson.

The militia boys have received orders to be ready to start at any moment for the scene of the riots.

Miss Sylvia Daniels and Matie Delong have returned from Adrian, Mich., where they have been visiting.

Miss Minnie Voss is home again. She has been trimming for a millinery house in the south part of the state.

Mrs. Mattie E. Beidler came over from Auburn Saturday, to spend Sunday in Waterloo, returning Monday.

Miss Edna Bowers, of Marshall, Mich., arrived Tuesday to spend the summer with her sister, Mrs. O. C. Dickinson.

Grandfather Willis returned from New York Tuesday morning. He reports things all quiet along the Lake Shore.

Charlie Voss, of Peru, Ind., who is a Wabash fireman, concluded that this would be a good time to visit mother, and so came home.

Miss Phoebe Walker left Waterloo last week for New Jersey, but getting as far as Fostoria, Ohio, was obliged to return on account of the strike.

Misses Hattie Smith and Ada Williamson are at home from a few days' visit at Fairfield Center, where they were the guests of Mrs. Mattie Gardner.

United States troops passed through Waterloo Monday, enroute for Chicago, on account of the strike. They were the Ninth regular infantry from Oswego, N. Y.

The lawn social of the Junior Endeavor society, held at the home of the president, Master Winn Keep, was well patronized and they feel quite encouraged at their first attempt.

Prof. Collins and wife, of Mt. Pleasant, Ia., on their way to attend the National Teachers' Association at Asbury Park, N. J., spent Sunday in Waterloo with the family of J. M. Waterman.

The east bound day mail train Monday had the smoker catch fire soon after leaving Ligonier. They stopped between Wawaka and Brimfield and tried to put it out, but failed and then run on to Kendallville, where a hose from the tank stopped it. It is supposed it caught from a spark from the west bound train that carried the soldiers.

THE best investment in real estate is to keep buildings well painted. Paint protects the house and saves repairs. You sometimes want to sell—many a good house has remained unsold for want of paint. The rule should be, though, "the best paint or none." That means

Strictly Pure White Lead

You cannot afford to use cheap paints. To be sure of getting Strictly Pure White Lead, look at the brand; any of these are safe:

"Anchor," "Ecker-stein," "Armstrong & McKelvy," "Beymer-Bauman," "Davis-Chambers," "Collier," "Shipman," "Southern," "Red Seal," "Fahnestock."

FOR COLORS.—National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

These colors are sold in one-pound cans, each can being sufficient to tint 25 pounds of strictly Pure White Lead the desired shade; they are in no sense ready-mixed paints, but a combination of perfectly pure colors in the handiest form: to tint Strictly Pure White Lead.

For Circuit Judge.

Cyrus Cline, the democratic nominee for judge of this judicial circuit, was born and brought up on a farm in Steuben county, is now 41 years old, and well known to most to The Herald's readers. In 1872 he graduated from the Angola high schools and at once entered Hillsdale college, graduating from that institution in 1876, his class selecting him to deliver the class-day oration—the highest honor it could bestow. Mr. Cline is in a sense a self made man, having pushed his way through college alone, working during vacation, and teaching. On his return from college, Mr. Cline was selected by the township trustees and appointed County Superintendent of Public Schools, a position which he held until 1883, and discharged the duties of his responsible position with such marked ability, that the school system of Steuben county took a long stride forward during his administration; and in recognition of his ability and special fitness, the Hon James H. Smart, then State Superintendent, placed him on program for the State teachers' association and assigned to him the subject of "Grading District Schools."

During the last three years of his superintendency, Mr. Cline entered the law office of Messrs. Woodhull & Croxton, preparing during his leisure time for the practice of law. In 1883 he was admitted to the bar and entered upon his chosen work, and has followtd it ever since. Following the example of his father, Mr. Cline began politics as a republican, and voted with that party until the campaign of 1880, when he espoused the cause of democracy, and has since been known as a democrat. During the past ten years he has taken a more active interest than ever before in politics and has been recognized here as one of the most fearless, able and energetic democrats of this county, and owing to his ability and system, has proved one of our most efficient party workers. His conservative views on leading political questions of the day have made him many friends. We have known Mr. Cline intimately for the past ten years, being so situated in business that we are daily thrown in his society, and know him to be a careful and competent business man, a close student and polished scholar, a man of exemplary habits, and well qualified for the position to which he aspires, and if elected will give the people an economical and efficient administration of the judicial affairs of the district.

Surprised on His 35th.

A number of the friends of G. W. Wilcox gave him a big surprise July 2. They reached his home near New Era after nine o'clock, when he had retired for the night. But he got up just the same. The party all brought baskets filled to the handles with good things for a supper, which they all enjoyed. They had a social time till about midnight. Among the company were the following and their wives: Levi Jackson, G. W. Fair, Albert, Thrush, Perry Fair, Wm. Shilling and daughter, Royce Vinnie, Blanche and Fay Fair, Tina Moody, Ora and Alda Feagler, Delbert Jackson and John Moody. From Auburn were Mrs. Carpenter, Miss Hanes and F. M. Ray.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

The convention to nominate a candidate for judge in this circuit met at Waterloo last Friday, July 6, both Steuben and DeKalb being represented by full delegations, 28 for DeKalb and 15 for Steuben. As mentioned last week, there had been serious talk of endorsing John W. Baxter, who had been nominated by the populists the week before. Steuben county, on the other hand, came down to ask the nomination of a man from that county. So the matter was fully discussed beforehand. In this county, the democrats were greatly divided, some for Baxter and some against him and in favor of having a straight democrat. The convention was called to order at half past one by J. F. Shuman, of DeKalb, and the regular call was read by Chairman John W. Somerlott, of Steuben. D. D. Moody was made president of the meeting, and made a brief speech on taking the chair. J. A. Barns, of the COURIER, was nominated for secretary, but declined as he wished to report the meeting. However, it was changed so as to include all the democratic editors of the two counties, and so carried, but all the other editors being delegates, none served. There was not much to do. When nominations were in order, a motion by Vic Hendry, and seconded by G. W. Maxwell, that we proceed to announce candidates, was carried. Editor Sheffer, of Angola, moved that we proceed, first, to name the candidates, and, second, to ballot for them. Carried. W. G. Croxton, of Angola, in a very complimentary speech, nominated Cyrus Cline, of Angola, as a candidate for judge. G. W. Maxwell, of DeKalb, named John W. Baxter. But Mr. Baxter at once arose, and in a frank, manly speech, declined to be considered as a candidate. He said he was satisfied from what he had seen and heard in talking with the delegates, that they preferred to nominate a straight democrat for the place. And as he was a prohibitionist and not a democrat, he could not enter the race under such conditions. When he had finished talking, G. W. Maxwell, who had placed Baxter in nomination, arose and moved that the nomination of Mr. Cline be made unanimous, which was done. Cline was then called out and made a bright little speech, thanking the convention for the honor. He spoke in a complimentary vein of the honorable history of the democratic party, a party that has always been right on all the leading questions of national and state policy, and had the courage to stand steadfast to its convictions. He was roundly cheered.

PROSECUTOR.

This office came next, and Mr. Hendry nominated L. J. Gengler of DeKalb. No other names being offered, Mr. Sheffer arose and said that Steuben county had a first-class man. Mr. Yotter, whose name would have been brought before the convention, had the judgeship been given to DeKalb; but as it had gone to a Steuben county man, he thought the office of prosecutor should be conceded to DeKalb. So he moved that the secretary of the meeting be instructed to cast the entire delegate vote of the convention for Mr. Gengler. This was carried. The chair, however, mistaking the nature of this resolution, did what would amount to the same thing by calling for a viva voce vote on it, in the same way as a vote for "acclamation." Mr. Gengler was called on for a speech and he arose and thanked the convention. He said he would make a hard fight to be elected, and went on to say that if elected prosecutor, he would do his best to "hang every one of them—I mean all the republicans." The way in which he said this raised shouts of laughter that lasted several minutes. Indeed it kept up so he could hardly finish his speech. Hon. S. S. Shutt here made a motion to adjourn, which was carried, and the convention and its work were over.

Congress not Slow.

We have already called attention to the fact that congress is not slow though every republican paper has raised the howl. We have already shown that an unusual amount of work has been done, in spite of the delays caused by republican members who are doing this only that their party papers and talkers may have something to complain of. In proof of our view of this we quote a recent interview with Speaker Crisp, who as chief officer of the House, has the best knowledge of the work it has done on is doing.

"I am much gratified said he," "at the expeditious and satisfactory manner in which the present house of representatives dispatched public business." In view of the near approach of the close of the session, Mr. Crisp had been requested to outline the general features of legislation accomplished by the house, and what remained to be done to round up the work of the session. "We have been singularly free from exasperating delays," said the speaker, "and the great questions of tariff and finance have been acted upon by the house with exceptional promptness, considering the vast interests involved. And yet there has been no curtailment of reasonable debate, and we have heard very little complaint or criticism on that score. On the other hand filibustering is practically a thing of the past, and the house has experienced little delay for the mere sake of delay."

The speaker was asked to enumerate the leading measures passed by the house. The tariff bill naturally comes first," said he, its passage by the house was attended by a few delays. The extra session permitted organization of comimttees, so that the ways and means committee was well along on its work before the date when congress usually assembles, and the bill was actually presented early in January, when, as a usual thing, the committees are just beginning to organize. In the debate, also, there was no wasting of time, and I think Chairman Wilson succeeded in satisfying both sides of the house that he desired to be fair, and yet to satisfy the wishes of the public that the bill should be brought to a vote after fair discussion.

"On the financial question, also," continued the speaker, "we have avoided irritating delays. When the business depression last summer brought on the widespread public demand for the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman act the house met in extraordinary session, and quickly performed its part in the repeal for which President Cleveland had convened congress. Those opposing the repeal recognized the propriety of allowing the house to reach a vote without delay, and an agreement to that effect was made and executed. Another measure of great importance passed by the house was the repeal of the federal election laws, enacted during the reconstuction period. Three new states—Arizona, New Mexico and Utah—have been admitted to the union, so far as the house can accomplish that end, and it remains only for the senate to complete the legislative work. The appropriation bills have all been passed by the house, and most of the important ones were passed at an unusually early stage of the session. Altogether it is a record of work done, and done quickly, which must prove satisfactory to the house and to the public, as it does to myself."

Mr. Crisp was asked to outline the more important work yet to be done by the house. "There is a general desire," said he, "to take up the bill so widely discussed for choosing senators by a direct vote of the people, and it is probable that this measure will be considered. There is also the important bill known as the pooling bill, which grants mutual advantages to the public and to railroads by allowing the roads to pool their earnings. The judiciary committee has several important bills of a judicial and legal character which will be given a hearing. These are the main public measures yet to be heard, and with them passed upon by the house, I think we will be entitled to congratulations, as well as an adjournment."

The Press on the Strikes.

We have clipped a few opinions from country papers of all shades of politics so as to show how the papers of the state and the several parties feel in regard to the strike, or boycott, that has cost the country so many millions.

The Warsaw Indianian (rep.): Still the problem remains—shall it be Debs or President Cleveland who rules this great country? Shall the laws of the country prevail, or be supplanted by those of a dictator? That is the phase and the only phase of the situation just now. * * * There is a vast difference between the governors of Indiana and Illinois The one favors the enforcement of the laws of his state; the protection of property, and the securing to every one his just rights. The other! Well we doubt whether he believes in a Supreme Being, and we are certain that he is an anarchist of a very low and contemptible order. Both were elected as democrasy; but Illinois should be very careful in its selection of a governor the next time!

Butler Record (rep.): The efforts of Pres. Cleveland to stamp out anarchy and lawlessness will be commended by all good people of this country irrespective of party.

Lagrange Democrat: The Duke of Pullman should reduce the dividends he pays his stockholders, and not the wages he pays his employes. As for reducing the price of berths that is not to be considered as a part of the Pullman policy of "the public be damned."

Goshen Times (rep.): The A. R. U. pay Debs a salary of $3,000 a year, and his chief aid $2,000, and seven others $1,500 each. The walking delegates and labor agitators all get good pay, and the money comes out of the pockets of the working people. * * * It will be seen by our late dispatches that Gov. Altgeldt, of Illinois, contemplates issuing a peremptory mandate for the removal of the Federal troops from the state. We would suggest to Gen. Miles that he issue a peremptory order that somebody apply his boot to the seat of the Governor's trousers.

Ft. Wayne Journal (dem.): This strike of sympathy, as it is called, is against the best interests or all of us who work, and the poorer classes will be the ones to bear the heaviest part of the burden. * * * If the workingmen of the United States sympathize with the Pullman workers, as they all do undoubtedly, they can manifest their sympathy in a substantial way by raising money and sending it to those idle people, and not by throwing themselves out of employment.

Ft. Wayne Despatch (populist) At this writing the strike is still on in Fort Wayne. The men are peaceable and quiet, but determined. A few weak-kneed fellows have resumed work, and by their aid and that of a few imported "scabs" the different companies have succeeded in moving some of their trains. About 200 United States marshals arrived in this city Friday and Saturday from Indianapolis. They are a tough looking lot. It would seem as if Indianapolis had unloaded its toughs, tramps and hoboes on Uncle Sam and sent them to Fort Wayne to act as deputy marshals. * * * Sunday, C. Bowser, a street car motor man, was arrested by a U. S. deputy marshal for alleged trespassing on the grounds of the Pittsburg railroad company. He was crossing the yards on his way to work. He was placed under $600 bonds. The whole affair is an outrage. It begins to look as if we were living under a Russian despotism. * * * Friday afternoon a crowd gathered around a west-bound Pittsburg passenger train at the depot, and tried to persuade the fireman, Heber, to quit. Conductor Sloan interfered and the crowd went for Sloan and battered him up, but he managed to escape to the Harmon House.

THE LEAGUE WHEEL,

CHAINLESS,

Has so many Special Advantages over Chain and Sproket that all one has to do to become converted to it is to "SIMPLY RIDE IT" and become satisfied that it is not only the Easiest Running, but the Most Beautiful, Durable and Practical Machine "for either sex" on the Market to-day.

Laporte Argus (dem.): Grover Cleveland has a large amount of "by the eternal" in him, and he is a bad man to fool with. * * * There is but very little public sympathy for Mr. Pullman in this trouble, and there should be none at all. From every standpoint that the matter can be looked at the Pullman Company is justly censurable, and if there is a reasonable excuse for its acts the public has not been made acquainted with it.

Elkhart Review (rep.): President Cleveland's answer to Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, was a state paper that has not been matched for years.

South Bend Times (dem.): Hon. John B. Stoll says: After riot and disorder are squelched, the people will take up the case of Pullman and pass judgment without reserve. The duty of the hour is to establish the supremacy of the law.

Logansport Pharos (dem.): The strike is going to cost Indiana a considerable sum of money, but under the new tax law the railroads are required to pay their just share of taxation and their property should, therefore, be protected.

Shelby Democrat: A needless labor strike is one of those blunders that are worse than crimes. The railway strike in the west was voted out of sympathy with the Pullman workers. It will end without benefiting them, and will have cost the working people of this country ten thousand times the amount involved in the claim of the Pullman employes. The strike has not only thrown into idleness a multitude of workmen in many branches of industry, involving a vast loss in wages, but it will result in eating up the scant savings of the thrifty.

Steuben Republican: In all his efforts to maintain order and uphold the laws President Cleveland should have the earnest support of every loyal citizen of the nation.

His Seventy-Eighth.

July 12 there was an enjoyable gathering at the pleasant farm home of John Less, just at the north limits of Waterloo. It was the 78th anniversary of his birth. Though a native of Pennsylvania, he was among the earliest settlers in this section, having come into the state in 1842. The next year, having brought his family here, he settled in Steuben county. At that date there were but three families in our own beautiful Fairfield township, now so populous and prosperous. On coming to this state he had but one child, a son, Martin. Now, on the occasion of the recent reunion in his honor, he had the pleasure of seeing gathered about him seven sons and two daughters with their families, and when "the voice of the dinner bell was heard in the land," a reporter for the COURIER counted the company that gathered about the tables—sixty strong. The families had provided for the occasion, and it was noticed that, though all partook liberally, there were still many baskets that had not been opened. It was explained soon after that we were working on the ten hour system and these extra supplies were for supper. And so it was that we had a continuing and continued good time, a time of abundance and to spare. Surely, our central figure was "Uncle John Less" himself, his patriarchal figure and kindly smile, with words of love and welcome to all—it was a day and a scene that none present will forget. He was, as said, the central figure of a happy family, itself made up of happy families. The wish of all present was that we may be accorded the privilege of meeting again under such pleasant conditions when another milestone has been passed. All parted from the venerable and kindly man they had met to honor, with mutual words of affection and good will.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Bridge Burned.

The railroad bridge over Cedar Creek at Waterloo was burned out last Wednesday evening, the whole span of about thirty six feet being destroyed. Various idle reports were put into circulation in regard to it, the most of them claiming it was set on fire by strikers from Ashley. But it is not likely that any strikers had anything to do with it. The north bound passenger passed over it at 6 o'clock that evening, as usual, and a little later a freight went over it. Either of these may have dropped a spark or even a coal on the timbers, and this might have smouldered for several hours before being seen. The timbers, too, may have been decayed, as it has been standing a long time. Trains ran next day regularly each side of the break, one coming from Ft. Wayne north to the bridge and there transferring with a train from the north, so that mails, etc. were received regularly. The bridge is now built up again.

BUSY YEAR IN POLITICS.

Thirty Seats to be Filled in the Senate—General Elections.

This is a year of unusual importance and interest in the politics of the country. Not only will the people elect an entirely new house of representatives, which portends a possible change in the complexion of the legislative branch of the government, but in almost all the states officers a e to be chosen from governor down. The legislatures chosen at these general elections in thirty states have the election of United States senators.

The senators whose terms expire March 4, 1894, are:

DEMOCRATS.

John S. Morgan,	Alabama
James H. Berry,	Arkansas
Patrick Walsh,	Georgia
Wm. Lindsay,	Kentucky
Donelson Caffrey,	Louisiana
A. J. McLaurin,	Mississippi
John R. McPherson,	New Jersey
M. W. Ransom,	North Carolina
Matbew C. Butler,	South Carolina
Isham G. Harris,	Tennessee
Richard Coke,	Texas
Eppa Hunton,	Virginia
J. M. Camden,	West Virginia
Joseph M. Carly	Wyoming
John Martin (dem. & pop.)	Kansas
Total	15

REPUBLICANS.

Edward O. Walcott,	Colorado
Anthony Higgins,	Delaware
Geo. L Shoup,	Idaho
Shelby M. Cullom,	Illinois
James F. Wilson,	Iowa
Wm. P. Frye,	Maine
Geo. F. Hoar,	Massachusetts
W. D. Washburn,	Minnesota
James McMillan,	Michigan
Thomas C. Power,	Montana
Chas. F. Manderson,	Nebraska
Wm. E. Chandler,	New Hampshire
Joseph N. Dolph,	Oregon
Nathan F. Dixon,	Rhode Island
Richard F. Pettigrew,	South Dakota
Total	15

In addition to these, vacancies for the terms ending in 1899 are to be filled by the legislatures of Montana, Washington and Wyoming. Virginia has elected Thomas Staples Martin to fill the place of Eppa Hunton, and Kentucky has chosen Senator Lindsay to succeed himself. The legislature of Louisiana has elected Newton C. Blanchard (dem) to serve out the unexpired term of Justice White, which will expire in 1897. On March 4, 1895, Senator Walthall, of Mississippi, will resume his seat. He retired last January on account of ill health for the remainder of his short term, which expires March 4, 1865, and was succeeded by Senator A. J. McLaurin. He had already been re-elected for the term beginning next March. On June 12 the Rhode Island legislature will elect a successor to Senator N. F. Dixon. Ex-Governor George Peabody Wetmore will be elected without much question.

Rhode Island elected state officers and a new legislature on April 4, and Oregon followed her example on June 4. There will be general elections in all the states this year, except the following, where the offices named will be filled: In Florida, supreme court judge will alone be chosen, besides the legislature; in Illinois a treasurer, superintendent of public instructions and three trustees of the State university; in Indiana all state officers except governor; in Iowa all except governor; in Kentucky, four judges of the court of appeals and three railroad commissioners; in Louisiana, Washington, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Mississippi, New Jersey and Montana, no state officers at all; in Missouri a judge of the supreme court, a railroad commissioner and a superintendent of public instruction; in New York, governor, lieutenant-governor, and the members of the assembly; in North Carolina, supreme court judges; in Ohio, all state officers except a governor and lieutenant-governor.

The Fourth of July.

From Harper's Weekly.

"Y," said Ben, "is the Fourth of July?"
"Of course," said Tom; "just so I find it.
The Fourth of July is the long-tailed Y,
And J U L comes right behind it."

As a literal statement, corroborative of another, Tom was right. In answer to a question in which the initial word would—contrary to custom—be more pronounced, so to speak, the Fourth of July became the day we celebrate because in 1776 it was on that day our Declaration of Independence was adopted, although it was not signed by the members of congress till many days later. So slowly did news travel from point to point a century and a quarter ago that the army in New York was not apprised of the adoption of the Declaration by congress in Philadelphia until five days had elapsed.

The first Fourth of July that receives historic notice after the adoption of the Declaration, was that of 1778. On that day the Tory John Butler, with a party of loyalists and Indians, raided the beautiful Wyoming Valley in Pennsylvania while most of the men were absent on duty with the army. The women and children, the aged and the infirm, had taken refuge in the wooden fort; but under promise of protection they surrendered, and were butchered, as were also a large number who had remained at their homes in the valley. This massacre, one of the most brutal in the world's annals, forms the subject of Campbell's poem, "Gertrude of Wyoming."

On the Fourth of July, 1808, died Fisher Ames, a member of the first Congress under the Constitution. He was distinguished for his delicate wit and his power as an orator. A few months before his death he was elected president of Harvard College, but declined the position on account of failing health

Eighteen years later occured on the same day, one of the most remarkable coincidences recorded in history—the almost simultaneous death of two illustrious statesmen, both of whom had been members of the committee to prepare the Declaration of Independence, both ardent advocates and signers of that instrument, and both subsequently Presidents of the United States—John Adams the second, and Thomas Jefferson the third—holding that exalted office.

MANY LIVES LOST.

A HOTCHKISS CAISSON EXPLODES IN CHICAGO,

And Many Men and Horses are Killed—Terrible Wreck at Battle Creek, Mich.—Confessed to Wrecking a Train—Hanged by Masked Men—War in Oklahoma.

BLOWN TO PIECES.

Explosion of a Powder Wagon in the Midst of Troops.

Chicago special: A caisson battery, of the 2nd United States artillery, exploded shortly after 1 o'clock Monday afternoon at Grand and Oakland boulevards.

Killed: J. Donovan, Edward Doyle, privates, battery F, 2nd artillery; Fatally wounded: Sergt. Liner, John Allen, private, 2nd artillery.

The injured who will recover: Fred Stolz, Maurice O'Donnell, C. Encke, John Urquhart, privates, Second Artillery; Corporal Abraham Riley, Sergt. King, Second Artilery; Herbert Antes, bugler; Sergt. Anthony Kane, Sergeant George Hoffman, Troop B, Seventh Cavalry; an unknown artilleryman, an unknown boy thrown from a bicycle, legs hurt; Miss Alice York, Grand Boulevard, tendon of heels severed by bullet; Mrs. E. Huvling, Grand Boulevard, severely cut by falling glass.

The troops left Brighton Park for a long march around the city to exercise the horses. They were in command of Capt. Dodd, troop F, Third Cavalry, and consisted of troop F, Third Cavalry, forty men; troop E, Sixth Cavalry, Lieut. Tate, forty men; plattoon battery F, Second Artillery, two guns, Lieut. Gayle, twenty-three men, troop B, Seventh Cavalry, Capt. Varnum forty men. The men marched in this order. Just as the column was crossing Oakwood boulevard a terrific explosion occurred. The men on the caisson, supposed to be Donovan and Doyle, were blown to pieces and others were thrown many feet by the violence of the concussion. Four horses, drawing the caisson, fell in their traces, horribly mangled, while three others were blown fifty feet ahead against the trees on the boulevard, dying instantly. The caission was blown to atoms, not a piece larger than a man's hand being found. The boulevard looked like a battlefield. There was a quick series of explosions after the first report and shot rained like hail among the trees and pierced surrounding dwellings. The concussion broke every window in houses for blocks away. Walls and roofs of dwellings showed the terrific effect of the missiles. Unexploded shells of the rear part of the caisson lay strewn over the ground.

Wreck at Battle Creek.

Train No. 6 on the Grand Trunk was wrecked at Battle Creek, Mich. The fireman was killed outright and several of the train crew and passengers injured. The wreck was caused by the removal of the fish-plates from the rails on the grade west of the city. The train was running about twenty-five miles an hour and when it struck the misplaced rail the engine, tender, and baggage-car were ditched and the day coach and one Pullman turned across the track.

Officials of the Grand Trunk offer $500 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties.

The train was the same one that was in the fatal wreck there last October, by which a score lost their lives and as many more injured. This is the third time the fish plates have been removed from the rails within the past two weeks. It is believed to be the work of the strikers.

Hanged by Masked Men.

Rody Edwin Traughber was found hanging to a limb near Adairville, Ky. Masked men went to Traughber's home, calling him out, tied his hands and feet and carried him to a thicket near G. W. Hunt's farm, several miles distant, and hung him. The cause of the hanging is not known. Traughber has always borne a bad reputation. Several months ago he was accused of poisoning his father's family. It came near resulting in three deaths. Excitement is at fever heat in that community.

Finances in Better Shape.

Treasury finances show an improved condition due solely to large receipts from internal revenue, which have reached for the half month of July $15,000,000, out of a total of $20,000,000. The expenditures, same period, aggregate $18,000,000. The receipts up to date indicate a total for the month of $35,000,000 while the expenditures will probably fall below $30,000,000, the larger part of the pension payment having already been made for the month.

Confessed.

Terre Haute (Ind.) special: Edward Holloway, a prisoner under arrest here for wrecking the express train at Fontanet, resulting in the death of Engineer Moehrman and Fireman Fleck, made a clean breast of the whole affair. He says seven or eight others were in it besides himself. All were miners, and he does not know them. They broke the switch lock with a hammer and threw the switch.

Bad Cave-in.

Middlesboroug (Ky.) special: Another disastrous cave-in has taken place on the Cumberland Gap tunnel. One man was taken out dead and two are mashed so they will die. Three others are buried alive. All the physicians of the city have been summoned.

War in Oklahoma.

Citizens of Round Pond and Enid, O. T., have asked for federal troops to aid in compelling the Rock Island Railroad Company to obey town ordinances. Bloodshed is sure to follow.

Frightened Into Insanity.

John Scanlon, an Omaha engineer, has been sent to the St. Peter Insane Asylum, the threats made by strikers having unbalanced his mind.

Ohio Town Destroyed.

Edon, Ohio, a town of 1,000 inhabitants, in Williams County, was almost totally destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $175,000, with about one-third insured. The flames started at 11:45 a. m. in the rear of the Hotel Cory, and before they were subdued, at 2 p. m., had burned seventy-two buildings, among them the Hotel Cory, John S. Polke's general store, Edon Banking Company; Frank Metzler, jewelry; George Heap, furniture; Jones & Sons, grist mill; Frank Shane, groceries; T. S. Carvin, drugs; Charles Bowers' general store; Eysters & Retz, agricultural implements, and Kaiser & Walter, meat market. The main business part of the town is in ashes and only two dwellings were left untouched by the flames. The fire communicated to a wheat field close to the town, which, made inflammable by the continued hot weather, was soon blazing, adding to the danger. A water line was formed a mile to the east and the flames were finally checked after destroying several fields of grain. The majority of the citizens are homeless.

FINANCIAL.

Dun Gives Encouraging Reports of the Transactions of the Week.

Dun & Co.'s Review says: When circumstances are duly weighed, the strength and soundness of this country during the past two weeks is amazing. With the second city in the country in the hands of a lawless and murderous mob, besides many other cities and towns with railway traffic almost entirely stopped over the vast area between Toledo and the Pacific, with presidential proclamations declaring the existence of insurrection and the passionate answer ordering half a million men to stop work, with the prolonged strike of coal miners not fully ended in many states and with differences between the House and Senate on the tariff question so wide that duties affecting mining and manufactures cannot be anticipated, industries and trade nevertheless have gone on with sublime confidence that the people and their government would soon restore order. The shrinkage of business and depression of values are unexpectedly small. There is every sign in some industries of actual progress. Wheat is slightly lower, corn advanced a little, cotton declined an eighth; cotton manufactures have reduced production somewhat, though most of the mills continue to pile up goods.

Bold Bank Robbers.

Belmont (S. D.) special: A sensational attempt to rob the People's Bank was made recently. Three men rode into the city, coming from the hills in the west, and galloped through the streets shooting firearms after Jesse James fashion. They dismounted in front of the bank and two men entered, while the third stood on guard.

Warned by the firing, Cashier Newcombe had placed all the bank's money in the vault and had locked himself up in the vault. All the other employes of the bank had fled. The robbers attempted to force open the safe, but without avail, and after dallying with it for half an hour remounted their horses and rode out of town. One of the robbers is reported killed by a citizen. Several posses are scouring the hills for them.

The Militia Encampment.

The advisability of holding the encampment of the Indiana militia is being discussed by the State officers and commanders of the companies. While the commanders are in favor of holding the encampment, as has been the custom each year, the abandonment of it is not improbable. The date of the encampment has not been decided upon, but it is designed to occur the last of this month if the plans are carried out. The location is Fairview Park. The militia has had so much actual service this year that some of the State authorities think that the troops could not be materially benefited by a week in camp.

Five Persons Drowned.

A cloudburst occurred at Lead Hill, Ark. A stream running through the town was overflowed and a large scope of territory inundiated. Houses, fences, and timber were washed away. The Tatum Roller Mill was swept from its foundation and completely wrecked. The miller, William Trusty, living in a cottage near the mill, made his escape, but the house was wrecked and his wife and four children were carried away and drowned. A number of persons narrowly escaped death. All the stores along the creek were flooded and the goods in them damaged or destroyed.

Little Ones Burned.

Twenty small dwellings were destroyed and two human lives lost in a fire on North Beach, San Francisco. Nearly all the buildings in the block bounded by Broadway, Leavenworth, Jones, and Glover streets, was wiped out of existence. These houses were the homes of poor families, some of whom lost everything. The total property loss is estimated at $50,000. After the fire the two little sons of Mr. E. Leidecker, one aged 2 and the other 4 years, were missing. Their bodies were found burned to a crisp in the ruins.

War Inevitable.

A special from Yokohama, Japan, says: The Government has chartered sixteen steamers belonging to the Yusen-Kaisha company, with the intention of landing 10,000 troops in Corea. Strong reinforcements will also be held in readiness in Japan. Japan has refused to withdraw her troops. War is regarded as inevitable and the Japanese Government has forbidden the native press to make mention of events happening in Corea.

Supposed to Be Lost.

A dispatch from Tromsoe, Norway, says that the yacht Saide of the royal yacht squadron, reported that the American Polar expedition under Walter Wellman, has not been heard from since their steamer, Ragnvald Jarl, left the Danes Islands. The Sadie started in search of her but found all routes blockaded by ice. The yacht met an experienced walrus hunter coming from the northwest. His opinion is that the Ragnvald Jarl is beset by ice and crushed.

Anarchist Plots.

Rome special: The Popolo Romano states that the authorities are in possession of the proofs of an Anarchist plot directed against Premier Crispi of Italy; President Carnot, of France; Alexander III, Czar of Russia, and other heads of European Governments. The same authority states that all these were to have been killed in the same week.

In the Jaws of Death.

At Wilmington, Ohio, Victor Moon, aged about twenty years, while attempting to couple a water tank to a traction engine, was pinioned between the engine and the tongue of the tank, the tongue catching him just belew the ribs. His injuries were internal, the force being so great as to burst both sides of the abdomen. His spine is also seriously injured.

Any Money Goes.

Business circles will be interested in the bill which passed the House Committee on Judiciary recently, providing that all contracts hereafter executed for the payment of any sum of money, whether in gold, silver or coin, may be discharged by any money which is by law a legal tender for the payment of debts.

Two Youngsters Killed.

Two children of Charles Carlston, one 6 years old and deaf and dumb, and the other 4 years old, where killed by a passenger train at Bordentown, N. J. They were playing on the railroad track, and the engineer could not bring his train to a stop before the locomotive struck them.

Train Wrecked.

Terre Haute (Ind.) special: The Big Four officials state that their through mail and passenger train, No. 7, from the east on its way to St. Louis, was wrecked at Fontanet, ten miles northeast of here, the train going in the ditch. The Big Four people say Engineer Morman and his fireman, name unknown, are both missing and are supposed to have been killed. The deed is laid to the miners at Fontanet, who strongly take sides with the striking railroaders.

The Quarantine Raised at the Prison North.

Michigan City (Ind.) special: Warden French has received a telegram from Dr. G. N. Metcalf stating that the State Board of Health had raised the prison quarantine as to Fulton, Marshall, and Pulaski counties. The quarantine is thus raised as to the entire State and applies to no place except Chicago.

Attempt at Lynching.

The county jail at Hastings, Minn., is guarded by fifty deputies, sworn to prevent the lynching of the French Canadian tramp who murdered Officer Jacobson while resisting arrest. There was a demonstration by the would-be lynchers, but the show of strength prevented trouble. Fears are entertained that a more determined attempt will be made.

An Anarchist Sentenced.

Barcelona special: The trial has begun of Anarchists Salvador Franch, Antonio Alfaro and Jose Prats. Franch was the author of the explosion in Liceo theater when thirty persons were killed and Alfaro and Prats were his accomplices. Franch confessed and was sentenced to death. Alfaro and Prats protested their innocence.

Whirled to Death on a Shaft.

Walter Wortman, fireman at Jones' sewer pipe factory, Zanesville, Ohio, got caught in a belt. He was drawn up to the shaft, which is eighteen inches above the floor, and whirled around at the rate of 100 revolutions a minute. Nearly every bone in his body was broken. He was 25 years old and unmarried.

A Cow Wrecks a Train.

A doubleheaded freight train on the Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw railway ran over a cow at Marietta, Ill., a small station near Bushnell, resulting in the death of one man, the injury of four others, and the wrecking of two engines and eleven cars. The dead and injured are all railroad men.

Marion Soldiers' Home.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home held at Washington, it was decided to have erected at the Soldiers' Home, Marion, Ind., a memorial chapel. For this purpose $6,500 was appropriated out of a legacy of $10,000 left to the Board by Daniel Stinson.

Bark Abandoned.

Cape Town special: The American bark Mary H. Ames, Captain Knowles, bound from Samariang, Java, for Delagoa Bay, South Africa, has been abandoned at sea in a sinking condition. Part of the crew were saved and landed at Mangatziotra.

Fatally Injurned.

Harvey Campbell, a prominent citizen of Bergholz, twenty miles south of Alliance, Ohio, on the Lake Erie, Alliance, and Southern Rrailroad, was struck by an engine while walking on the track near his home, and fatally injured.

No Money in Kentucky.

Frankfort (Ky.) special: State Tressurer Hale says the State of Kentucky had suspended payment of all warrants, and that none would be paid. He expects to be able to resume payment by the first of November.

Through the Deadly Shaft.

Peter Adams, of No. 166 Milton street, Columbus, Ohio, fell through the elevator shaft at the Ohio Furniture Company's house, on West Mound street, receiving injuries that will probably result fatally.

The Russian Scourge.

One hundred and seventy-one new cases of cholera and fifty deaths from that disease have been reported at St. Petersburg, Russia. There are now 460 people suffering from cholera in the hospitals.

Got Off Easily.

At Brazil, Ind., Booth, Sankin, Wilson, and Poor were found guilty of involuntary manslaughter in murdering Engineer Barr, in the recent coal strike, and sentenced to two years.

Child Roasted.

The 5-year-old child of Andrew Gilligan, while playing around a burning brush heap, near Winchester, Ohio, was burned to death, the flesh being roasted.

Killed by a Horse.

At Covington, Ohio, Capt. C. B. Manss, a prominent citizen, was kicked to death by a horse.

STRIKE IS AT AN END.

TRAINS AT CHICAGO NOW RUNNING AS USUAL.

From Every Direction Come Reports of Men Returning to Work, and Both Passenger and Freight Traffic Resuming Normal Conditions—For Arbitration.

Trouble Is Over.

The great railway strike is at an end in Chicago. Trains on all roads are moving. Passenger trains are again on time, and freight traffic is rapidly becoming regular. The railroad companies have called a halt in the importation of new men to take the places of strikers. They claim to have manned all the important vacancies with competent men, and that the operation of the various roads is rapidly assuming normal smoothness. It is said by the general managers that there are now enough applicants for work in Chicago to supply remaining vacancies, and that no necessity exists for bringing in more men from other labor centers.

On some of the roads it is pretty well known, though "officially" denied, that in the employment of men the strikers are being discriminated against. On other roads a more generous spirit prevails and the old men are given the preference, though without exception the companies say they will stand by the new men who came forward at the risk of their lives (as they believed) and took the places of the strikers.

In the scramble among former employes to get back their jobs some amusing incidents crop out. The president of one of the largest corporations was running through the excuses piled upon his desk from employes explaining how it happened that they had not reported for duty the last two or three weeks, and found that out of 135 communications, thirty-two related to births in the family and the consequent train of sickness and misfortune. On comparing notes it was learned that the employing officials on every other road were overwhelmed with similar excuses, which led them to the conclusion that strikes have an extraordinaryly stimulating effect on population statistics. The epidemic of sickness in the families of strikers who want to get back to work is widespread and includes relatives of all degrees, from wives, children, mothers and fathers to thirty-second cousins by marriage or adoption.

Quiet Everywhere.

Reports from all over the country indicate that the greatest labor disturbance which has ever occurred in this or in any other country is at an end, and it may be said to the credit of the authorities that the trouble was suppressed with comparatively little bloodshed. Happily the struggle between the armed representatives of order and those engaged in defying law, destroying property and obstructing the operation of the railroads centering in the great town of Illinois did not materialize to any great extent.

For those not disposed to reason the presence of an army of 10,000 men in Chicago had a quieting effect, as the troopers had orders to shoot to kill, when law breakers set out to burn and pillage the property of the railroad companies. Undoubtedly their presence did much to keep the turbulent in subjection. And it must be confessed that the regulars bore themselves like brave soldiers in refraining from shooting when provocation to do so was very strong.

Cleveland for Arbitration.

It is reported from Washington that the President will appoint a commission, by the authority given him by the arbitration act of 1888, to investigate the labor troubles at Chicago and elsewhere and report to the President and Congress. This determination on the part of the President was arrived at after an interview with Secretary-Treasurer Hayes of the Knights of Labor, McGuire and French of the Executive Committee, and Mr. Schoenfaber, who were introduced to the President by Senator Kyle, and who came bearing credentials from the American Railway Union, the Pullman employes, and several labor organizations. After discussing the various features of the situation for more than an hour the President promised that if the leaders would return to Chicago and use their influence toward restoring peace and order he would appoint the commission as soon as the disturbances had ceased to such an extent as to render a careful, thoughtful investigation possible.

SPIRIT OF THE STRIKE.

To Countenance Such an Uprising Would Be Dangerous to the Country.

Just when the bituminous coal miners' strike had been settled and it began to look as if there was some hope of the railroads being able to earn enough to keep them out of the hands of receivers, the wheels on every road from the eastern slope of the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific coast were either actually stopped, or active preparations were under way to bring them to a standstill. Never was the action of the railroad officials more important, never were the principles involved more vital. The annual traffic revenue of the railroads of the United States amounts to considerably more than a thousand million dollars; it was proposed to stop this revenue and in so doing to cripple or destroy every business enterprise throughout the country which is dependent upon the railroads for transportion, while a few hot-headed labor leaders settled a question of difference which had arisen wholly outside of the management of the railroad companies themselves.

It was absolutely of no consequence whatever whether the position taken by Mr. Pullman, or the Pullman Palace Car Company, was right or wrong; that question was in no way involved. To raise it to the dignity of a moment's consideration is to concede that the leaders of any labor organization have a right to stop the turning of the wheels on 150,000 miles of railroad, while they settled a dispute with the manufacturer of axle grease without the liberal use of which it is, of course, unsafe to move trains. Or they might pick a quarrel with a car wheel manufacturer and then insist that all the wheels made by the concern should be taken off and replaced by others, before the trains would be allowed to run again. Indeed, these propositions would be more reasonable than the recent demand made, for there are numerous manufacturers of axle grease and of car wheels, but with the exception of one other company whose cars are fully employed on a few lines, there are no sleeping or palace cars except those made by the Pullman Company. A prominent railway president stated the matter very tersely when he said:

The spirit of the strike, as I understand it, is, by closing up the railroads and detaining travelers all over the country wherever they may be, to create a public opinion which will compel the manufacturing company to secure work and do it, no matter what the loss may. With the relations between the manufacturing company and their employes the railway companies have nothing to do, and it is none of their business. That is a matter which ought to be adjusted by the parties immediately concerned. But precisely how stopping thousands of people on the arid plains of Arizona, and in the super-heated belt of the Northwest, many of them women and children, many of them travelers hastening to the bedsides of dying mothers, wives or children, many of them invalids who may lose their lives by the exposure, is to compel a manufacturing company to find contracts to build cars and then build them, is just one of those problems which the railway mind is unable to grasp.

It is impossible to contemplate the action of the many thousands of railway employes in blindly following the mandates of an irresponsible leader, without a feeling of wonder and astonishment, to say nothing of disappointment and humiliation, which it inspires. The only explanation that can be given is that they have done so because they are blind. But this fact only augments the duty devolving upon the managers of the railroads in resisting the influence of those who arrogantly assume the position of supreme dictators, and also in opening the eyes of the poor, deluded fellows who follow them. There is no middle ground for the railroad manager. To parley with, or in any way to recognize for a moment, the leaders of such a strike, would be a movement fraught with the greatest danger to the prosperity not alone of the railroads throughout the country but, also, of the country itself.

STATUE OF GEN. HANCOCK.

Set Up at Gettysburg in That Soldier's Honor.

The State of Pennsylvania has given $100,000 for the erection of three statues on the field of Gettysburg and one of them is of Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock. The plaster cast of this last has just been finished by the artist, F. Edwin Elwell, of New York, and this will now be cast in bronze. The statue will stand on Cemetery Hill, where with Gen. Howard and his staff Gen. Hancock discussed the battle. The figure is supposed to represent him in the act of telling his associates that the brunt of the battle would fall on Round Top. The sculptor's idea has been to represent the intellectual characteristics of the commander, and not the merely physical. The height of the horse is six feet six inches to the withers, and the entire height of the statue is seventeen feet. The horse stands on a well designed architectural pinth, the work of a friend of the sculptor. On each side is a cartouch bearing on one the name of the sculptor and on the other the name "Hancock."

Gen. Hancock is represented seated in the saddle in a position which Capt. Ward, who was his aid during the war, has pronounced very characteristic. There is no sword or other appurtenance, the purpose being to make the statue broad and dignified in effect. The face wears an expression of intense interest and the eyes are looking out over the field. The horse has three feet on the ground and one raised pawing the air.

QUEBEC'S OLD WALLS.

The Famous Old Citadel Fast Falling Into Decay.

The old walls of the Citadel at Quebec are famous, and are among the most interesting historical monuments of the continent. A report is current that in places they have fallen into decay, and that some of the secret underground passages connecting the fortress with the city have tumbled in and become filled up and absolutely useless.

Before the withdrawal of British troops from Canada twenty years ago companies of the Royal Engineers were engaged in keeping the citadel in perfect repair. That the recent alarm created by the neglect into which the fortress has fallen is not exaggerated is shown by the annual report of the Department of the Militia and Defense, recently submitted to Parliament. It is recommended in this document that a body of engineers and artificers be constantly employed to keep the old walls in order. Unless this is done Quebec's elaborate system of fortifications, that has for so many years past proved one of the principal attractions for tourists, will speedily crumble into a mass of ruins.

The money spent upon those works in the past is simply incredible. Wooden fortifications were erected there by the French colonists, and so heavy was the expenditure, together with what was boodled by Bigot, the intendant and his associates, that Louis XIV. is reported to have asked whether the fortifications of Quebec were built of gold. The present walls, which replace those first erected by the royal engineers, date back to 1823, and were carried out according to plans submitted to and approved by the Duke of Wellington at a cost of some $25,000,000.

ASSASSIN IS HANGED.

SLAYER OF CHICAGO'S MAYOR PAYS THE PENALTY.

The Gallows Sends Patrick Eugene Prendergast Into Eternity—Remarkably Tenacious Legal Fight to Save His Life—Story of the Crime.

Harrison's Murder Avenged.

Without a word of protest or an act of resistance, Patrick Eugene Joseph Prendergast suffered the extreme penalty of the law Friday for the murder of Carter H. Harrison. He was hanged at 11:48 o'clock, in the county jail in Chicago. He walked to the scaffold without support. He showed no sign of weakness till the moment before the drop fell, when he stood with the noose about his neck, the white shroud enwrapping his form, his feet and knees strapped together, his arms fastened to his body, and the white cap covering his head and face. Then he almost gave way. His knees trembled and seemed to sink under him. His breath came in gasps and he gave convulsive gulps that showed his nervous system was breaking. His pulse was beating at 120 a minute, and he was on the point of physical collapse when the drop fell.

He died painlessly, as his neck was broken by the fall. To the very last moment he expected to be saved from the scaffold by some power. Five minutes before he began his walk to the gallows he said he expected to hear soon from the Governor. He made no speech on the gallows. He had intended to do so, but was dissuaded by his spiritual adviser, Rev. Father Barry, who pleaded with him to submit to the inevitable and not to make a scene. He accepted the ministrations of the priests who were with him to the last, and he received the last rites of the Catholic Church.

Ten minutes before he stepped on the fatal trap he repeated the statement that he had so often made—that he killed Mr. Harrison because he had to do so and that there was no malice in the act. This was practically his dying declaration. The execution was accomplished without accident. Within three minutes after Prendergast left his cell he was swinging at the rope's end.

Story of the Crime.

The crime for which Patrick Eugene Prendergast was executed was one of the most cold blooded and unprovoked murders ever committed. On Saturday, Oct. 28, 1893, Carter H. Harrison, then Mayor of Chicago, attended the closing of the great World's Columbian Exposition, and in his capacity as Mayor delivered one of the addresses of the day. The Mayor, tired and worn out by the performance of his many official duties, returned to his home on Ashland avenue at an early hour in the evening. Prendergast first visited the house at 7:30 o'clock and was informed that Mayor Harrison was engaged. A half hour later he returned and was let into the hall by the servant girl. Mayor Harrison was asleep in his armchair, but was awakened by Prendergast's voice and walked toward the main hallway. As he did so Prendergast advanced, revolver in hand, and fired three shots at Mr. Harrison. Two of the bullets took effect, one piercing his right hand and the other entering his stomach. The wounded man sank to the floor and twenty minutes later died in the arms of his son, William Preston Harrison. Immediately following the shooting, Prendergast left the house and made his way to Desplaines street station, where he gave himself up. From Desplaines street station the murderer was taken to the city hall, where he made a statement concerning the shooting. He said he was very deeply interested in track elevation and was anxious to be made Corporation Counsel in order that he might carry out his ideas on the subject. He said Mayor Harrison had promised to appoint him Corporation Counsel, but had failed to do so, and for this reason he thought he was justified in taking the Mayor's life.

Efforts to Save His Life.

In its legal phases the Prendegast case is without precedent in the history of criminal law. Never before were such persistent and ingenious efforts made to save a prisoner's neck from the noose. The defense set up the plea of insanity, and on this line the battle against justice was waged to the end. The assassin was at all times surrounded by legal talent well versed in the most intricate points of practice, and having all the technicalities at their command. Yet with all of these advantages the murderer of Mayor Harrison was unable to elude the scaffold which was twice erected for its victim.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

CHAPTER XVII—Continued.

As they approached Marchbrook Mr. Wyatt began to talk about the Benedictines and their vanished monastery. He had found out all about it in the county history—its founder, the extent of its lands, the character of its architecture.

"That avenue must be 600 years old," he said, as he came in sight of the tall elms.

"By Jove! that's queer," cried Sir Thomas, pulling out his race glass. "A fellow jumped out of that balcony, like Romeo in the play.

"Except that Romeo never scaled the balcony," said Mr. Wyatt.

"That summer-house belongs to Davenant, doesn't it, Gilbert? Our friend's mode of exit suggests a flirtation between one of your guests and somebody at Marchbrook."

"There's nobody at Marchbrook but old Clanyarde and Sir Cyprian Davenant," said Sir Thomas, "and I'll lay any odds you like it wasn't Lord Clanyarde jumped off that balcony."

Gilbert took the glass from his friend's hand without a word. The man who had jumped off the balcony was still in sight, walking at a leisurely pace across the wide alley of turf between the two rows of trees. The glass brought him near enough for recognition, and Mr. Sinclair had no doubt as to his identity.

"If you lay onto those leaders like that, you'll have this blessed machine in the ditch," cried Sir Thomas Houndslow. "What is the matter with you? The horses are stepping like clock-work."

"Juno was breaking into a canter," said Gilbert, coloring. "Steady, old lady; steady, steady."

"She's steady enough," said Sir Thomas; "I think it's you that are wild. Memorandum, don't drink kirschen wasser after champagne when you're going to drive a team of young horses."

Mr. Sinclair took the curve by the park gates in excellent style, despite this insinuation, and pulled up before the old Gothic porch with workmanlike precision.

"There's a pretty bit of feather-edging," said Sir Thomas, approvingly.

Gilbert did not wait to see his friends alight, but flung the reins to one of the grooms and walked off without a word to any one.

He was at the summer-house ten minutes afterward, flushed and breathless, having run all the way. A flight of stone steps, moss-grown and broken, led up to the door of the temple.

Gilbert Sinclair tried the door and found it locked.

"Is there any one in there?" he asked, shaking the crazy old door savagely.

"Who is that?" inquired Constance.

"Your husband."

He heard her light footsteps coming toward the door. She opened it, and faced him on the threshold, with neither surprise nor fear in her calm, questioning face.

"Is there anything the matter, Gilbert? Am I wanted?"

"There is not much the matter, and I don't know that you are wanted in my house," answered her husband, savagely. "It seems to me that your vocation is elsewhere."

His flushed face, the angry light in his red-brown eyes, told her that there was meaning in his reply, incomprehensible as it seemed.

"I don't understand you, Gilbert. What has happened to make you angry?"

"Not much, perhaps. It's bad form to make a fuss about it. But I am vulgar enough to think that when my wife plays Juliet to somebody else's Romeo, it is time she should call herself by some other name than mine, which she disgraces. I admire the innocence of that astonished look. Unfortunately that piece of finished acting is thrown away upon me. I saw your lover leave you."

"Mr. Sinclair!" with a look of unspeakable indignation.

"Yes your gentle Romeo forgot that this summer-house is seen from the high-road. I saw him, I tell you, woman—I saw him leap down from the balcony—identified him with my field-glass—not that I had any doubt who your visitor was."

"I am sorry that you should be so angry at my seeing an old friend for a few minutes, Gilbert, and that you should make so very innocent an act an excuse for insulting me."

"An old friend—a friend whom you meet cladestinely—in an out-of-the-way corner of the park—with locked doors."

"I have spent all my mornings here of late. I lock my door in order to be undisturbed, so that anybody happening to come this way may believe the summer-house empty.

"Anyone except Sir Cyprian Davenant. He would know better."

"Sir Cyprian's presence here to-day was the merest accident. He heard me singing, and climbed up to the balcony to say a few kind words about my bereavement, which he knows to be the one absorbing thought of my mind just now. No friend, no brother, could have come with kinder or purer meaning. He gave me good advice; he warned me that there was selfishness and folly in giving way to sorrow. Not one word was spoken which you might not have freely heard, Gilbert, which you would not have approved."

"Could any woman in your position say less? You all sing the same song. Once having made up your mind to betray your husband, the rest is a matter of detail, and there is a miserable sameness in the details. Do you think anything you can say—oaths, tears—will ever convince me that you did not come here on purpose to meet that man, or that he came here to preach you a sermon upon your duty to me?"

"Gilbert, as I stand here before God, who sees and hears me, I have told you the truth. We have made a sad mistake in marrying; there are few things in which we sympathize; even our great sorrow has not brought us nearer together; but if you will only be patient, if you will be kind and true to me, I will still try even more earnestly than I have done yet to make you a good wife, to make your home life happy."

She came to him with a sad sweet smile, and laid her hand gently on his shoulder, looking up at him with earnest eyes, full of truth and purity, could he but have understood their meaning.

Alas! to his dogged, brutal nature purity like this was incomprehensible. Facts were against his wife, and he had no belief in her to sustain him against the facts. The lion of fable might recognize Una's purity and lie down at her feet, but Gilbert Sinclair was a good deal more like the lion of reality, a by no means magnanimous beast, who waits till he can pounce upon his enemy alone in a solitary corner, and has a prudent dread of numbers.

As the little hand alighted tremulously on his breast, Gilbert Sinclair raised his clenched fist.

"Let me alone," he cried. "You've made your choice."

And then came a word which had never before been spoken in Constance Sinclair's hearing, but which some instinct of her woman's heart told her meant deepest infamy.

She recoiled from him with a little cry, and then fell like a log at his feet.

Lest that brutal word should too weakly express an outraged husband's wrath, Mr. Sinclair had emphasized it with a blow. That muscular fist of his, trained in many an encounter with professors of the noble art of self-defense, had been driven straight at his wife's forehead, and nothing but the man's blind fury prevented the blow being mortal.

In intention, at least, he had been for the moment a murderer. His breath came thick and fast as he stood over that lifeless form.

"Have I killed her?" he asked himself. "She deserves no better fate. But I had rather kill him."

CHAPTER XVIII.

CYPRIAN'S VISITOR.

Sir Cyprian Davenant left Marchbrook an hour after his interview with Constance Sinclair. He sent his man home with the portmanteaus and gun-cases, and went straight to his club, where he dined. It was between eight and nine when he walked to his chambers through the snowy streets. The walk through the rough weather suited his present temper. He could have walked many a mile across Yorkshire moor that night in the endeavor to walk down the anxious thoughts that crowded upon his mind.

His interview with Constance—like all such meetings between those whom Fate has irrevocably parted—had deepened the gloom of his soul, and added to the bitterness of his regrets. It had brought the past near to him, and made the inevitable harder to bear than it had seemed yesterday.

He had seen all the old loveliness in the innocent face, changed though it was. He had heard all the old music in the unforgotten voice. To what end? That brief greeting across the iron grate of Destiny's prison-house only made it more agonizing to think of the long future in which these two, who had so met and touched hands across the gulf, must live their separated lives in silent patience.

The snow lay thick in the quiet turning out of the Strand. There was a hansom standing at the corner by Sir Cyprian's chambers, the horse hanging his head with a dejected air under his whitened rug, the man stamping up and down the pavement, and flapping his arms across his chest. The cab must have been waiting some time, Sir Cyprian thought idly.

His chambers were on the first floor, large and lofty rooms facing the river. Since his inheritance of Colonel Gryffin's fortune he had indulged himself with that one luxury dear to men who love books, a well-arranged library. This bachelor pied-a-terre suited him better than lodgings in a more fashionable quarter. It was central, and out of the way of his fashionable acquaintances—an ineligible feature which was to his mind an attraction.

Sir Cyprian admitted himself with his latch-key, and went up the dimly lighted staircase. He opened the outer door of his library, within which massive oak barrier there hung a heavy crimson cloth curtain, shutting out noise and draught. This curtain had been dragged aside, and left hanging in a heap at one end of the rod, in a very different style from the usual neat arrangement of folds left by the middle-aged valet.

The room was almost in darkness, for the fire had burned low upon the hearth. There was just light enough to show Sir Cyprian a figure sitting by the fire in a brooding attitude, alone, and in the dark.

"Who's that?" asked Sir Cyprian.

The man started up, a big man, tall and broad-shouldered, whom for the first moment Sir Cyprian took for a stranger.

"I should have thought you would have known Constance Sinclair's husband anywhere," said the intruder. "You and I have reason to remember each other."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Sinclair," Cyprian answered, quietly, without noticing the sneer; "but as I do not possess the gift of seeing in the dark, you can hardly wonder at my being slow to recognize you."

He was not going to invite a quarrel with this man—nay, he would rather avoid one at the loss of some personal dignity, for Constance's sake. He went up to the hearth where Gilbert had resumed his seat, and put his hand on the bell.

"Don't ring for lights," said Sinclair. "What I have to say can be said in the dark."

"Perhaps. But I prefer to see a man's face when I am talking to him. May I ask to what I am indebted for this unexpected pleasure? I thought you were at Davenant?"

"I left by the train after that in which you traveled."

The man came in with a lighted lamp, which he placed on the table in front of the fire—a large carved oak table, loaded with classic volumes and ponderous lexicons; for a wealthy student is rarely content with a single lexicographer's definition.

Having set down the lamp, the valet replenished the exhausted fire with that deliberate care so peculiar to a servant who is slightly curious about his master's guest, and finally retired, with soft footfall, shutting the door after him very slowly, as if he expected to gather something at the last moment, from the visitor's impatience to break covert.

In this case, however, the valet retired without hearing a word. Gilbert Sinclair sat staring at the fire, and seemed in no hurry to state his business. He could not fly at his enemy's throat like a tiger, and that was about the only thing to which his spirit moved him at this moment. Looking at his visitor by the soft, clear light of the lamp, Sir Cyprian was not reassured by his countenance. Gilbert Sinclair's face was of a livid hue, save on each high cheek-bone, where a patch of dusky red made the pervading pallor more obvious. His thick red-brown hair was rough and disordered, his large red-brown eyes, prominently placed in their orbits, were bright and glassy, and the sensual under lip worked convulsively, as in some inward argument of a stormy kind.

The Football Team.

In the new life of the college the student sows less of the seeds of dyspepsia and nervous exhaustion than did his father and grandfather, who went in for a sound mind, and were indifferent to a sound body. "To the playing of football go mental and moral qualities of no mean order," writes Mr. Merriam in his memorial of Dr. Noah Porter—"the soldier's virtues, although with some of the brutality of war."

It was "the brutality" of the game which compelled that Christian gentleman and scholar, Professor Green of Princeton Theological Seminary, to prohibit the "theologues" from engaging in any football contest.

There were complaints both loud and deep uttered on the campus of Nassau Hall when that prohibition was made known; for several members of the Princeton football team were stalwart theological students, who played according to the law of natural selection—only the fittest survive. Doubtless they thought, when playing, of that ancient game in Palestine, when the players were Jews and Canaanites.

Yet, a few years ago the captain of the Princeton football team was the most devoted Christian in the college—Mr. Speer. There was no "brutality" when he ordered the game. It was a manly contest, which might have been opened and closed with prayers.

The old Princeton and the old Yale man calls, "Halt!" He is not pleased that his boys take the gladiators of Rome for a model. He says to them:

"My sons, you are gentlemen, and should play football as gentlemen, and not as heathen mercenaries, hired to draw blood. Let tactics, brawn—made hard by days of self-denial—courage and endurance win; but don't be rowdies. Don't disgrace your ancestors by striking 'below the belt;' nor by kicking a man when he is down.

"You are not Roman gladiators, but Christian undergraduates!"

A Duck Drowned by an Oyster.

The meek and lowly oyster can sometimes become a revengeful as well as a dangerous antagonist, as an unwary Baltimore duck found to his cost. This careless duck, belonging to the tribe known as "fishermen," was swimming about in search of food off the shore near Claitorne when he espied an oyster—a nice, fat, juicy oyster he was—with shell widely parted, feeding, doubtless, on the simple and rather intangible diet upon which an oyster is supposed to feed. The duck, true to his greedy instincts, dived for that supposed juicy morsel and was about to swallow him whole, without salt or pepper even, when the angry passions of the oyster arose, and snapping his shells together caught the unsuspecting duck's bill in a vise-like embrace. The duck rose to the surface, shook his head, mumbled apologies through his tight-shut mouth, but the bivalve's heart was hardened, and he held on. Soon that constant load pulling down his head, and growing weightier and weightier, began to tire the duck and his neck arched lower and lower until finally it sank into the water and he was drowned. A deckhand on the steamboat Tangier saw the duck floating with head submerged and picked him up. The oyster was still clinging to his victim with a relentless, deadly grasp, and the tragedy that must have been enacted as described was revealed. Both the duck and the slayer were taken to Baltimore, and proved quite a curiosity.

Went to the Root of the Evil.

This is woman's age, and a businessman who knows says there is positively nothing that she will not undertake. He was lounging in his office the other day when the door opened and a well-dressed, comely little woman appeared. She wore a resolute expression in addition to other apparel and in her hand she carried a large tack-raiser.

"Good morning," she said, winningly. "Is this Mr. Cash's office? Will you please tell me what chair it is that has that nail in it?"

The business-man was confused—the nice little woman was a total stranger to him. He answered wildly: "What chair? What nail?"

"Why," she exclaimed, "my husband has come home three times recently with dreadful holes in his coat and trousers and he said he tore them on a chair in your office. I'm tired of darning those rents and thought it would be more sensible and satisfactory to come down here, pull the nail out, and be done with it. Don't you think so?"

Still in a trance the merchant agreed with her, found the offending chair, extracted the nail and with many thanks and smiles the enterprising little woman withdrew.—New York World.

Saw His Parents Sixty Miles Away.

Harry Willetts, a young man who was nearly killed by striking an arc light with the steel tip of his umbrella at Atlantic City, N. J., upon his recovery related a remarkable vision which came to him as he felt the electric fluid going through his body. His home is in Camden, sixty miles from Atlantic City. "I had left home but two days before," he said to a reporter, "and every detail of the home life I remembered, and as I fell unconscious I saw it again as plainly as I now see you. My father sat by the table reading, while my mother was engaged in sewing buttons on his clothes. The picture was so realistic that my last words as I fell were: 'My God, where am I?' And they were heard by bystanders who did not know what caused them." The most marvelous part of young Willets' vision is that his brother declares that the hour the accident occurred his parents were seated and occupied just as he saw them.

Unappreciated Courtesy.

Mr. Martha Moore Avery, the socialist leader from Boston, whose smooth and communistic speeches have been a feature in Philadelphia, prides herself on her winsome and sympathetic ways with the commonest people. She was riding the other day in a Girard avenue car, bound for Memorial Hall, when a ragged and red-headed newsboy boarded the car. Mrs. Avery put on an attractive smile and the boy hurried to the end of the car and flashed his papers on her. "No, thank you, little boy," said that lady, "I don't wish for a paper, but I am ever so much obliged to you for coming in here." The boy walked reproachfully away, and as he left the car he remarked to the conductor, "Say, it's a wonder de woman didn't ask me if me wife was well."

WILL BEAT THE WORLD.

George Vanderbilt's Princely Domain in North Carolina.

Near Asheville, N. C., is the estate of George Vanderbilt, named Biltmore, on which he has spent already $5,000,000, and which will cost as much more before it finished. The house, now only part finished, is probably the most magnificent private dwelling in the country. It is built of Bedford stone on the model of a famous French chateau. It has been in process of building for three years, and at the present is not more than half completed. The largest room is the banqueting hall, with a ceiling sixty-five feet high, a salon as large as an ordinary church, and a library somewhat larger. The house will be heated by open fire places, since Mr. Vanderbilt has a horror of steam, and these are placed in nearly every room. Adjoining the house is the stable, as beautifully built as any mansion on Fifth avenue. The interior is finished in white enameled brick, such as most persons are glad to have about their fireplaces.

VANDERBILT'S INCOMPLETE CASTLE.

The grounds surrounding the house cover whole miles, and are laid out with the greatest care and taste. Mr. Vanderbilt bought up homesteads for a long distance about to form a park. There is a little farm, however, of nine acres, worth perhaps $45, that Mr. Vanderbilt cannot buy. It belongs to an old negro called Joshua Moore, and stands half a mile from Mr. Vanderbilt's house, on a line with his front door. The millionaire has offered $10,000 for these acres, but Moore says he doesn't mind having Vanderbilt for a neighbor, and refuses to sell his property.

BALL-BEARING HINGES.

They Render the Door's Motions Positively Squeakless.

A ball-bearing door hinge? Why not? No squeaking of the door, no working up of the pin, no greasy butt coated with dust and lint, no wearing down of the butt and rubbing on the threshold, no crowding and pushing to open the door; compact, simple, and cheap. Surely it is a very appropriate use for ball bearings. The engravings show the whole thing in a nutshell. A is a steel plate washer, B the guide, C the cover, and D is the whole bearing washer placed between the two parts of the butt.

PORTABLE FIRE ESCAPE.

A Useful Invention Recently Patented by an Albany Man.

The cut shows an extension fire escape recently patented by an Albany man. Its operation can readily be understood, consisting mainly of a duplex system of lazy tongs, which can be extended by the operation of a crank working in the toothed bars of the arrangement of tongs. The top is mounted by a platform, which extends to the side, and which is controlled by the tooth and crank mechanism.

PORTABLE AND EXTENSION FIRE ESCAPE.

This is Distressing.

If hosiers know what they are about, the feet of American women are larger than they once were. Three dozen pairs of women's hose used to be assorted as to sizes in this fashion: Six pairs No. 8; six, No. 8½; twelve, No. 9; six, No. 9½; six, No. 10. The No. 8's have now disappeared from among woman's sizes, and the number of larger sizes in three dozen pairs of hose has increased.

Intelligent Reasoning.

A well-known lawyer on the circuit in the North of England, curious to know how a certain juryman arrived at his verdict, meeting him one day, ventured to ask. "Well," replied he, "I'm a plain man, and I like to be fair to every one. I don't go by what the witnesses say, and I don't go by what the judge says: but I looks at the man in the dock, and I says, 'He must have done something or he wouldn't be there,' so I brings 'em all in guilty."
